fought on the 20th. The engagement commenced late in the morning; soon afterwards General Thomas, holding the Federal left, called for reinforcements, and at noon was compelled to retreat. The second line of reinforcements, with M'Cook's corps, which was on the right, and intended as a reserve, was sent to reinforce Thomas. Van Cleve, holding the front centre, and Crittenden's corps, were also ordered to the left, their places being filled by Davis and Sherridan, who had hardly formed in line before the Confederate line burst upon the Federal centre; this lasted twenty minutes, when Van Cleve, on Thomas's right, gave way. Sherridan and Davis's corps broke in disorder, borne down by Bishop Polk's corps. Negley's and Van Cleve's divisions rallied, and held their places, on the right and left of Thomas's corps. Davis and Sherridan late in the day rallied 8000 men, and joined Thomas, who, being cut off from the right, took up an independent position, where he was reinforced by two divisions, and maintained a stubborn fight till after dark, retiring at night to Rossville, where he received orders to join Rosencrans, who was concentrating at Chattanooga. It is reported that the Confederates engaged Thomas again on the 21st, and it was doubtful if he could reach Chattanooga that night. There were indications on the night of the 21st that the Confederates contemplated a demonstration on another part of Rosencrans' line. General Bragg's army is variously estimated at from 70,000 to 96,000 strong. The Federal loss in killed, wounded, and prisoners, is estimated at 12,000 men. 1300 Confederate prisoners have been sent to Nashville. Intercepted Southern despatches state that General Bragg captured 20 guns and 500 prisoners. General Burnside has withdrawn his resignation, and is moving to the assistance of General Rosencrans. General Lee has fallen back from the line of the Rappahannock towards Gordonsville. General Pleasanton's cavalry on the 13th crossed the Rappahannock and passed through Culpepper, driving the Confederate cavalry before him and capturing three guns and 100 prisoners at Culpepper. He afterwards advanced to the Rapidan, where he found General Lee's forces in a position to prevent his crossing. The Confederates attempted to recross the Rapidan on the 16th, but finding themselves opposed by a strong force of Federal cavalry and infantry, supported by artillery, fell back to their intrenchments. On the 18th the attempt was renewed, and resulted in the recrossing of the Confederates at Racoon Ford, and the capture of 150 men of the New York cavalry. General Meade has since moved forward the whole of his forces, and the two armies are now confronting each other on the Rapidan. During the whole of the 16th the Confederates were drawn up in line of battle between Orange Court House and the Rapidan, expecting an attack by General Meade. There are rumours that General Lee has gone to Richmond for an important purpose, and that in his absence the command of the army of the Rapidan has devolved upon General Joseph Johnstone. Peace propositions in the Virginia Legislature have been voted down by 38 to 1. President Lincoln has suspended the Habeas Corpus Act throughout the United States in all cases where the military, naval, or civil government officers hold persons under their command or custody as prisoners of war, spies, aiders or abettors of the enemy, enrolled, drafted, enlisted, or mustered officers, soldiers, or seamen in the Federal service, or deserters. This suspension will be continued in force during the existence of the rebellion or until President Lincoln sees fit to revoke it. Secretary Stanton has ordered that any attempt upon the part of the civil power to arrest a military officer for disregard of a writ of habeas corpus may be resisted by such officer by any and all means at his command. Judge Betts has decided that the President's proclamation not only prevents the further issue of writs of habeas corpus, but puts an end to all pending cases for which writs had been issued. The Democratic press is incensed at the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act as specially uncalled for at present. The Daily News says all that remains of Republican Government is a memory and a name. Mr. Seward has issued a circular to the American Legations, stating that as prejudiced opinion still existed in France and England that the Federals cannot preserve the Union, prudent concern for foreign relations and the interests of peace and humanity at home demand that a new effort should be made to correct this prejudice. The insurgents are able to protract their resistance by means of foreign sympathy and aid. The expectation of more effective foreign assistance is now their chief resource. Mr. Seward reviews the military situation, and says that those who seek the renewal of commercial prosperity through peace in America will find the quickest and shortest way to gain that end is to withdraw their support and favour from the insurgents, and leave the adjustment of the controversy to the American people. The reported departure of iron-clads from England and the probability of the French recognition of the South, causes considerable excitement. Earl Russell's reply to the Emancipation Society is considered unsatisfactory, and the ill-feeling against England continues. The New York Tribune says there is unanimity in the Federal fleet in favour of war with England. The New York municipality has tendered a public reception to the officers of a Russian frigate, being the first ever visiting New York, and as an expression of the appreciation of Russian steadfastness and fidelity to international obligations as contradistinguished from the course which certain other European Powers have thought fit to pursue.

CANADA.—A vote of want of confidence in the Government has been defeated in the Canadian Parliament by a majority of 2. The Canadian Parliament has voted a sum of 400,000 dollars for the organisation of 10,000 fresh militia. The Militia Bill had previously passed its second reading, on a division, by a majority of 89 to 7. The Volunteer Bill had also passed its second reading by a majority of 92 to 13.

MEXICO.—Advices from Mexico announce the increasing dissolution of the Juarez party. The Indian population had unanimously pronounced in favour of the Archduke Maximilian. The only foreign Minister who had quitted Mexico was the representative of Peru, who had been recalled. There is a probability that San Luis Potosi will shortly pronounce in favour of the French intervention. A rural guard has been organised, which successfully resists the guerilla bands.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

ELECTION OF LORD MAYOR.—Tuesday being Michaelmas day, the liverymen of the City assembled at Guildhall, after attending Divine service, for the purpose of electing a Lord Mayor for the year ensuing. The senior aldermen who had not already passed the chair were Alderman William Lawrence and Alderman Hale, who were accordingly put in nomination. The Court of Aldermen selected Alderman William Lawrence, who was consequently declared to be duly elected Lord Mayor for the next year. The thanks of the Corporation were then voted to Alderman Rose, the retiring Chief Magistrate, for his conduct in defending not merely the constitutional rights of the City, but those of the kingdom, both in and out of Parliament, coupled with the expression of their regret that "his lordship had not received that full meed of honour which his conduct so justly merited."

THE NEW SHERIFFS.—On Monday Mr. Hilary Nicholas Nissen, citizen and stationer, and Mr. Thomas Cave, citizen and spectaclemaker, were formally sworn in Guildhall as Sheriffs of London and Middlesex for the ensuing year, in the presence of the Lord Mayor, the members of the Court of Aldermen, and the principal officers of the Corporation.

THE VACANT ALDERMANIC GOWN.—Mr. Andrew Lusk has formally announced himself a candidate for the aldermanic gown of Aldgate Ward, vacant by the death of Mr. John Humphery.

THE GOVERNORSHIP OF THE IRISH SOCIETY.—It is understood that the present Lord Mayor will succeed to the post of Governor of the Irish Society, vacant by the death of Alderman Humphery, it being generally conferred on the Lord Mayor in whose term of office it is vacated. The emoluments are reckoned at 1000*l.* a year.

CARDINAL WISEMAN has been unable to leave his bed since the 23d ult. As soon as he can be moved it will be necessary for him to leave town for a change of air.

THE NORTHERN EMBANKMENT OF THE THAMES.—At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works on Friday, 13 tenders for the embankment of the Thames on the north side were submitted by the following contractors:—Thomas Edward Pearson, 534,248*l.*; George Myers & Son, 533,000*l.*; Thomas Brassey & Co., 586,000*l.*; George Baker, 495,600*l.*; William M'Cormack & Son, 633,727*l.*; Anthony Ward, Ritson & Co., 536,827*l.*; Henry Lee & Son, 525,000*l.*; William Lavers, 649,660*l.*; John Ayres & Son, 617,396*l.*; William Moxon & Co., 510,076*l.*; George Furness, 520,000*l.*; Samuel Ridley, 495,000*l.*, and George Wythe, 680,000*l.* The Board then resolved itself into a committee, with closed doors, and on the readmission of the public, the Clerk read the recommendation of the committee, that the tender of Samuel Ridley, amounting to 495,000*l.*, be accepted. The recommendation was agreed to unanimously, and the tender of Mr. Ridley was accepted, subject to the usual inquiries.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT OFFICES.—The contract for the new India and Foreign Offices to be erected by Mr. Scott, the architect, has been given to Messrs. Smith & Taylor, whose tender, 195,573*l.*, being the lowest, was accepted. The other tenders, making 11 in all, were Messrs. Little, 209,615*l.*; Messrs. Higgs, 206,269*l.*; Messrs. Rigby, 206,109*l.*; Messrs. Piper & Wheeler, 200,385*l.*; Messrs. Myers & Son, 198,560*l.*; Messrs. Hollard & Hannen, 197,487*l.*; Messrs. Cubitt, 196,750*l.*; Messrs. Kirk, 196,500*l.*; Messrs. Lucas, 196,270*l.*; and Messrs. Baker, 195,800*l.* The foundations for the entire building in 14 ft. of concrete are all finished, and that portion of the structure intended to be appropriated for the use of the India Office has just been commenced.

THE GREAT EASTERN STEAM-SHIP.—On Monday the directors of the Great Ship Company issued to the proprietors a report relative to the general and financial position of the company. It stated that circumstances over which they had no control compelled them to call the proprietors together, in order to give them an approximate statement of the financial affairs of the company, in order that immediate steps might be taken either to relieve the undertaking from its embarrassments or to wind up its affairs. The report, after alluding in detail to the expensive repairs required by the vessel consequent on her last two or three voyages, stated that the rates in passengers and freights had been seriously affected by the competition that had existed throughout the season. There had been a considerable falling off in the number of passengers, and the earnings of the several voyages made this season, compared with what the receipts would have been if the rates had been as in August last year. The figures showed that for the three months of May, June, and August, 1863, as compared with 1862, the falling off in the receipts had been 19,915*l*., the receipts in 1862 being 57,223*l*., and in 1863 37,308*l*. On the last voyage out and home the vessel had sustained damage, and under all the circumstances the directors had considered it not desirable to send her out again this year, or to enter into further engagements. The financial position of the company had been crippled, and the cost of repairs rendered it imperative that some steps should be taken. The working account showed an excess of disbursements over receipts of 18,979*l*. The company's affairs were critical, and steps must be taken either to raise additional capital or dissolve the company. The ship could not be retained in the company's possession unless 30,000*l*. were raised to meet existing debts, and whatever the future employment of the vessel might be, further funds would be required for needful repairs and efficient maintenance of the vessel. A meeting of the proprietors was held yesterday to consider this report, and after a long discussion a committee was appointed to inquire into the affairs of the Company, and report to an adjourned meeting on the 12th inst.

ACCIDENT AT ST. PAUL'S PIER. — The large iron barge, or dummy, at St. Paul's Pier was sunk on Monday morning under rather extraordinary circumstances. The tide on Sunday night ebbed out unusually low. The iron barge fell with the tide, and one end of it got so fixed among the surrounding piles that it did not lift when the tide flowed. The other end of the barge rose with the tide, which soon made a clean sweep of its decks, clearing away money-taking boxes and waiting-room. The barge itself filled and went down nearly in its ordinary berth. The accident has for a time entirely stopped all traffic at St. Paul's Pier. The portion of the wreck which was carried away floated with the tide to Hungerford Pier.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH. — The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, September 26, were 1233. The average number in the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62, corrected for the increase of population, was 1240. The present return is therefore seven below the average. During the week the births of 948 boys and 853 girls, in all 1801 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1880.

Provincial.

BRIGHTON.—The diplomas and honorary certificates awarded by the University of Oxford to the successful candidates at the local Examination held in this town in June last were publicly distributed at the Pavilion on the 24th ult., by the Bishop of Oxford. In the course of the proceedings his lordship spoke as follows:—

"I believe this to be an excellent movement to all parties concerned; it is excellent to the Universities in many ways. In the first place, if those ancient seats of learning are to retain—as I trust they will retain—the highest places in the affections of Englishmen, it must be by their proving that they are of utility to England. Ancient names and ancient achievements, and ancient possessions now in this present day will not avail without present services, and those services good and hearty; and therefore when I see the Universities coming forth and in this way identifying themselves with the education of the great middle classes, of those people who are the distinctive feature of our land, who are the strength, morally, intellectually, and commercially, of this land—the great middle classes of the English people—I most unfeignedly rejoice on their behalf, first of all, because in this way they may make those old institutions sound. We in this diocess have had lately a great misfortune in the fall of our cathedral's noble spire, and this accident appears to have alarmed our neighbours, for when I was at Salisbury the other day I found men engaged in moving stone by stone the lowest stones of that wonderful tower and spire, and pouring in quantities of concrete, and then replacing the stones they had taken out, in order that that tower may still continue pointing heavenward in its beauty to coming generations. Well, what is being done there,—putting concrete under the old tower, I think is what the Universities are doing when they extend in this way their influence from the pupils within their walls to all the middle class and to other schools throughout the country, doing more than buttressing up the old walls—pouring in the moral concrete which will make the old walls stand for ages yet to come. I think these examinations are also useful things for the boys, for they must profit by them. Every one of us has in his constitution, more or less, a love of ease, a love of idleness, and of laziness. This works differently with different people, but it comes to the same point at last; it is a kind of attempt to draw the shoulder from the collar when the collar pinches, and it becomes up-hill work. Some boys draw the shoulder back just when it comes to the point that will make their characters better and brighter. They are fond of doing what they can do easily, but they are thrown back if any difficulty arises. Now, these examinations they cannot hurry over in a careless manner—they must be done well; they make them laborious; they make them active; they lead them to honest hard work, to meet the difficulty and to overcome the difficulty; they remove them from the short means of seeming to know, and lead them to find the longer means of knowing. That is the blessing which they bring with them. An examination does this—it brings out all the weak points. A boy who fails in such an examination has got probably a lesson that will last him for life. He will know it is of no use putting in bad stuff, and so the prospects of the coming examination, and the result of the examination, have a tendency to perpetuate among the boys habits of duty, habits of honest hard work, and by these means a boy, instead of being contented with doing a something, will endeavour to do that something well. It used to be a thought with me at school, as I have no doubt it has been with many boys, 'Oh, if I could but turn the tables on the masters for a time, to make them go through all this.' It is almost one of the uses of these examinations to do a little of this; I can whisper to a boy who has such thoughts (as I had) that these examinations are examinations of the masters. It was all very well when the master examined his own school, giving to Master Jones a certificate of his being a most excellent boy; but then he gave a similar certificate to Master Smith, who must have been a little better than Jones, and another to Master Robinson, who, in turn, must have been better than either Jones or Smith. This was all very well, it was very pleasing to the parents, who would say, 'See how my boy has distinguished himself; he has got this certificate.' Ah! but perhaps every boy in the school has got a certificate of a similar character, and so there is no distinction about it. But when, instead of this sort of thing, boys come to be examined, not by a friendly master, who gives these certificates out of kindness and as a means of keeping up the credit of his establishment—when they come to be examined with the boys of other academies, I should like to know who are then being examined? The master more than the boys. If I want to examine a Grape Vine, I do not go and poke about the barren roots, but look at the bunches of fruit it has produced, and if I find the fruit good I say the Vine is a good one, and, in like manner, if I find the fruit of a school in this way good, I say the master is good; and therefore it is that the masters, by means of these examinations, carry out the thoughts which you and I have had; they get their turn, the turn which your hearts have longed to give them. Nothing has a more direct tendency to do good to the masters of schools than such examinations as these. You boys know the trouble of learning, but you do not know the many times your master's heart aches. It aches when he sees a boy who could do almost anything, and who cannot, who will not, stir himself up to do anything at all. Often and often in the night season his heart is heavy, because he cannot get into his boys what he wishes to get into them, and so it is by degrees that vexation and disappointment will get into the master, and the hitherto elastic mind of the schoolmaster will form habits of despondency—of despondency but another name for idleness; and so the school sinks and becomes worthless. It is a great help for a master to know that his work is going to be examined by competent examiners. When the time of the examination comes on he is spurred on to new efforts, for he knows his work is going to be examined thoroughly, and he must put out renewed energy in endeavouring to make his boys the most efficient. Thus it is that these examinations are of benefit to the Universities, are of benefit to the boys, and are of benefit to the masters. They are truly most excellent institutions. Besides all this, they bring all to one common organisation. I am not speaking in favour of a system of centralisation; centralisation is often a great evil, but organisation is of great service. The organisation in these examinations has a tendency towards teaching all schools what they ought to teach, they present one common standard of instruction, which I conceive to be of great benefit to the schools, as well as to the masters, the boys, and the Universities. And so it is a great pleasure to me, as, through the dispensation of Providence, I am, by adoption, a Sussex man, to know that in these examinations Sussex has been once at the top of the tree and has been three times second in the order of merit. But yet you must let me have a Yorkshireman's feelings when you talk about Sheffield. I am a Yorkshireman, bred from generations of Yorkshiremen, and can therefore sympathise with those sharp, struggling, hard-working, masterly Yorkshiremen. And this is one of those blessed strifes in which there is no envying; each one seeks to rise, but he seeks to rise in company with his fellows; each one seeks to rise by a common standard, lifted higher and higher by the contest of intellectual capability, founded on a basis of real, of intellectual, and of religious belief. And so there is in the ambition engendered by these examinations no harm, if it is kept within legitimate bounds; they are struggles between schools, and between the boys in each school. To say there is harm in such competition would be to charge Providence with evil, for the whole world is a struggle for success, and while men thus struggle heartily, with kindness, seeking not to pull others down, but to pull themselves up, I believe the light of God's approval falls on such honest endeavours. I, for one, feel a sincere pleasure in being allowed to take a humble part in the proceedings of such a night as this. One of your hon. members has said he believes there is no greater evil to education than cramming. In this I fully agree with him. But such examinations as these are a sort of great anti-cramming plan. Many of you, my young friends, will at once think of the word that rhymes with cram; every boy who obtains success by such a means is nothing more than a sham. Cramming is putting into the mind what it cannot digest, making it preternaturally fat, poisoning it, or killing it in some other way. I never knew good come of it, but I have seen many minds fatally injured by it. That which you can take into your minds and make part of yourselves will be so much better for you, but that which you only take in to reproduce, whole and undigested, will neither do you nor any one else the least good. The real good of these examinations is the doing away with cramming; like taking a crammed fowl's crop, giving it a good squeeze, which detects the crammer and relieves the fowl. They may have a good squeeze at the time, but they will feel a good deal better afterwards, and it will be a great lesson to crammers, who will find all their cramming materials exposed and of no avail. I rejoice on this ground also that I should have been invited here to-night, that you have suffered me to hand these young fellows their certificates and prizes, and have thus permitted me to take a part in your proceedings, and to add my humble testimony to the value of this great movement."

BURNLEY.—Mr. Peter Ormerod, a gentleman, of Rosegrove, near this town, was recently fined for carrying on an illicit distillery. A complete plant used in distillation was found on his premises, for which he had rendered himself liable to an aggregate penalty of 1750*l*., but the magistrates only mulcted him in a sum of 300*l*.

EAST DEREHAM.—A shocking murder has been committed at Elsing, near this town, the victim being an infirm old woman, partially blind, lame, and deaf, while the perpetrator of the crime was her husband, an able-bodied man in the full vigour of life. The woman's name is Charlotte Naylor, her husband being James Naylor, an agricultural labourer, in full employment. There was a difference of about 30 years in their ages, the woman being 81 and her husband 51 years of age. The cottage in which they lived is situated in a row, and the adjacent dwellings on each side are occupied by two brothers named Isbell. During Sunday evening and Monday morning Naylor was heard by these brothers making a great noise, ejaculating "Oh, my heavenly Father," "My blessed Father," "My blessed Jesus," &c. He continued to conduct himself in a very excited manner, but on being remonstrated with by a farmer in the parish, he desisted. During the remainder of Monday afternoon, he continued quiet; but when the Isbells retired to rest they heard Mrs. Naylor asking her husband if he was going to bed, and shortly afterwards a light was seen in their bedroom, and all seemed quiet for the night. After the lapse of about an hour, however, the Isbells were awoke by strange noises proceeding from Naylor's bedroom, and immediately afterwards they heard a loud shriek, succeeded by a heavy rumbling noise, as if something were rolled or dragged downstairs, after which there was another shriek and then a dead silence. In a short time they heard the tread of heavy footsteps, and Naylor talking to himself and uttering wild ejaculations, which he repeated during the entire night. The suspicions of the neighbours being excited, some of them forced an entrance into the house in the morning, when a horrid spectacle presented itself. At the foot of the stairs lay the poor old woman in her night-dress, the body partially doubled up, and the head and arms bearing marks of the most cruel violence; while one leg was broken just above the ankle, and there was a pool of blood where the body lay. Upon further examination it was discovered that across the bedroom and down the stairs there was a blood track, clearly exhibiting the course in which the husband had dragged his victim. On a post-mortem examination, two ribs were found broken on one side and six on the other, while severe contused wounds were apparent on the head and temple. With regard to the motive for the crime, it appears that the old woman had secreted a sum of 2*l*. 17*s*. 6*d*., with which she intended to pay her rent, and that she had a dispute and struggle with her husband about it. When the prisoner was apprehended, he ascribed the dreadful deed to a desire "to obey his heavenly Father," and it is considered by some that he is suffering from religious monomania. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against him, and he has been committed for trial at the assizes.

GUILDFORD.—A riotous disturbance, resulting in serious injury to upwards of 30 persons, took place on Monday night at St. Catherine's, near this town, on the Portsmouth road. It appears that at the annual fair on the 4th of October, by virtue of the old charter, the landlords of the village "publics" are allowed to draw beer even during prohibited hours. The Sunday before the fair is known as "Tap-up Sunday," and a similar privilege is accorded. The village usually turns out in great numbers, and some licence is taken by them in throwing chesnuts at passers-by, which generally creates a good deal of merriment among the rustics, and has been good-naturedly borne by those who have been thus dealt with. This year the larking has been carried on in a most inordinate manner. On Sunday last, being "Tap-up Sunday," upwards of 400 young fellows, many of them low characters from the town, assembled on either side of the road in formidable phalanx; and when any peaceably inclined passenger approached they allowed him to get into their midst, when they closed in and inflicted both insult and injury. Mr. Piggott, dyer, and his wife, were driving past the hill and were seriously hurt, Mrs. Piggott having her bonnet torn from her head. Mr. Bailey, of the County Magistrates' Office, and his daughter were compelled to go through a very heavy shower of missiles; and the young lady is still suffering from the effects of her fright. Mr. Ellis, of Farncombe, near Godalming, and two other gentlemen in company with him, were roughly handled; one having received some bad wounds on his leg from kicks, and the others having their hats completely smashed and their coats torn to shreds. Miss Chartres, of Brighton, Miss Smythe, and several other ladies, were rudely assaulted, one of them having her eye cut nearly out by a stone, and the others either losing their shawls or other articles of wearing apparel. Towards evening several members of the county constabulary made their appearance on the scene; but this was only the signal for a still more riotous demonstration, and it was considered advisable, even for the public safety, to leave the mob to their own course, and to place the police at convenient distances for the purpose of cautioning passengers against going on the turnpike road, and inducing them to take the path by the river bank, though more circuitous. Several of them, however, were pursued, and more than one was forcibly pushed into the water. At nightfall nothing could restrain the fury of the crowd. Mr. Shrubb, a resident on the Portsmouth Road, on appealing to the better sense of the mob, was assailed with a shower of stones. The rioters afterwards proceeded to his residence, pulled up the whole of the palings of his property, and conveyed it to the top of St. Catherine's, whence they went to the cutting between the two tunnels on the South-Western line of railway, where they carried off all the wooden railings they could get at, and afterwards lighted a huge bonfire which was seen at a great distance on the surrounding hills of the county. Much other injury was done to both person and property, which has not as yet been officially reported. The county constabulary have since taken some of the ringleaders of the disturbance into custody.

HULL.—A mail bag containing cheques to a large amount was stolen last week from the post office at South Cave. The thief was sharp enough to send one of the cheques to the Hull branch for payment before the news of the loss reached this town. But the clerk suspecting something wrong, detained the boy who presented it, and ascertained that he had been sent to get it cashed by a lady who was waiting outside. With the assistance of a detective they secured the lady, who stated that her name was Mrs. Cooke, that she lived with her aunt in this town, and that some one in the train from Hessel had given her the cheques. She was taken before the magistrate and remanded. The missing cheques have since been received at the Beverley branch of the Yorkshire Banking Company, their destination when posted in the letter at South Cave.—On Friday Mary Ann Richardson, a little girl, 14 years old, was committed for trial on the charge of attempting to poison five girls at Messrs. Howard & Co.'s starch manufactory, in Scott Street. It appeared that the prisoner and the girls were employed at the manufactory as packers, and that it was customary for each to contribute her mite to purchase coffee for their dinners. The prisoner had been charged by some of the other girls with stealing a penny, and was so enraged at the accusation that she threatened to serve them out. She afterwards showed a companion some white poison, and after the girls had drank their coffee five of them became so ill that for some time two of them were not expected to recover.

MANCHESTER.—At the weekly meeting of the Central Executive Committee on Monday, the Hon. Secretary reported that the balance in the bank was 287,915*l*. 17*s*. 1*d*., and that 383*l*. 17*s*. 10*d*. had been received during the week. Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported that on the 19th inst. there was a decrease of 2115 in the number of persons receiving parochial relief in 27 Unions in the cotton districts as compared with the previous week. Grants were made to various places to the extent of 6,390*l*.

NEWTON ABBOT.—On Monday, two men named James Stevens, a mulatto, and John Burke, a prize-fighter, and a native of Bristol, were charged before the magistrates in this town with the murder of John Mears, a woolcomber of Ashburton, about 31 years of age. The deceased was found on the 20th of August in a large pond near the turnpike-road at Teignbridge, and from the marks found on his face and head, it was quite clear he had come to his death by foul means. At the inquest the jury returned a verdict that deceased had been murdered, but as no one was then suspected of the murder, the matter was represented to the Secretary of State, who has since offered a reward of 50*l*. for the conviction of the guilty party. On the information of a lad named Pike, a sweep, of Newton, the two prisoners were apprehended at Exeter on charge of committing the murder. The lad declared that he saw the murder committed, that the prisoner Stevens struck him lifeless by a blow behind the ear, and that the other prisoner afterwards struck him with great violence with a ball attached to a string, and that they then threw the body over the bridge. He further stated that one of the men gave him a penny not to tell. A brass ball with a string attached to it has since been found near the spot, and both prisoners have been committed for trial at the assizes.

REIGATE.—The Parliamentary borough of Reigate was by Royal charter bearing date the 11th ult. constituted a municipal corporation under the provisions and with the powers of the Municipal Corporations Act. The first elections are to take place in December next.

SOUTHAMPTON.—On Wednesday night, the 16th ult., Cardinal Wiseman delivered a lecture on "Self-culture," as the "inaugural" of the 34th session of the Polytechnic Institution of this town. The hall was crowded, and the lecture was received with cordiality and attention.

WEST BROMWICH.—On Tuesday the 22d ult., a shocking tragedy was perpetrated in this town. A man named Holden, employed at some ironworks, murdered his two children. It appears that he had requested his wife to go to his father's house to procure some potatos. Noticing something strange in his demeanour, she said she would take the children with her, to which he objected. Soon after she quitted the premises screams were heard by the neighbours, and some of them, on entering the house, found the children with their heads nearly severed from their bodies, the deed having been perpetrated with a carving-knife. One child was 18 months, the other four years old. The murderer has been of temperate habits, and lived on affectionate terms with his wife and children. It is supposed that he was seized with a sudden paroxysm of madness, having been for the last month dull and desponding, and one or two members of his family having been in an asylum. At the inquest on Wednesday the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against him, and he was committed for trial at the Assizes.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—On Tuesday morning Mr. Coxwell and Mr. Glaisher made a balloon ascent from this town on behalf of the balloon committee of the British Association. The ascent was to have been made on the previous afternoon, but the wind was so stormy that Mr. Coxwell declared that it would have been dangerous to make the attempt. The balloon moved off very slowly in a north-easterly direction, and after remaining in sight about half an hour was seen rising fast in a southerly direction. A good deal of ballast was taken up, so that the balloon might be kept for some time from ascending too rapidly, in order that the cordage, which during the night had become saturated with moisture, should be dried in the sun before the machine attained an altitude at which, by freezing, the lines and cordage would become like so much rod iron. After attaining a height of three miles, with the thermometer at zero, the balloon descended at half-past 10, six miles from Sleaford. The descent was attended with some danger, and the balloon was much torn.

VISIT OF THE CHANNEL FLEET TO DUBLIN.—During the stay of the fleet in Dublin Bay, from Saturday to Thursday last, the visitors from Dublin and its neighbourhood were numerous and enthusiastic. The officers were entertained at dinner on Monday night in the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor presiding; the entertainment being provided by subscriptions from the citizens. A ball was given on Tuesday evening in the Rotunda, which was numerously and gaily attended. As the ships were lying in an open bay, and liable to be compelled to go to sea at a moment's notice, the Admiral was obliged to decline the invitation of the Commodore and members of the Irish Yacht Club. On Wednesday the Lord Lieutenant and a large party were invited to a déjeûner and ball on board the Defence, but a gale from the south-east, accompanied by heavy rain, set in about midday, and made it impossible for any steamer to go alongside the ships, at the same time detaining as prisoners about 700 ladies and gentlemen who had gone off to the vessels before the full fury of the gale was felt. Towards midnight, however, the storm abated, and the visitors were landed. On Thursday the fleet left for Plymouth.

ROMAN CATHOLIC SYNOD.—The Roman Catholic bishops held a synod in Dublin in August last to consider the political questions which interest their Church. The resolutions adopted are now published in full. They condemn the national system and the model schools, and enjoin the Roman Catholic commissioners to withdraw from the board unless the requirements of the prelates are complied with. Their demands include an entirely separate training establishment, under the control of the hierarchy, supported at the public expense, or the training of teachers in existing Catholic institutions, the nation contributing funds proportionate to the work done. They conclude by condemning the Brotherhood of St. Patrick, and all similar societies having for their object the support and defence by arms of what is called in the oath of membership the Irish Republic, though they regret that neither the Government nor the Legislature has taken any step to ameliorate the condition of the people of Ireland, and respectfully call for such legal and administrative measures as will secure to tenant farmers the rightful ownership of the products of their own industry and capital, and protect them from capricious evictions.

ROCKINGHAM HOUSE.—The rebuilding of Rockingham House, the seat of Viscount Lorton, which was destroyed by fire some months ago, has been commenced. The work, which is on a scale of great magnificence, has been intrusted to a London contractor named Mansfield, and most of the tradesmen have been brought from London. The work is to be urged on rapidly, and so many labourers are required that the farmers in the vicinity are beginning to apprehend an advance in wages.

EARL RUSSELL AT BLAIRGOWRIE.—On Saturday Earl Russell was entertained at dinner in the new Town Hall of Blairgowrie by the tenantry on the Meikleour estate, in honour of his Lordship's visit to the district. The inhabitants assembled in procession, and met the Earl and Countess and family, about a mile and a half from the town. He was escorted by a detachment of Volunteers and a large crowd of people to the cross of the town, where an address was presented to his lordship by the chief magistrate. At the dinner, in acknowledging the toast of his health, Earl Russell spoke as follows on the foreign policy of the Government:—

"The state of foreign affairs has been a very anxious one, and I have partaken in a more than ordinary degree of that anxiety during the period that I have held the seals of Secretary for Foreign Affairs. When Lord Palmerston last came to office there was a war in Italy still depending, though it very soon closed. Then there came the question whether the Italians should be allowed, without interference, to throw off their Government, most of them corrupt and effete Governments, and attempt to create a freedom and a unity for themselves: whether France, or Austria, or any other Power should interfere to direct and turn aside the destiny to which Italy would aspire. In these circumstances the Government of Lord Palmerston did not hesitate to say that the people of Italy should choose for themselves their future destiny; that they should choose their form of Government; and that, with the capacity they had, and with the courage they had shown, it was our belief that they were fit to take their place among the great nations of the world. The whole country responded to that declaration; and, supported by the public opinion, the voice of England was powerful in preventing intervention with the interests of the Italian people. There then occurred another cause of anxiety—the civil war in Poland. I am prepared to defend, if need be, the course which her Majesty's Government, in conjunction with France and Austria, have taken on that question. I have stated, in my place in Parliament, that neither the obligations, the honour, nor the interest of England require that we should go to war for Poland. I still hold that opinion, and think it would be unbecoming to rail at Russia when we are not prepared forcibly to resist her assertions, though it has astonished me to find that at the end of several months of correspondence Russia has taken the line that she has done. The partition of Poland was an event which was the scandal of Europe in the last century, and which is the reproach of the three Powers who were parties to it. But at the Treaty of Vienna it was thought fit—and circumstances of expediency perhaps justified what was done—to admit, as it were, into the law of nations the state of Poland as divided between those three Powers, and to give a kind of retrospective sanction, as it were, to the partition of Poland. The Powers of Europe became, to use a legal phrase, accessories after the fact. Austria and Prussia complied with the conditions of the treaty. Russia has not complied with them. It seems to me that it was an act of great imprudence on the part of Russia, when she had that great advantage—when she had the act of spoliation and partition condoned, as it were, by Europe—to reject the terms on which that sanction was given, to rest as she now rests on the title of the original partition, on the title of conquest, rejecting all those conditions by which at the Treaty of Vienna that title was as it were accepted by Europe. What may be the consequences of that act, what conduct the Powers of Europe may follow, is not a question on which I can properly enter. I merely wish you to remark the fact that the conditions of the Treaty of Vienna, by which Russia obtained the kingdom of Poland, have not been complied with; and that, without the conditions of the tenure, the title itself can hardly be upheld. There is another question concerning our foreign relations on which a great deal of misapprehension has prevailed—I mean the question of Mexico. We joined France and Spain in the intervention so long as it was confined to a redress of grievances, but when it became a forcible interference with the form of government, we as well as Spain at once parted company with our ally, and have since taken no part in the affair. If the people of Mexico approve the intervention which has taken place, if they like to set up a Monarchy in Mexico, and if they all willingly obey it; if they are enabled to establish peace and order in Mexico—on these conditions, I say, with all my heart, let them have it, and I wish them success. But if they do not choose it, if they wish for the form of Government which for many years they have adopted, why, then, I again say we have no business to contradict them. I come now to another question, relating to what were a few years ago the United States of America. Our course in regard to that country has been attacked and blamed in the bitterest terms—blamed sometimes by the Federals, and sometimes by the Confederates. The first offence was felt by the Federals. They said we had no right to grant—so far as we were concerned—the rights of belligerents to the Confederates. Well, that question of the rights of belligerents is a question of fact. I put it to you whether, with 5,000,000 people, 5,000,000 I mean of free men declaring themselves in their several States collectively an independent State, we could pass over that as a petty rebellion. Our admirals asked whether the ships they met bearing the Confederate flag should be treated as pirates or no. If we had treated them as pirates we should have been taking part in that contest. It was impossible to look on the uprising of a community of 5,000,000 people as a mere petty insurrection, or as not having the rights which at all times are given to those who by their numbers and importance, or by the extent of the territory they possess, are entitled to these rights. Well, it was said we ought not to have done that because they were a community of slaveholders. I trust that our abhorrence of slavery is not in the least abated or diminished. For my own part, I consider it one of the most horrible crimes that yet disgraces humanity. But then, when we are treating of the relations which we bear to a community of men, I doubt whether it would be expedient or useful for humanity that we should introduce that new element of declaring that we will have no relations with a people who permit slavery to exist among them. We have never adopted it yet, we have not adopted it in the case of Spain or Brazil, and I do not believe that the cause of humanity would be served by our adoption of it. Well, it was said that these Confederate States were rebels—rebels against the Union. Perhaps I am not so nice as I ought to be on the subject. But I recollect that we rebelled against Charles I., we rebelled against James II., and the people of New England, not content with these two rebellions, rebelled against George III. I am not saying now whether all these rebellions were justifiable or whether they were wrong—I am not saying whether the present rebellion in the Southern States is a justifiable insurrection, or is a great fault or a great crime. But I say that the mere fact of rebellion is not in my eyes a crime of so deep a dye that we must renounce all fellowship and communion and all relationship with those who have been guilty of rebellion. But, certainly, if I look to the declarations of those New England orators—and I have been reading lately, if not the whole, yet a very great part, of the very long speech by Mr. Sumner on the subject, delivered at New York,—I own I cannot but wonder to see these men, the offspring, as it were, of three rebellions, as we are the offspring of two rebellions, really speaking, like the Czar of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, or Louis XIV. himself of the dreadful crime and guilt of rebellion. Well there came another complaint, and the complaint came this time from those so-called Confederate States, who said that we had, contrary to the Declaration of Paris, contrary to the general international law, permitted a blockade of 3000 miles of the southern coast of America. It is quite true we did so. It is quite true—and there perhaps there seemed at least a plausible reason for complaint—that though this blockade was kept up by a sufficient number of ships, yet these ships—many of them adopted into the United States navy and sent to sea in a hurry, and ill-fitted for the purpose—did not keep up that blockade so effectively and so thoroughly as it must have been held an effective blockade required. But still, looking to the law of nations, it was a blockade; it was a blockade which we as a great belligerent Power in former times should have acknowledged. We ourselves had had a blockade of upwards of 2000 miles, and it did seem to me that we were bound in justice to the Federal States of America to acknowledge the blockade. But there was another reason, I confess, that weighed with me,—our people were suffering, and suffering very greatly, for the want of the material which was the great support of their industry. It was a question of self interest whether we should not break that blockade, but, in my opinion, the name of England would have been for ever infamous if for the sake of interest of any kind we had violated the general laws of nations, and made war with those slaveholding States of America against the Federal States. And I am not speaking the sentiments which are peculiar to myself, or to those who have no immediate interest in the question, but these are, I am convinced, the sentiments of that noble-hearted people of Lancashire, who have lived and flourished by that industry, but who would not, I am sure, allow a single spot on the escutcheon of their nation in order to maintain that industry. Well, there came new complaints—a complaint on the part of the Federals that we allowed a ship to leave the port of Liverpool, which afterwards committed depredations on their commerce. It would lead me far if I were to go over all the particulars of the question, but you must know that in order to prove an offence you require such evidence as can be sifted in a court of justice, and it was not till the very day the Alabama left Liverpool that in the opinion of lawyers we had evidence sufficient to keep the vessel and crew; then I doubt whether if we had brought the evidence before a court of law it would have been found that we had sufficient evidence to condemn her, because, by an evasion of the law, the ship was fitted up without the arms necessary for her equipment, and these arms were conveyed to her in the waters of a foreign country, very far from the jurisdiction of England. These questions must be weighed, and I think they will be weighed as they frequently have been weighed by the Government of the United States of America, in the balance of equity. We know that the Foreign Enlistment Act and the whole law respecting the subject is very difficult of application. The principle is clear enough. If you are asked to sell muskets, you may sell muskets to one party or to the other, and so with regard to gunpowder, shells, or cannon; and you may sell a ship in the same manner. But if you, on the one hand, train and drill a regiment with arms in their hands, or allow a regiment to go out with arms in their hands to take part with one of two belligerents, you violate your neutrality and commit an offence against the other belligerents. So in the same way in regard to ships, if you allow a ship to be armed and go at once to make an attack on a foreign belligerent, you are yourself, according to your own law, taking part in the war, and it is an offence which is punished by the law. But these questions lead, as you will see, to most difficult problems—as to whether, for instance, a thousands persons here may go out as labourers to the Federal States, and in the next place a thousand muskets may go out in another ship, and when they arrive in America these thousand labourers, having had an understanding before, may make a formal engagement and be armed with these thousand muskets; though if that had been done in the territory of the Queen, and on the soil of this country, it would have been an offence. There are other questions with regard to ships that have lately been prepared in this country, because these ships are not like ships which receive the usual equipment known in wars in times past, but they are themselves, without any further armament, formed for acts of offence and war. They are steam rams, which might be used for the purposes of war without ever touching the shores of the Confederate ports. Well, to permit ships of this kind knowingly to depart from this country, not to enter into any Confederate port, not to enter into the port of a belligerent, would, as you see, expose our good faith to great suspicion; and I feel certain that if, during our war with France, the Americans had sent line-of-battle ships to break our blockade at Brest, whatever reasons they might have urged in support of that, we should have considered it a violation of neutrality. Such is the spirit in which I am prepared to act. Everything that the law of nations requires, everything that our law, that the Foreign Enlistment Act requires, I am prepared to do, and even, if it should be proved to be necessary for the preservation of our neutrality, that the sanction of Parliament should be asked to further measures. In short, to sum up, her Majesty's Government are prepared to do everything that the duty of neutrality requires—everything that is just to a friendly nation, taking as a principle that we should do to others as we should wish to be done to ourselves. But this we will not do—we will not adopt any measure that we think to be wrong. We will not yield a jot of British law or British right in consequence of the menaces of any foreign Power. And now, reverting again to the complaints that have been made, it is singular to observe how jaundiced the minds of some of those who speak in the New England States are on this subject of our conduct. There were some persons, members of the House of Lords, who thought fit to complain on an apparent case of grievance—and not one case, but many cases—of ships of ours that had been seized; ships in some cases passing from neutral ports, in other cases on the sea, but apparently on a legitimate voyage; and it was urged that we ought not to submit to have our vessels thus seized and our commerce thus interrupted. I had to deal with that case, and my answer was that, according to the law of nations, if a ship had an ostensible voyage to a destination which was not her real destination—if she was bound, in fact, to an enemy's port with munitions of war, the belligerent had a right to stop that vessel on the high seas. I said the law had been laid down by Lord Stowell and other great English authorities, and that now we were neutrals I did not think it fit we should depart from a law we had laid down as belligerents. I said that in America, although there were some of the local Courts which had not the authority of such men as Lord Stowell and Sir William Grant, yet there was a Court of Appeal, there was a Supreme Court in the United States which contained, and had for many years contained, men as learned and of as high reputation in the law, and of as unsullied reputation for integrity as any that have sat in our English courts of justice, and that we ought to wait patiently for the decision of those tribunals. Now, what is my surprise to find, and what would be your surprise to find, that Mr. Sumner is so prejudiced that he brings these declarations of mine against me, saying that I have diminished the reputation of the American Courts, and that I showed myself biassed against the Federal States by the declaration I then made in Parliament? I will not detain you further on these subjects; but one remark I must make on the general tendency of these speeches and writings in America. The Government of America discusses these matters very fairly with the English Government. Sometimes we think them quite in the wrong; sometimes they say we are quite in the wrong; but we discuss them fairly, and with regard to the Secretary of State I see no complaint to make. I think he weighs the disadvantages and difficulties of our situation in a very fair and equal balance. But there are others, and Mr. Sumner is one of them, his speech being an epitome almost of all that has been contained in the American press, by whom our conduct is very differently judged. With regard to all these matters there are difficult questions; we may have reason to complain in some instances, and the Federal Republic of America may have reason to complain also. But let us recollect that we are, as I have said, descended from the same ancestors, that in the courts of justice in America the common law of England is constantly studied, and the decisions of our great judges constantly referred to as decisions to be there respected; that our Shakespeare and our Milton are to them classical books as they are to us: that we have the same inheritance of freedom; that many of our institutions, as you may see by reading that excellent book of M. de Tocqueville on America, are identical; that the same spirit of liberty animates us both; that we after our revolutions chose a constitutional monarchy as the best form of Government, and they after their revolutions chose a republic; but that thus united, having the same spirit of law, having the same spirit of literature, having the same spirit of freedom, we ought, when this unhappy contest is over, to embrace one another as friends, and that we in the Old World and they in the New ought to be the lights to promote the civilisation of mankind. Now, with these feelings I own I almost lose my patience when I see men, in what is called an oration, heaping up accusation after accusation, and misrepresentation after misrepresentation, all tending to the bloody end of war between these two nations. I cannot but say, are they not satisfied with the blood that has been shed in the last two years, with that field of Gettysburg where 10,000 corpses of men, most of them in the prime of manhood, were left lying stretched on the ground? Are they not satisfied with that bloodshed, but would they seek to extend to the nations of Europe a new contest in which fresh sacrifices are to be made of human life, of human interest, and of human happiness? I trust that that will not be the case. I know, at least, that my efforts, such as they are—weak they may be, ineffectual I hope they will not be—will be directed to keep peace between these two nations, and to do everything which I think is just and right towards these people; and, ready to meet attack if we are unjustly attacked, ready to bear our part in the contest, if contest there must be, but yet believing that we ought to make every effort that all these various conflicts may end in peace, in union, and in friendship, I shall at all events have the consciousness that I have done my best to preserve peace between these mighty nations. It is a great subject; it affects the people of this part of the world and of America; it affects the future stage of civilization; it affects the well-being of the black race, whom it was the crime of our ancestors to introduce to America, and who, if these matters end well, will be, as I believe they are fitted to be, peaceable and intelligent members of a free country, on behalf of whose welfare we have been ready to make great efforts, and to sacrifice much. But we will not sacrifice any of those views of ours to mere pretence. We have as strong feelings for the good of mankind as any people can have; we must maintain our own position; and my belief is that the people of what were the United States, whether they are called Federals or Confederates, will finally do us justice, and that they will observe—as, indeed, they cannot help observing—that in this free country, where there is so much discussion and so much difference of opinion, there are parties very considerable in number who sympathise with the Confederates, and other large masses—I believe superior in numbers—who sympathise with the Federals; but whether sympathising with the one or the other we have all embraced in our hearts that sentiment of justice—justice we will do to others, justice we expect for ourselves, and I hope I am interpreting the feelings of your minds when I say that justice ought to prevail."

Railways.

COLLISION ON THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN.—On Monday afternoon a collision occurred near the Garston station between a passenger train from Runcorn Gap to Manchester, and a luggage train which had been shunting some waggons. Both engines were destroyed, and about a dozen passengers were injured, but none killed. One lady had several teeth knocked out, and a boy was much bruised and cut about the head and face. Several others were bleeding from wounds and bruises, and many were carried from the train in a fainting condition.

COLLISION ON THE GREENWICH.—On Tuesday evening, about 8 o'clock, a collision took place on this line, but fortunately was not attended with fatal results. It appears that one of the engines of the North Kent ran into the Greenwich train. Several passengers were much shaken. A lady, residing at Deptford, was much injured, and a gentleman had his watch smashed.

Miscellaneous.

THE STAMP MANIA.—The cheapest postage stamp (says the Nation) is the French at one centime, and the dearest is that for the horse post of California, which costs four dollars (21f.). The prettiest and best engraved of all the stamps are those of France, Greece, and particularly that of New Caledonia, which merits the first place. The ugliest are those of Belgium and of England, at one penny. The largest are those of Siberia, and the smallest those of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, which bears the head of an ox. The collection of stamps representing the head of Queen Victoria is composed of 40 different models. The stamps most sought after by amateurs, either on account of their constantly increasing value, or because they have been changed, and are no longer in use, are those of the Isle of Bourbon and New Caledonia, as well as those of Spain, Portugal, English Guiana, and Van Diemen's Land. Those of the Sandwich Islands, Nicaragua, the Philippines, and the old Duchies of Italy are also very scarce.

Obituary.

ADMIRAL SIR HENRY HOPE, K.C.B., died on the 23d ult. at his seat in Hampshire. He was the eldest son of the late Commissioner Charles Hope, by his marriage with the eldest daughter of the first Earl of Darlington. He was born in 1787, and entered the navy in 1798 as midshipman. He served in the Mediterranean in the Kent, 74, which conveyed Sir Ralph Abercrombie to Egypt, and also at the blockade of Alexandria. He afterwards removed to the Swiftsure, and was on board that ship in a desperate engagement which reduced her to a wreck, and rendered her a prize to the French squadron. In 1815 he brought to close action, and maintained for two hours and a half a conflict with the American ship President, 56, which at length hauled down her colours, after a loss to herself of 35 killed and 70 wounded. On arriving with his prize at Spithead, he was presented by the Admiralty with a gold medal in acknowledgment of his brave conduct, and was nominated a Companion of the Bath. He was put out of commission in 1815, and remained on half pay. He was subsequently appointed naval aide-de-camp to William IV. and to her present Majesty, and in 1855 he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Bath. He attained the rank of vice admiral in 1853, and admiral in 1858.

ALDERMAN HUMPHERY, formerly M.P. for Southwark, died on Monday at his residence at Clapham Common, after a short illness. He was elected Alderman for the ward of Aldgate in 1835, having three years before served the office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex, and in 1842 he was elected to the dignity of Lord Mayor. He was also Governor of the Irish Society, an office of honour in the corporation which he had held for more than 20 years. In that capacity he, with the rest of the society, recently paid a visit to the estates of the corporation in the neighbourhood of Londonderry, which have all along been managed in a manner so creditable that the late Sir Robert Peel was accustomed, in the House of Commons and elsewhere, to point to it as worthy of imitation. Alderman Humphery represented in Parliament the borough of Southwark, where he had large property, for a period of 20 years, having been first elected at the general election in December, 1832, and retained his seat continuously until that of 1852. For the greater part of his life he was a wharfinger in Tooley Street and its immediate neighbourhood, and of late years had been the owner of property of great value, with a river frontage, east and west of the south end of London Bridge. Alderman Humphery was twice married, and leaves a numerous family of sons and one daughter.

THE REV. FREDERICK WILLIAM FABER, D.D., Superior of the London Oratory, died on Saturday morning, after a long and painful illness. He was born in 1813, and was the nephew of the celebrated George Stanley Faber, author of works on prophecy. He was educated at Harrow and at University College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1836, being second-class in Classics. He became tutor to his college, and in 1843 accepted the living of Elton, Hunts, which he resigned in 1846 on joining the communion of the Church of Rome. Shortly afterwards he was appointed Superior of the London houses belonging to the "Oratorians," or "Priests of the Congregation of St. Philip Neri," which office he held up to the time of his death.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Oct. 3.

Vegetables and most kinds of Fruit in season, with the exception of Peaches, which are scarcer, continue plentiful. Late Plums may be had in great abundance. Of Grapes and Pine Apples the supply is also sufficient for the demand. Of Melons there is a good stock of both English and foreign varieties. There is also a good supply of Williams's Bon Chrétien, Louise Bonne of Jersey, and Marie Louise Pears. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin Apples have also arrived from Jersey. Kent Cobs and Filberts are now coming in in good condition, and for the Cobs a fair demand is realised at from 60s. to 65s. per 100 lbs. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Asters, Marigolds, Calceolarias, Mignonette, and Roses.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Sept. 28.

We have a very large supply of Beasts and unfavourable weather, consequently trade is dull. Choice descriptions are not very plentiful, and prices for them are about the same as on Thursday, but there are many inferior qualities left unsold. The number of Sheep is rather smaller, so also is the demand, and it is difficult to realise late quotations. Trade is dull for Calves at Thursday's rates. From Germany and Holland there are 3080 Beasts, 9160 Sheep, 131 Calves, and 50 Pigs; from Ireland, 790 Beasts; and 2780 from the Northern and Midland counties.

THURSDAY, Oct. 1.

The supply of Beasts is again larger, but a large proportion of very inferior quality; the choicest descriptions, therefore, meet with purchasers at nearly Monday's quotations. A considerable number remain unsold. The number of Sheep is small; it, however, exceeds the demand, and prices are lower. Trade is dull for Calves at rather lower rates. From Germany and Holland there are 690 Beasts, 2760 Sheep, 363 Calves, and 65 Pigs. Milch Cows, 95.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Sept. 28.

There was a poor supply of Wheat to this morning's market, nevertheless the trade was heavy at the prices of this day se'nnight. For foreign the demand was quite in retail, and to effect sales less money must have been taken. Finest malting Barley was 1s. per qr., and secondary descriptions were 2s. per qr. cheaper. Beans and Peas brought last week's quotations. The Oat trade was quiet, and prices were unaltered. Flour was very dull.

FRIDAY, Oct. 2.

During the past week the weather throughout the kingdom has been changeable with frequent showers and high winds, consequently in the late districts of Scotland but slow progress has been made in finishing harvest work. Holders of Wheat have shown a little more firmness than of late, but the trade throughout the country remains unsettled and inactive, any change in prices being in buyer's favour both for home grown and foreign; from Liverpool we have to report 6d. to 1s. per qr. decline, owing to good arrivals. Best samples of Malting Barley were not easier to buy, secondary sorts and grinding meet but little alteration, and are the turn cheaper. Beans and Peas are a slow sale, and tending downwards in value. The supplies of Oats, both home grown and foreign, continue good, and prices have given way about 6d. per qr., new Black 42 lbs. Irish bring only 20s. per qr. Flour in good condition is scarce, and maintains late rates, sour and low grades are 6d. per barrel and 1s. per sack cheaper. Since Friday last 122 vessels have been reported off the coast. The arrivals being very large, and holders refusing to take lower prices, a considerable number of cargoes of Wheat and Maize had to be withdrawn from sale, but a fair business has been done at about late rates, and during the last two days the demand for Wheat has been improving. In Paris (Oct. 1), the Flour prices have declined about 2s. per 280 lbs. The six marks for immediate delivery are quoted equal to 31s., for Oct. equal to 31s. 9d. per 280 lbs. The present stock is estimated at 9280 cwt. In Wheat very few transactions have taken place at 9d. to 1s. per qr. lower prices. The arrivals of all grain and Flour since Monday have been small. There was a thin attendance at market this morning, and scarcely any business was transacted in any article, quotations remaining nominally the same as on Monday.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 29.—With a good attendance of country buyers at to-day's market the demand for Wheat is still confined to the most immediate requirements of the trade, and prices must be written a shade worse than on Friday last. Flour is nominally unaltered in value. Indian Corn has attracted a better inquiry, and the quantity offering being small we have to raise our quotations 3d. per qr. Oats and Oatmeal have declined 1d. per bushel, and 1s. to 1s 6d. per load respectively. Beans and Peas steady at previous rates. Barley the turn lower. The market closes dull.

FRIDAY, Oct. 2.—Fair business in Wheat; no change in value. Moderate business in Flour, and Westerns are 6d. lower. Indian Corn steady. Beans steady. Oats and Oatmeal dull, and rather lower.

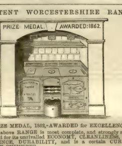
PATENT WORCESTERSHIRE RANGE.



PRIZE MEDAL, 1862,-AWARDED for EXCELLENCE.

The above RANGE is most complete, and strongly recommended for its unrivalled ECONOMY, CLEANLINESS, CONVENIENCE, DURABILITY, and is a certain CURE for SMOKY CHIMNEYS.

It is an entirely new invention, and consists of large MEAT ROASTER, PASTRY OVEN, and WROUGHT-IRON BOILER. The top forms a HOT PLATE for BOILING, STEWING, &c. The whole heated by ONE SMALL FIRE. One 5 feet wide is equal to an ordinary Range 8 feet wide.

Extracted from the London Daily Telegraph, May 19, 1862.
"International Exhibition, Class 31.

"Of the most recent inventions it should be said that Messrs. Jones & Rowe's Patent Worcestershire Range has attracted very special attention, and has been commended by the best authorities. A valuable peculiarity of their Ranges is the placing of the OVEN and ROASTER one above the other instead of side by side; and the ROASTER is constantly replenished with fresh air."

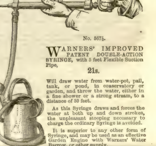
BRASS SYRINGES of all kinds from 9*s*. to 21*s*.



No. 567½.

WARNERS' IMPROVED PATENT DOUBLE-ACTION SYRINGE, with 5 feet Flexible Suction Pipe,

21s.

Will draw water from water-pot, pail, tank, or pond, in conservatory or garden, and throw the water, either in a fine shower or a strong stream, to a distance of 30 feet.

As this Syringe draws and forces the water at both up and down strokes, the unpleasant stooping necessary to charge the ordinary Syringe is avoided.

It is superior to any other form of Syringe, and may be used as an effective Garden Engine with Warners' Water Barrow, or other supply.

There are no suction or delivery Valves, hence much friction and liability to choke with leaves and dirt is avoided.

News of the Week.

The French papers continue to maintain that the Polish question has entered on a new phase since the declaration made by Earl Russell concerning the treaties of 1815. The Europe, of Frankfort, which is said to have been purchased by the Russian Government, repeats the report, current last week in Paris, that Earl Russell has addressed a letter to the Austrian Government proposing that an identical note should be addressed by the Three Powers to the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh, declaring that Russia has forfeited all her rights to Poland under the treaties of 1815. The Emperor of the French, who arrived at Paris on Tuesday night, presided on Wednesday over a Council of Ministers, at which an application made to the French Cabinet by Prince Czartoryski, in the name of the National Government, for the recognition of the Poles as belligerents, is said to have been discussed.

A despatch from Frankfort announces that in the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday, the four Governments called upon by the Federal decree of the 1st inst. to carry out the "execution" in Holstein, announced their willingness to obey the order in the event of its becoming necessary.

The Archduke Maximilian received at Miramar on Saturday the Mexican deputation sent to make him the offer of the Throne of Mexico. His Imperial Highness expressed his readiness to accept the Crown, on being satisfied by a plébiscite of the whole country that it was the spontaneous wish of the nation, and on guarantees being given for the ntegrity and independence of the monarchy.

The Ionian Parliament on Monday voted the annexation of the Ionian Islands to Greece, and passed a vote of thanks to England for her concession to its wishes.

By the Overland Mail from India we learn that a band of 2000 armed men, subjects of the Ameer of Cabul, have crossed the Indus near Peyhour, and invaded British territory. Many of them were Sepoys formerly in our service; and apprehensions are entertained that they are merely the vanguard of a larger force. In consequence of these demonstrations, the largest camp of exercise which has ever been seen in India in times of peace, consisting of upwards of 11,000 sabres and bayonets, with 3300 horses and 47 guns, has been ordered to assemble at Lahore; and the Governor-General has issued a peremptory summons to the Rajah of Cashmere, and to all the sons of the late Dost Mahomed, to attend the forthcoming "durbar" in that capital, when matters of an important character will be discussed. The Cawnpore authorities, after hearing and sifting the evidence of the informers, have definitively pronounced that the prisoner sent to them is not the Nana Sahib.

From the United States we have the details of the Federal defeat in Tennessee. The result of the first day's battle was not decisive, but on the second the Federal army was cut in two, and it was only the stubborn resistance of General THOMAS on the left which saved the whole army from annihilation. Four divisions were broken and dispersed, and fled to Rossville in uncontrollable disorder. General ROSENCRANS attributes the defeat to General M'COOK's disobedience of orders; while by others it is attributed to the better tactics of the Confederate generals and to the absence of the Federal commanders, ROSENCRANS himself having returned to Chattanooga before the engagement was over. The Federals admit a loss of upwards of 10,000 in killed and wounded, and the Confederates admit a loss of 5000. The latest news states that the Confederates are in great force in front of General ROSENCRANZ, and that if he be not quickly reinforced, there is every probability that he will be flanked and compelled to retreat across the Tennessee. General BURNSIDE, who is marching to reinforce him, is also in a position of great peril, and rumours are already current that the whole of his force has been captured. A portion of General MEADE's army has crossed the Rapidan, and the two armies are drawn up in line of battle, within a few miles of each other. The Confederates hold all the fords of the Rapidan in force, and are prepared to oppose General MEADE's advance. The New York Herald mentions a report that Mr. STEPHENS, the Vice-President of the Confederate States, has gone to Europe with an offer to cede Texas to France in return for French assistance to the Confederate Government. The news that the Confederate rams will not be allowed to leave Liverpool has caused a kindly feeling on the part of the Federal Government towards England.

Home News.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Wednesday week the Queen drove out, accompanied by Prince Louis of Hesse. In the afternoon her Majesty drove to the Ballochbuie, accompanied by Princess Helena. The Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse rode on horseback. The Prince and Princess of Wales dined with her Majesty. The Judge-Advocate-General, the Right Hon. T. E. Headlam, arrived at the Castle and had an audience of her Majesty. On Thursday week the Queen went out with Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse. The Princesses Helena and Louisa rode to Invercauld. On Friday morning the Queen went out, accompanied by Princess Louis of Hesse and Princess Helena. In the evening her Majesty, accompanied by Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse, the Princesses Helena, Louisa, and Beatrice, went to Abergeldie Castle to receive the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, who arrived from Edinburgh, accompanied by their three children, in the course of the evening. On Saturday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Crown Prince of Prussia and Princess Helena, walked in the grounds. In the afternoon the Queen, accompanied by Princess Louisa, drove round the Lion's-face. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia visited her Majesty. All the keepers, servants, and tenants of the Balmoral and Abergeldie estates were drawn up near the bridge to welcome the Crown Princess on her return to the Highlands. The Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse and Princess Helena went out riding. On Sunday afternoon the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie. The Rev. A. Anderson officiated. On Monday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Louis of Hesse, went out in the grounds. In the afternoon her Majesty, accompanied by Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse, drove to the Lynn of Quoich. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia dined with the Queen. On Tuesday morning Prince Alfred left the Castle for Holyrood Palace. The Queen went out, accompanied by Princess Louisa. In the afternoon the Queen, accompanied by the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia and Princess Louisa, drove round by the Lynn of Muich. Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse, Princess Helena, and Prince Arther rode up the Glen of Muich, and drove back from Alt-na-Guithasach.

MEMORIAL OF THE PRINCE CONSORT.—A statue of the Prince Consort by Baron Marochetti, subscribed for by the noblemen and gentry of the county and city of Aberdeen, has just arrived in that city. It was intended that the statue should be inaugurated yesterday, and her Majesty having been informed of the circumstance, the Lord Provost received the following communication from the Hon. General Grey :—

"Balmoral, Oct. 8, 6 A.M.

"My dear Lord Provost,—I am now desired by the Queen to let you know that it is her Majesty's intention to attend the uncovering of the statue of the Prince Consort on Friday next. Most painful as the effort will be to her Majesty, and entirely unequal as she feels to the exertion, yet she cannot allow this memorial to her beloved husband to be inaugurated at Aberdeen, during her stay at Balmoral, without wishing to show by her presence as well her own unbounded love and respect as her heartfelt appreciation of this mark of affection of the people of Aberdeen for one who dearly loved their country, and considered the few weeks he spent annually among them as some of the happiest of the year. The Queen is sure she may trust to your best endeavours, and to the kind feelings of the people, to make her reception in Aberdeen as little trying to her as possible, so that she may be better able to get through her part in what must be to her a distressing and yet a gratifying ceremony. I remain, my dear Lord Provost, yours very faithfully, C. GREY."

The inauguration, however, by desire of Her Majesty, was subsequently postponed from yesterday to Tuesday, the 13th.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES on Friday evening honoured the Lord Provost of Edinburgh with their company at a dinner and evening party. Their Royal Highnesses left Edinburgh on Saturday morning by the express train, and arrived at Marlborough House at a quarter past 10 at night. On Sunday morning the Prince and Princess attended divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The sermon was preached by the Subdean. On Monday morning the Prince of Wales rode on horseback. The Princess of Wales took a carriage drive. In the evening the King of Greece arrived at Marlborough House, on a visit to the Prince and Princess. On Tuesday morning the Prince, accompanied by the King of Greece, rode on horseback. The Princess took a carriage drive. In the afternoon the Prince and Princess, accompanied by the King of Greece, took a drive in an open carriage. In the evening the Prince of Wales had a dinner party to meet his Majesty. On Wednesday the Prince and Princess, with the King of Greece, took a drive in an open carriage, and visited the Duchess of Inverness at Kensington Palace, and in the evening honoured the performance at the Adelphi Theatre with their presence. On Thursday the Prince, accompanied by the King of Greece, went to Richmond Park and spent the day shooting with the Duke of Cambridge. The Princess took a carriage drive in the forenoon, and in the afternoon took an airing in an open carriage. In the evening the Prince and Princess, with the King of Greece, honoured the performance at the Haymarket Theatre with their presence.

PRINCE ALFRED arrived in Edinburgh from Balmoral on Tuesday, and took up his abode in Holyrood Palace, where he is to reside for several months in the prosecution of his studies. His Royal Highness is attending the meetings of the Social Science Congress, which opened on Wednesday last. The Prince's stud, consisting of eight horses, one of them an Arabian, two Shetland ponies, two carriages, and a pony phaeton, arrived on Monday from London, for the use of his Royal Highness while in Edinburgh.

THE KING OF GREECE landed at Dover on Monday afternoon, and proceeded to London by special train on the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, performing the journey in two hours and 10 minutes. On arrival at the Victoria station his Majesty was met by the Prince of Wales, who accompanied his Majesty to Marlborough House, where the King was received by his sister, the Princess of Wales.

PRINCE WILLIAM OF HESSE-DARMSTADT arrived at Thomas's Hotel last evening, and after a short stay in London will proceed to Balmoral on a visit to her Majesty.

LORD LIEUTENANCY.—The Queen has appointed the Earl of Hopetoun to be Lieutenant and Sheriff Principal of Linlithgowshire in the room of the Earl of Rosebery, resigned.

SERIOUS ILLNESS OF LORD LYNDHURST.—Lord Lyndhurst has been dangerously ill since Friday from an attack of low fever, attended with great weakness, and it is feared that owing to his great age (92), he will be too weak to rally. On Tuesday there was a favourable change, but symptoms have since occurred which leave but slight hopes of his recovery.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—The appointments of Sir R. Palmer and Mr. Collier to the offices of Attorney-General and Solicitor-General have created vacancies for Richmond and Plymouth. Both the learned gentlemen have offered themselves for re-election, and it is understood that no opposition will be offered to their return. The Coventry election terminated on Thursday in the election of Mr. Treherne, the Conservative candidate, by a majority of 134 over Mr. Arthur Peel, the numbers being 2263 to 2129.

THE CHANNEL FLEET arrived at Plymouth on Saturday. The Edgar flagship, Warrior, Resistance, and Emerald, are under orders to proceed to Portsmouth for the winter. The Black Prince, Defence, and Royal Oak have gone into harbour at Plymouth.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor and Empress went on Friday last to San Sebastian, where their Majesties met with a cordial reception. The Emperor and the Prince Imperial arrived on Sunday evening at Bordeaux, where they remained on Monday. On Tuesday morning the Emperor proceeded to La Rochelle, and was present at the artillery experiments. His Majesty returned to Paris in the evening, and on Wednesday presided at a Council of Ministers, at which it is said that an application of Prince Czartoryski for the recognition of the Poles as belligerents was discussed. The Emperor presided at another Council yesterday. The Empress embarked on Saturday morning at Biarritz for Lisbon, Cadiz, Seville, and Toulon, returning to France by way of the Mediterranean. Her Majesty arrived at Seville on Wednesday evening, and will resume her journey to-day. Prince Napoleon and M. Drouyn de Lhuys returned to Paris on Saturday morning. It is rumoured that the French Chambers will be opened very shortly, and that the financial statement of M. Fould will be published in the second fortnight of October. M. Billault has been ill, but is now so far recovered that he will shortly be able to resume his official duties. The Constitutionnel of Friday publishes an article, signed by M. Pauline Limayrac, giving the reasons why France accepted the treaties of 1815 as the basis of negociations on the Polish question. M. Limayrac says :—

"Russia having refused to continue the negociations, England, who proposed those treaties as the basis of negociations, has acknowledged that they are now a dead letter and ought to be considered void. According to Russia they are already valueless as far as the Poles are concerned, and according to Earl Russell, they are now void for Russia. Framed with the object of guaranteeing liberty to Poland, they would now be nothing more than a guarantee for the domination of Russia. This would be an injustice to which Europe could not lend her hand."

The same paper of Tuesday condemns the exaggerations of MM. Guéroult and Emile de Girardin, and says :—

"The Imperial policy knows how to ally prudence with firmness. It is incorrect to say France is responsible for the bloodshed in Poland. The Polish question has entered a new phase in consequence of the declaration of Earl Russell concerning the treaties of 1815. Upon this new ground France will do her duty, as she has done in the recent negotiations, and will not give way to passionate excitement. Conservative France has no more to fear an adventurous war under the negotiator of the peace of Villafranca than liberal France has to fear a compromising peace under the conqueror of Solferino."

La France says that the details published by the journals are Russian fabrications intended to compromise France and Austria. It opposes the idea of a war waged by France alone, and says that a war undertaken by the three Powers is alone possible. "If," it says, "the Polish question should, unhappily, have to be decided by force of arms, France would be neither more nor less obliged to go to war than her allies." In another article it says :—

"The English Cabinet has taken no resolution tending to convert Earl Russell's words into diplomatic action. France is not disposed to provoke overtures. She has nothing better to do than to watch the course of events. Earl Russell's declarations are for France a moral satisfaction, and permit her to wait without her dignity suffering."

The Pays says that France is determined to preserve to the Polish question its European character, and not to separate its action from that of the other Powers. The Patrie says that Prince Czartoryski has, in the name of the Polish Government, demanded of the Cabinets of Paris and London the recognition of the Poles as belligerents. In another article it says :—

"We have reason to believe that Earl Russell is about to address a note to the English representatives abroad, setting forth the legal consequences, which, as far as concerns the possession of Poland by Russia, would result from the non-fulfilment of the treaties of 1815. The Government of the Emperor would join in such a step by addressing a communication to the Powers which signed the final act of the Vienna Congress."

Most of the Powers have declared their intention of recognising the Mexican empire. The Powers which have already recognised it are—England, Austria, Spain, Prussia, Belgium, Bavaria, Saxony, Turkey, Hanover, Wurtemberg, Holland, Sweden, and Denmark. No Power has manifested any opposition.—M. Nadar, a well-known photographer in Paris, has taken out a patent for an "aërial screw," which is to solve the difficult problem of aërial navigation. But his new machine not being yet completed, he has constructed a monster balloon, called the "Géant," in which he ascended on Sunday afternoon from the Champ de Mars, with 13 companions, among whom were the Prince de Sayn-Wittgenstein, Count de St. Martin, and the Princess de la Tour d'Auvergne. M. Nadar's prospectus said that he expected to be able to remain in the air for four or five days, and that with the prevailing westerly winds it was not impossible he might be landed in China! The balloon itself was a formidable looking machine, and required to fill it about 20,000 cubic feet of gas. Instead of the ordinary car it took up a complete two-storied house, all built of wicker-work, with rooms, &c., for the passengers. An ample commissariat was provided, and not the least curious part of the programme was a code of regulations by which the passengers pledged their word of honour not to smoke, not to take up any matches with them, and in case of disobedience to the captain, agreed to be "immediately landed." After the balloon was let loose it soon became evident that the weight it had to carry was too great to enable it to proceed very far. It passed over Paris from S.W. to N.E. about 200 yards above the house-tops, and descended about 9 o'clock in the evening near Meaux. Three violent shocks were experienced, at the last of which the car of the balloon was thrown on its side. The balloon was then secured. Several passengers were slightly bruised. Another ascent will take place on the 18th inst.

SPAIN.—The Democratic Committee has issued a proclamation recommending the electors to abstain from voting, and demanding universal suffrage, liberty of the press, and administrative decentralisation. The Ministry await the result of the elections with confidence, and intend to lay before the Cortes the draft of a new law on the press, the principal features of which will be trial by jury and a reduction in the existing scale of fines.

PORTUGAL.—The Empress of the French arrived at Lisbon on Monday, and paid a visit of congratulation to the King. Her Majesty proceeded on her voyage to Cadiz on Tuesday afternoon. The Sardinian fleet has arrived for the baptism of the young Prince.

Denmark and the Duchies.—The Faedrelandet of Copenhagen of Wednesday says that a treaty of alliance with Sweden has now been concluded, and will be signed in a few days. Differences between Denmark and Sweden were not the cause of the delay, which arose from Sweden wishing to first inform the Western Powers of this step. France has replied in a very friendly and encouraging manner to the Note of the Swedish Government. Prince Oscar of Sweden arrived at Gluckstadt on Monday.

Belgium.—The Kreuz Zeitung of Thursday announces that the King of the Belgians, on the journey to Italy which he will shortly make, will have an interview with the King of Prussia in Baden.

Frankfort.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday, the four Governments called upon by the Federal decree of the 1st inst. to carry out the execution in Holstein announced that they would obey the order in the event of its becoming necessary. Oldenburg has renewed its former proposal to declare the stipulations in the treaty of 1851-1852 to have lapsed should the execution be opposed by Denmark.

Prussia.—The Neue Preussische (Kreuz) Zeitung of Monday says that a Royal order has been addressed to the Minister of War, directing that at the forthcoming elections officers and soldiers are not to be urged in an official manner to participate in the elections. According to an ordinance of the Ministry of State, the expenses incurred for the payment of substitutes to replace public functionaries paid by the State, who have accepted nominations as members to the Chamber of Deputies, are henceforth no longer to be defrayed by the State. The public authorities are to be instructed by the Ministers under whose jurisdiction they may be placed to detain from the salary of the functionary who has accepted the nomination such an amount as may be necessary for the payment of the substitute, and to employ it for that purpose.

Austria.—In the Lower House of the Reichsrath on Monday the Minister of State read the Imperial Message, again exceptionally empowering the House, with its present complement of members, to discuss the Budget for the whole Empire for 1864. The House, however, resolved to wait the arrival of the Transylvanian deputies before discussing the Budget. The Mexican deputation arrived at Trieste on Thursday, the 1st inst., and was received on Saturday by the Archduke Maximilian. Don Gutierez de Estrada spoke in the name of the deputation. The Archduke, in reply, said:—

"The wishes of the Mexican Assembly of Notables have touched me deeply. It cannot but be exceedingly flattering for our House that they have turned their eyes to the descendants of Charles V. Although the mission of maintaining the independence and welfare of Mexico on a solid foundation, and with free institutions, is a most noble one, I must, nevertheless, in complete accordance with the views of the Emperor Napoleon, declare that the monarchy cannot be re-established on a legitimate and firm basis without a spontaneous expression of the wishes of the whole nation. I must make my acceptance of the throne dependent upon a plébiscite of the whole country. On the other hand, it would be my duty to ask for guarantees, which are indispensable to secure Mexico against the dangers which threaten her integrity and independence. Should these guarantees be obtained, and the universal vote of the nation be given in my favour, I am ready to accept the crown, subject to the approval of the Emperor, my brother. In case Providence should call me to this high mission I must at once declare that it is my firm intention to open the path of progress by a Constitution, as was done by my brother, and after the complete pacification of the country to seal the fundamental law with an oath. By such means only can a new and really national policy be called into existence by which all parties, forgetting old disputes, would co-operate with me in raising Mexico to a prominent rank among nations. Carry back with you these frank declarations to your fellow-citizens, and act in such a manner that it may become possible for the nation to declare what form of government it desires to have."

It is believed that the conditions of the Archduke's acceptance of the crown are the same as those named in October, 1861, according to which he considers the co-operation of France and England to be the only means by which order can be re-established, and that a free manifestation of the wish of the whole nation is absolutely necessary. The Archduke stated, in conversation with the members of the deputation, that he would only accept the crown if all these conditions were fulfilled, and that he would now await their fulfilment.

Russia.—Accounts from St. Petersburg state that the party which recommends honourable concessions to Poland regains ground. The Frankfort journal, the Europe, has been purchased by the Russian Government for the sum of 80,000 fr. The frigate Oleg has left for Toulon. She is ordered, in company with the Sotiol, to escort the King of Greece when he embarks at Marseilles. The Russian Ambassador in Berlin has notified to Russian subjects of Polish extraction from the western provinces who are at present residing abroad that on the expiration of their passports they must return to Russia without delay. Those whose passports have already expired are expected to return immediately. All persons not complying with this order are threatened with the confiscation of their property.

Poland.—An order of the day of the National Town Captain of Warsaw, dated the 1st inst., announces that the attempt upon the life of General Berg took place by order of the National Government. This measure was adopted with the view of compelling General Berg to declare his policy of extermination, which he would otherwise have carried out gradually and imperceptibly. In another proclamation the National Town Captain exhorts the inhabitants to have patience, and declares that the gendarmes will redouble their vigilance. It is said that Prince Czartorysky has been instructed to take formal steps in the name of the National Government to obtain from the Cabinets of London and Paris the recognition of Poland as a belligerent nation. Taczanowski has been brought before a court-martial by order of the National Government, in order that the circumstances of his late defeat may be investigated. The Commissariat Department of Warsaw has been informed that 50,000 fresh troops will shortly arrive in the kingdom of Poland, and remain there during the winter months. Every little town will be garrisoned. A Russian spy was stabbed on Monday at the Hôtel de l'Europe. The perpetrator has not been discovered. In consequence of this attempt the hotel was occupied by the military, and all the male inmates were arrested. A workman employed in the factory of a Mr. Evans has been shot by the Russians, in the factory yard, for making grenades. The factory has been closed, by order of General Berg, and is to remain so until Mr. Evans, who is a British subject, shall have paid a fine of 15,000 roubles. A war contribution of 8 per cent. on their net income has been imposed upon all house proprietors in Warsaw. General Wysocki, who up to the present has been confined in the prison of Lemberg, was on Tuesday transferred to Linz, where he will be released on parole. The Cossacks have killed on the high road the Councillor of Justice Blodowski and the proprietor Dangel. Budzellowicz has been shot at Wilna. Five fresh executions have taken place in Warsaw. General Mouravieff has ordered the deportation to Siberia of the population of Dubicze and Krakae, in the district of Lida. A similar measure has been carried out with the population of Kleciski, in the district of Osmiana. Colonists from Russia will take possession of the lands of the deported inhabitants. Among 200 other persons recently sent to Siberia were Count Ostrowski, son of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and L. Lewinski, a Councillor of State. Count Stanislas Tarnowski has been arrested in Cracow. Meisels, Chief Rabbi at Warsaw, has been arrested in that city. An ordinance issued by Lowchine, Director of the Warsaw police, orders all house proprietors to make domiciliary visits every day to the apartments of their lodgers, and states that the proprietors will be answerable to the military tribunals for all arms found in their houses. The inhabitants are greatly exasperated, and apprehensions of disturbance are entertained in consequence of the severities of the Russians. The Russian Government is unable to find an editor for the official journal, although it has offered a salary of 24,000 francs. On the 30th engagements between the insurgents and the Russians took place near Lelow. Orlowski's corps has also encountered the Russians under Byszewa. The Russians have pillaged the castle of Boniewo, and blown up with gunpowder the Capuchin convent at Lomdworow, in the woywodschaft of Kalisch.

Italy.—The Italian Minister at St. Petersburg, the Marquis de Pepoli, concluded on the 3d inst. a treaty of commerce with the Russian Government, by which Italy is placed on the same footing as the most favoured nation. The treaty expressly stipulates that Italian State papers and all shares the interest of which has been guaranteed by the Italian Government, may be dealt in and quoted on the Russian Stock Exchange. Sir James Hudson was received in audience by the King on Sunday, and presented his letters of recall. The Hon. Mr. Elliot was expected to arrive at Turin on Thursday. The King will be present at the ceremony of opening the railway to Foggia. Prince Humbert will leave for Naples on the 14th inst., accompanied by the Minister of Marine. The Minister of War left for the same city on Wednesday. The official Gazette of Friday publishes a Royal decree authorising an additional expenditure of about 8,000,000 lire in the budgets of the different ministers, and at the same time ordering various reductions to the same amount in the expenses of other branches of the public administration. The general Budget of expenditure for 1863 has not been increased. The report of the Minister of Finance which precedes the decree points out the inconvenience resulting from the privilege granted to the Government to decree fresh credits during the parliamentary recess, and the remedies which are to be applied by the new law on the public accounts which has already been submitted to Parliament. In the present case the amount voted for the Budget of this year will not be exceeded. At a meeting of the shareholders of the National Bank of Turin on Wednesday, the statutes for a new National Bank for the whole of Italy, proposed by the Minister of Commerce, were favourably received. General Pallavicini has thrice encountered and beaten the band of Caruso Schiavone, and is energetically pursuing it. The Public Consistory at Rome was occupied on Thursday morning in the beatification of Queen Christina of Naples. Marie Alacoque, of Burgundy, who was declared an object of veneration in 1834, as the founder of the Order of the "Dames du Sacré Cœur," was formally canonised as a Saint. The Pope's Secret Consistory afterwards appointed four bishops for Spain, one for Portugal, and three in partibus. General Montebello has published an order of the day acquainting his soldiers with the disgraceful act of the Papal gendarmes in firing upon the Italian officer on the frontiers, and with the equally blameable conduct of the Pontifical Government, which protected such assassins. The Papal police have seized a secret printing office, in which the Mazzinian journal Roma o Morte was printed. The police have also seized a revolutionary correspondence.

Sicily.—A column of troops, commanded by General Govone, has commenced a perquisition, with the object of arresting all persons who have evaded the conscription. Seventy of these persons have already presented themselves. The population is quiet and favourable to the measure. Dr. Maggiorani, who was expelled from Rome, where he was professor in the University and physician to the French Embassy, has just been appointed professor in the University of Palermo.

Ionian Islands.—The Ionian Parliament on Monday voted the annexation of the Islands of Greece, and passed a vote of thanks to England for her concession to its wishes. The Lord High Commissioner has since officially received the President of the Ionian Parliament, who remitted to his Excellency the final reply of the Parliament in favour of annexation to Greece. Much popular rejoicing is manifested at Corfu.

Turkey.—The Budget was adopted by the Grand Council on Sunday last.

Syria.—The state of affairs in Syria is still unsatisfactory. Bands of Druses, escaped from Hauran, have appeared near Damascus, and intercept the caravans of provisions and merchandise.

Egypt.—The Nile had not risen any higher on the 7th, and had not caused any fresh destruction of property.

India.—A telegram from Peshawur states that 2000 armed men from Sittara, subjects of the Ameer of Cabul, have crossed the Indus near Peyhour, and invaded British territory. They are chiefly Hindostanees, many of them Sepoys formerly in our service; and it is suggested that they are merely the vanguard of a larger force. The 1st Punjab Infantry and the Mountain Train from Attock have already gone against them, and a large military force is to assemble at Lahore in December, consisting of four troops of Royal Horse Artillery, four battalions of Field Artillery, two regiments of British Hussars, four regiments of Native Cavalry, five regiments of British Infantry, six regiments of Native Infantry, and four companies of Sappers and Miners, making 11,020 men in all, with 3320 horses and 47 guns; the largest force ever assembled in Upper India in times of peace. It has been intimated in strong terms to the Rajah of Cashmere and to the sons of the late Dost Mahomed that their presence is desired in Lahore to meet the Viceroy, when matters of an important nature will be discussed. The reputed Nana Sahib, captured at Ajmere, arrived at Cawnpore on the 22d of August, having been sent there by Government for examination. The Cawnpore authorities, after hearing and sifting all the evidence that could be obtained at Cawnpore and Bithoor, definitively pronounced that the prisoner is not the Nana Sahib.

China.—The neighbourhood of Shanghai was quiet on Aug. 20. 1000*l.* has been offered for the capture of Burgevine.

Japan.—News received from Japan states that the expulsion of foreigners has been openly avowed. Admiral Kuper has sailed with the fleet from Yokohama, probably to chastise the Prince of Satsuma.

New Zealand.—The war in New Zealand is spreading, and the Maories are appearing in great numbers. Reinforcements are necessary. Volunteering is progressing.

United States.—The press correspondents of the New York papers represent the battle of Chicamauga, on the 19th ult., as a drawn battle; but in the engagement of the 20th the Federal General Rosencrans suffered a disastrous defeat, which must put him on the defensive for some time to come. The corps of General Thomas was almost the only one which did any fighting. Those of Generals M'Cook and Crittenden were both badly beaten and driven in all directions on the first day, and on the second the first charge of the Confederates cut their lines in two, routed the entire commands, and drove them in disgraceful panic into Rossville and Chattanooga. The left and right were so completely routed that the troops became disorganised, immense numbers running to the rear after the retreat. The divisions of Generals Baird, Negley, Reynolds, Brennons, and Harker alone retained cohesiveness, and took a position along the base of the Mission Mountains for another fight, and held their ground against another attack by Bishop Polk's corps until the Confederates abandoned the contest. General Rosencrans attributes the loss of the battle to General M'Cook's disobedience of orders. It is said, however, that the Federal army suffered much from the absence of command, General Rosencrans himself having returned to Chattanooga before the engagement was over, and two corps commanders being also absent. It is also stated that the defeat was rather the result of inefficient tactics than of deficient numbers, and that Gen. Thomas only saved the army from utter annihilation. The Federals admit a loss of 50 cannon and 10,000 men killed, wounded, and missing, besides a large amount of material. The Confederates estimate their entire loss at 5000. The latest accounts state that General Rosencrans is safe in his present position, which according to some of the reports is not at Chattanooga itself, but on Mission Ridge, about 10 miles south of that place, and which can only be assailed by regular siege. A reconnaissance on the 24th discovered the Confederates in force in his front. The Confederate infantry are massed in Chicamauga Creek and Valley. Several hundred guerillas passed through Winchester, Tennessee, on the 24th, believed to be en route to harass General Rosencrans' line of communication. Great anxiety is still felt for the safety of General Burnside, and telegrams from Louisville of the 25th report that rumours were prevalent that the whole of his force had been captured, a Confederate column having crossed the Mission Ridge, it was supposed to intercept him. General Bragg officially reports under date of the 21st:—

"The enemy retreated on Chattanooga last night, leaving his dead and wounded in our hands. His loss is very large in men, artillery, small arms, and colours. Ours is heavy, but not yet ascertained. The victory is complete, and our cavalry is pursuing. With the blessing of God, our troops have accomplished great results against greatly superior numbers. We have to mourn the loss of many gallant officers. Brigadier-Generals Preston Smith, Helm, and Deshles are killed; Major-General Hood and Brigadier-Generals Adams, Gregg, and Brown are wounded."

General Hood, who was reported by General Bragg among the wounded, has since died. He was one of the most promising officers in the Confederate service. The expected battle on the Rapidan has not yet taken place. There are rumours that the Confederate General Hill is at Fredericksburg, marching to flank General Meade and cut off his communication. The opinion exists in military circles that no considerable portion of General Lee's army has been sent out of Virginia. The Southern papers state that the opposing armies are drawn up in line of battle from a half to a quarter of a mile apart, and at some points in full view of each other. The Confederates hold all the fords of the Rapidan in force, and are prepared to oppose General Meade's advance. They are also reported to be threatening the Federal lines in North Carolina. General White's Confederate cavalry have been marauding in Maryland. The latest intelligence from Charleston states that since the evacuation of Forts Wagner and Gregg by the Confederates, and the occupation of Morris Island by the Federals, 20 days days previously, operations seem to have been completely suspended. Neither General Gilmore nor Admiral Dahlgren had fired a shot during that period which had done any damage either to the forts or the city. The Confederate steamer Sumter has been sunk in Charleston Harbour. She was mistaken by the garrison of Fort Moultrie for a Federal steamer, and consequently fired upon. 600 persons were on board at the time, all of whom, excepting 20, escaped uninjured. It is now stated that the expedition to the Teche country, of which the first division under General Franklin met with such a disastrous repulse at Sabine City, was undertaken without the consent of General Banks, the orders for its despatch being issued from Washington. A great fight had taken place between the second division of the expedition under General Herron, and a large Confederate force near Morganza, south of the mouth of the Red River, in which it was believed that General Herron had been defeated. The third column, under General Washburne, met with no better success, and had been unable to advance into the interior, from the want of gunboats to protect his crossing of Berwick's Bay. It was reported in New Orleans that the Confederates were in possession of Grand Gulf and Fort Adams, on the Mississippi, both of which places they were fortifying. Considerable anxiety, if not alarm, is expressed in Washington at the probable recognition of the Southern Confederacy by France. A letter from Washington states that the Emperor Napoleon consented to form an alliance with the Confederates and assist them to establish their independence as early as December last, provided they would yield Texas to France. The Confederates objected to the conditions, thinking that peace with the Federal States could be more cheaply obtained. The mission of Vice-President Stephens, undertaken in July last, was, it is asserted, a last attempt to secure a compromise before accepting the Emperor's terms. His failure to obtain an audience with President Lincoln decided the Government at Richmond to despatch Mr. Stephens to Paris, with full powers to negotiate with the Emperor. Though the statement is disbelieved as to the price of recognition, an impression prevails that the recognition itself has been finally determined upon. A fugitive white man, recently arrived from the Southern States, reports that Richmond is in a most perfect condition of defence; that 100 guns cover the approach to the city by the river alone; that sufficient wheat, corn, and beef for the use of the Confederates has been produced during the year, and that luxuries only are deficient. He adds that the citizens of Charleston are fully determined to burn the city rather than surrender. The New York World asserts that information has reached New Orleans that the French had occupied Matamoras, with 5000 troops. A collision is expected to take place at the mouth of the Rio Grande between the French and Federal gunboats on matters connected with cotton and supplies for the Confederates. The Richmond Dispatch asserts that the Confederate Government has effected a loan of 100,000,000f. in France, upon the security of the cotton now in the South. The Russian flag-ship Alexander Newsky, Admiral Lasofski, with four other Russian men-of-war, have anchored in New York Harbour. It is rumoured they will remain there all the winter. Much speculation exists as to the reason of their presence. The municipal authorities are making preparations to give them a grand reception by a public banquet. Admiral Milne, in the flag-ship Nile, left Halifax on the 24th ult. for New York. The steamer Juno has been captured. It is semi-officially announced that the Government have received advices from England that the Confederate rams would not be allowed to sail. This has created a kindly feeling on the part of the Federal Government towards England.

MEXICO.—Marshal Forey was to embark on the 5th October on his return to France. The inhabitants of Mazatlan had refused to pay a new tax imposed by Juarez, and having in consequence been threatened by the military, the captain of an English frigate anchored at Mazatlan was said to have declared that he would defend them, since the legal power of Juarez no longer existed. In consequence of this declaration the agents of Juarez broke open the door of the British Consulate and committed outrages on British subjects. The captain of the frigate landed a detachment of marines and arrested the offenders.

SAN DOMINGO.—Five battalions, with artillery, have been sent from Havannah to suppress a revolt in San Domingo, where the insurgents are closely pressing the Spanish forces. The Madrid journals affirm that the revolt is supported by the Federal Government.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

SHOCK OF AN EARTHQUAKE.—At about 20 minutes past 3 o'clock on Tuesday morning, a severe shock of earthquake was felt all over England, from Cheshire to Kent. At Beeston Observatory, Mr. Lowe says that it was "a smart shock. The motion of the earthquake pendulum was from W.N.W. to E.S.E., and the displacement of chalk by the 30-feet rod was half an inch, the index needle moving the chalk so as to leave an oval, or rather a lengthened oval hole." At Twickenham Mr. Hind, who noticed it very perceptibly, states that "the oscillatory motion appeared to be from E.N.E. to W.S.W., lasting three seconds, or rather less. He heard no sound whatever after the shock, but cannot say positively whether any preceded it. The sky was partially clear at the time, and the air perfectly still. The sensation produced by the tremor was very peculiar, and different from that of ordinary vibration." It was also noticed at Blackheath, Stoke Newington, Regent's Park, Bayswater, Notting Hill and other places in the neighbourhood of the metropolis, as well as in Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire, West Surrey, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, Staffordshire, Worcestershire, Warwickshire, Shropshire, Derbyshire, Cheshire, Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, South Wales, Hampshire, Dorset, Somerset, and Devon, but it seems to have been most severe in the midland counties. In Wolverhampton, about the centre of the midland district, most persons but the very soundest sleepers were aroused by it, and, not knowing from what the noise proceeded, were under the impression that their houses had been broken into by burglars. The general sensation appeared to be that the houses were being shaken from their foundations with a tremulous, rapid, and undulatory motion, proceeding, apparently, from north to south, and accompanied by a sound resembling the passing of a very heavy vehicle at a rapid pace. Simultaneously with this noise there was a vibration of water jugs, washhand basins, glasses, window panes, chairs standing against walls, &c. In some cases, after the shocks had passed away, cracking and creaking noises were heard at intervals, as if the whole house had been strained. Wrottesley Hall, the seat of Lord Wrottesley, was shaken throughout, and the inmates alarmed. This was also the case at Teddesley, the residence of Lord Hatherton. In game preserves, pheasants were observed to become alarmed as they usually are during the raging of a thunderstorm. At Sedgeley, which is said to be one of the highest inhabited parts of England, the residence of a gentleman named Waterhouse was violently shaken. All the inmates were suddenly awoke by a great shock. The windows rattled as though they were coming out of their frames, the doors trembled as though seized and shaken from the outside, and every other part of the building was equally affected. In Dudley the shock was most severely felt, beds being violently shaken, and in some instances doors burst open, crockeryware broken, and clocks stopped. In detached buildings in various parts of the town the effect is described as being most terrifying. At Stourbridge, Wednesbury, Walsall, Kidderminster, and other towns in the neighbourhood, the shock was severely felt, and the inhabitants were aroused by the clanking of glasses, breaking of furniture, moving of beds, and bursting of doors. At Great Malvern the windows of the Imperial Hotel, a very large and massive building at the foot of the Malvern Hills, were violently rattled, and it is said that one of the railway signals was displaced. Servants ran downstairs in affright, and general consternation appears to have been felt. At Upton-on-Severn and Worcester the same effects were observed. At Birmingham walls were seen to move, and in some instances substantial buildings were disturbed as much as very old houses may be by the passage of a heavy waggon along the street. Windows and doors rattled, and much vibration was otherwise experienced. Throughout the district a great number of persons were awoke from their sleep; many rose from their beds and examined their premises, the effects of the shock being quite as much seen as felt. At Handsworth, Perry Bar, Kingsnorton, and other rural districts, the shock seems to have been more perceptible than in Birmingham. At Derby the shock continued for several minutes, and the greatest alarm was manifested by a large proportion of the inhabitants, who feared that their dwellings were giving way; some experienced violent rockings of their beds, others were awoke by a noise resembling the sound of burglars entering their premises, and the town was thrown into great confusion, the prevailing belief being that it was an earthquake. The sensation was general, and was also felt in the villages in the vicinity. At Burton-on-Trent the shock was so violent as to awaken many sound sleepers. Beds were shaken, and windows rattled so as to produce in many cases the notion that thieves were entering. The vibrations continued several seconds, and were accompanied by a low, distant, rumbling sound. At Liverpool, and at various places on both sides of the Mersey, the shock was very severe, though unattended with any rumbling noise. Beds were shaken, china broken, and clocks stopped. Several night porters were so alarmed at the oscillation of the houses that they made precipitate retreats. A surgeon, who was visiting a sick woman at Claughton, Birkenhead, was so convinced that the house was coming down, that he ran into the street. At Bootle, Seaforth, Waterloo, and Crosby the shock was very violent, and in many places the inhabitants were terrified. In several houses the bottles of wine were shaken out of the bins; the bells set ringing; glasses, and other articles of a fragile nature, were broken; and the hens commenced cackling. In Liverpool itself the shock was severely felt, and several public-houses in the neighbourhood of the Exchange, Sackville-street, Everton, and Kirkdale, suffered much in the way of glass. No injury to the person, however, was sustained, although there were one or two cases of premature confinement in consequence of the shock. At Hereford the houses were violently shaken, and the sound is described as "perfectly awful." In South Wales the shock was felt slightly at Swansea, Merthyr, Haverfordwest, and Llanelly. It was more severe at Neath, Ferryside, and Pembroke-dock, and along the western extremity of Swansea Bay. The captain of a vessel reports that 20 miles from Milford Haven he felt a concussion like striking upon a rock. The shock was also felt at Bristol, Nailsea, Portishead, and the neighbourhood. At Taunton the people believed that their houses were about to tumble to the ground; some were raised from their beds, and in some instances furniture was thrown about the rooms. Numbers who got up did not again retire to rest, and went into the streets to ascertain the cause. At Cheltenham a deep rumbling noise was suddenly heard, like that of an artillery waggon; buildings vibrated, the heaviest pieces of furniture were severely shaken, and the fire-irons violently agitated. At Gloucester the tremor was accompanied by a low roaring sound and a rattling of doors and casements, and in the neighbourhood of the Cotswold Hills the movement was accompanied by a rumbling noise, which lasted from four to five seconds. At Exeter the shock was so severe that many persons were much alarmed, and got up and examined their premises.

Election of an Alderman.—The citizens of the ward of Aldgate were convened on Thursday at a wardmote to elect an Alderman in the place of the late Alderman Humphery. The Lord Mayor presided. Mr. Lusk, the late sheriff, was put in nomination, and as there was no other candidate the Lord Mayor declared him duly elected.

Court of Common Council.—At the last meeting of the Court of Common Council a bust of the Prince of Wales, presented by Lord Mayor Rose to the Corporation, in memory of the majority and marriage of his Royal Highness having both occurred in his mayoralty, was accepted, and ordered to occupy a conspicuous position in the Common Council Room. The resignation of Mr. Bunning, the City architect, caused by ill-health, was accepted. After a smart discussion the Court refused to give money for any City improvement which had not been previously submitted to and approved by them. Attention was called to the disappearance of certain articles, provided on the occasion of the ball to the Prince and Princess of Wales, and a resolution was ultimately adopted that no member of the Common Council, whatever his official rank, should accept of property belonging to the Corporation except on a vote of the Court.

The Great Bank Fraud in the City.—Sigmund Dietrichstein, late of Worthing and of the Jamaica Coffee House, with respect to whom a reward of 1000*l*. has been offered during the last three weeks, was captured on Sunday at Pesth, in Hungary. The prisoner, who is a native of that country, and about 30 years of age, stands charged with having obtained by fraud, at a bank in the city, Bank of England notes to the amount of between 8000*l*. and 9000*l*. He absconded on the 29th of August, the day of the alleged fraud. A few days afterwards a warrant for his apprehension was issued from the Mansion House, and since then Mr. Pollakey, and some of the more experienced city detectives, have been in active pursuit of the fugitive, both in this country and on the continent. In the course of their inquiries they found that a photographer in the neighbourhood of Worthing, where the prisoner resided, had portraits of him as well as of his wife and child, and from these they had about 1500 copies taken and largely distributed, both here and abroad, accompanied by a printed description of the prisoner's personal appearance. They subsequently traced his wife to Ostend, and thence to Austria and Hungary, where she met him. A reward of 200*l*. was offered for his apprehension, and an additional one of 800*l*. is still promised to any one who shall give such information as may lead to the recovery of the bank-notes.

Lancashire Relief Fund.—At a meeting of the Mansion House Committee on Friday, grants were voted for distribution by the local relief committees to the amount of 2089*l*., and a grant of 56*l*. was voted to the Carlisle Emigration Committee.

Female Schools of Art.—It is stated that with the sanction of the Treasury the Committee of Council on Education propose to establish two scholarships to be held by the two most eminent female students of the Schools of Art throughout the country, the endowment for such scholarships having been provided by the fees taken for inspecting the wedding presents of the Prince and Princess of Wales at South Kensington Museum in May last.

The Public Health. — The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, October 3, were 1274. The average number in the ten corresponding weeks of 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1159. The present return is therefore 115 above the average. During the week the births of 1037 boys and 898 girls, in all 1935 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1736.

Provincial.

Aylesbury. — Several gentlemen, including the Lord Chief Justice Erle, who are desirous of preserving the memory of John Hampden, have erected a monument in the field in Stoke Mandeville in which the levy for ship money was made which led to the contest ending in civil war. The work has been entrusted to Mr. W. W. Thompson, of Aylesbury, and consists of a stone obelisk 8 feet high, surmounted by a Maltese cross, and bearing the following inscription:—"For these lands in Stoke Mandeville John Hampden was assessed in 20*s*. ship money, levied by command of the King without authority of law, the 4th of August, 1635. By resisting the claim of the King in legal strife, he upheld the rights of the people under the law, and became entitled to grateful remembrance. His work on earth ended after the conflict of Chalgrove Field, the 18th of June, 1643, and he rests in Great Hampden Church.—W. E., 1863."

Bradford.—About three weeks since the counting-house of Mr. D. W. Fox, manufacturer, of Upper Croft Mill, was entered by thieves, and a large iron safe, 8 cwt., of Milner's make, was taken away. The safe contained two 20*l*. Bank of England notes, 52*l*. in gold, several checks and banker's draughts, of the value altogether of 1000*l*., and all the books. The premises were entered by the use of false keys, though a watchman was employed on the premises during the night. The safe was taken to an adjoining field, about 200 yards distant, where a cart received it. The marks of the horse's feet and of the wheels of the cart are then traceable over two or three fields, leading into Parry Lane, and thence to an old highway called Cutley Heights, just within the boundary of the borough. The safe has since been found in deep water in an old quarry at Calverly, near Bradford. It had been opened, four perforations having been made in the lid for that purpose. All the money and checks had been taken out, but the books and some papers were left. Upper Croft Mill is within a short distance of Bowling Iron Works, so that any sound occasioned by the removal of the safe would scarcely be observed amid the clatter of the hammers at these works. Thomas Hays, the watchman employed at the Mill, was apprehended on suspicion of being concerned in the robbery, but has now been discharged.

Ipswich.—The efforts of the detective police having failed to throw any light on the mysterious robbery of the Ipswich registered letter mail-bag, in which were bankers' parcels containing notes, &c., to the amount of some thousands of pounds, the Post-office authorities have increased the reward for the discovery of the thief to 200*l*.

Liverpool.—Before the departure of the Channel fleet from Dublin Bay on Saturday morning, the non-commissioned officers and men presented an address and testimonial to Mr. S. R. Graves, Commodore of the Royal Mersey Yacht Club, who had gone over with the fleet as the guest of Admiral Dacres. The address stated that they had never experienced anything like the kindness of Mr. Graves, the members of the Club, and the inhabitants of Liverpool generally, and the testimonial consisted of a handsome silver claret jug, with the following inscription:—

"Presented to Mr. S. R. Graves, Commodore of the Royal Mersey Yacht Club, by the non-commissioned officers and seamen of H.M.S. Defence, as a token of their gratitude and affection for his kindness to them during their stay in the Mersey."

Mr. Graves, in reply, said it had been his good fortune to receive many proofs of public favour, and highly as he valued them he could with truth say he never received one more pleasing in its associations or more gratifying in its nature; and what made it the more acceptable was the fact which Captain Phillimore had conveyed to him—that the idea had sprung entirely from their own generous impulses, unaided and unprompted by others. On taking leave of the men, two of them came aft and begged of Mr. Graves, when he returned to Liverpool, to present the best regards of the crew to the Mayor for his kindness and hospitable treatment of them during their stay.

Manchester.—A numerous meeting of the Committee of the Southern Independence Association, formed by the amalgamation of the Central Association for the Recognition of the Southern States and the Manchester Southern Club, was held on Tuesday at the Clarence Hotel, in this city, Lord Wharncliffe in the chair. The meeting was a private one, but it is understood that the report of the Amalgamation Committee was presented and adopted. A list of gentlemen to be the presidents, vice-presidents, and committee of the association, including Lord Wharncliffe as chairman, and the Duke of Cleveland as vice-chairman, was moved by Mr. T. H. Birley, seconded by Colonel Jackson, and adopted. A draught of the address of the association was read and moved by Mr. Spence, seconded by Mr. E. Hardcastle, and carried. A resolution was then moved by Mr. Matthew Kennedy, in favour of substantial aid being called for by the association, which was seconded by Mr. Charles Pooley, and carried. Lord Wharncliffe denied that he had charged those who advocate the Northern side with interested motives. He had never used terms open to any such construction, and thought it right to assume that each party was actuated by a desire to promote what it deemed the right cause. He then referred to Lord Russell's speech, and especially to that portion in which he expressed the opinion that the majority in this country was in favour of the North. This, he said, showed the necessity for an association, in order to elicit the real feeling of the English people, which, he contended, was strongly in favour of the Confederates. The only motive for English sympathy with the North was a belief that the triumph of the Federals would ensure the freedom of the negro; but he contended that the President's proclamation of freedom was never meant to take effect, and that he only issued it in order to gain over English feeling. He had it on very good authority that the measure was really originated in this country, and sent out as one that must be adopted to insure the support of a certain party in England. He then entered into the general question of recognition, to which he should object if a step to be taken by this country alone, but of which he heartily approved as a course to be taken by several of the European Powers collectively. His lordship concluded by advocating the vigorous action of the association. Mr. Spence said that he took the news now coming over from America, contrasting as it did with that of a few weeks back, as a proof that each Power after a term of success came to a stop in its course and lost ground again, and so this terrible tide of bloodshed ebbed and flowed without hope that either party could bring the struggle to an end. He contended that this end could not be reached but by the action or the influence of some third party—some European Power. Alluding to Lord Russell's statement, he discussed the sentiments on this question of the different classes of society, holding that in every rank there was a large majority in favour of the South. In the higher circles none would dispute this, and as to the working men, they were not so easily deceived as some imagined. Time after time deputations of working men had come forward to protest against the colour given to their opinions, and to urge meetings in favour of the South. This agitation was not deemed expedient by the friends of the South. They respected the neutrality of this country. But the Federal party had taken another course—they had organised an agitation, and must be met with their own weapons, and he was convinced that, now that a decision had been come to to meet them, they would rue the day when they provoked the contest. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to Lord Wharncliffe for his services in the chair.—At the weekly meeting of the Executive Committee on Monday, the Earl of Derby in the Chair, the Hon. Secretary reported that 562*l*. 0*s*. 4*d*. had been received during the week, and that the balance in the Bank was 283,027*l*. 14*s*. 11*d*. He also presented his monthly report, showing that the total numbers of persons relieved in September by the guardians and relief committees combined had fallen off to 184,625, against 456,786 in January last. Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported that on the 26th ult. there was a decrease of 1221 in the number of persons receiving parochial relief in the 27 unions as compared with the number relieved in the previous week, making a total decrease of 133,339 since the 6th of December last. It was resolved, on the motion of Colonel Wilson Patten, that a further appeal should be made to the public for donations of clothing, which will be especially needed in consequence of the increased number of men who will be engaged upon out-door labour during the winter. Mr. Farnall said there could be no doubt that a very large number would be so employed, for he was informed by a letter from the Poor-Law Board that a million of money had already been applied for under the Public Works Act. Grants were voted to various places to the amount of about 5000*l*.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—On Saturday night, about seven o'clock, a murder was committed in Scotswood Road, one of the most crowded thoroughfares of this town. An Irish pitman called Martin Luskey, who had found work at Elswick colliery, was about to proceed to Sunderland by the train to fetch his wife to his new place of employment. Before the train started he and some of his relations went into a public-house, where they had some drink, and on coming out they met two Irishmen, one of whom was carrying a bandbox and some parcels. Luskey, without any provocation, knocked the bandbox out of the hand of the latter, and it would seem that he and his relatives were inclined to ill-use him, when his companion stepped up, and a fight ensued. One of them was knocked down, and on his getting up again Luskey was dreadfully stabbed in the neck. He was taken to a chemist's shop, and was immediately attended by a surgeon, who found that he had been stabbed about two inches below the ear, the wound being three inches deep, and he died upon the floor of the shop a few minutes after he was taken in. The man who committed the murder escaped, but his companion who was carrying the bandbox, a man called M'Gurk, has made a statement to the police that the name of the murderer is Terence Quin. The police have gained other information which is expected to lead to his speedy apprehension.

The Galway Line.—The Galway Packet Company have been again unfortunate. The Adriatic, which arrived on Monday after a voyage of 12 days, was detained 40 hours, when only 800 miles from Galway, by an accident to her steampipe. She brought 19 mail bags and 69 passengers, but did not land her mails till too late to catch the Kingstown packet for England. Her news however was all anticipated by the Scotia, which arrived on Friday in 8½ days, with 100 mail bags and 121 passengers.

Social Science Meeting at Edinburgh.—The seventh annual meeting of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science was opened in Edinburgh on Wednesday evening, when the inaugural address was delivered in the Free Church Assembly Hall by Lord Brougham, President of the Association. At the close of the address, which fills upwards of five columns of the daily papers, the Lord-Advocate moved, and the Right Hon. Joseph Napier seconded, a vote of thanks to his lordship, which was carried by acclamation. Mr. Hastings then read the annual report of the Council. The Right Hon. C. B. Adderley moved the approval, which was seconded by Lord Ardmillan, and carried. The Secretary reported that 2500 tickets had been issued. Prince Alfred attended the meeting, and was received with great cheering. The sectional meetings began on Thursday, and will continue until Thursday next. The presidential addresses in the different departments were to be delivered as follows;—Thursday morning, Jurisprudence—Lord Curriehill; Friday, Education—Mr. Nassau W. Senior; Saturday, Punishment and Reformation—Lord Neaves; Monday, Public Health—Professor Christison; Tuesday, Social Economy—Right Hon. Sir John M'Neill, G.C.B.; and Wednesday, Trade and International Law—Judge Longfield. After the addresses departmental meetings were to be held in the Law Courts and Free Assembly Hall. Conversazioni were to be held in the University, the museum and hall of the Royal College of Surgeons, and in the National Gallery, on the evenings of the 8th, 9th, and 12th. A working men's meeting, for which 34,000 applications had been made for the 3500 tickets, was to be held in the Corn Exchange last evening, under the presidency of Lord Brougham; and on the 13th the association dinner will take place in the Music Hall. The concluding general meeting will take place in the Church of Scotland Assembly Hall on Wednesday next, the 14th inst.

Mr. Gladstone in the Highlands.—On Saturday last the Chancellor of the Exchequer honoured Mr. Begg, of the Royal Lochnagar Distillery, with a visit, and inspected the works and operations in the malting, mashing, and distillation as carried on at his works, expressing himself much pleased with what he had seen, as well as with the quality of the whiskey which he tasted.

Edinburgh University.—It is announced that Sir David Baxter has funded 3000*l.* for the purpose of establishing two scholarships in the University of Edinburgh, of the value of 60*l.* each per annum.

Railways.

Opening of the Kent Coast.—On Saturday the Government Inspector gave his certificate for the opening of the Kent Coast branch of the London, Chatham, and Dover to Margate and Ramsgate. The line was accordingly opened on Monday for public traffic. It runs along the Kentish coast from Faversham to Herne Bay, Birchington, Margate, Broadstairs, and Ramsgate, and shortens the distance from London to the latter places by 27 miles.

Collision on the Great Northern.—A serious collision of a passenger-train with a coal-train took place at the Huntingdon station, on Thursday evening, the 1st inst. The up Manchester express, which goes past this station without stopping, when about a mile or a mile and a half distant, slackened its speed on account of the danger signals being displayed, but after some little time, the signals showing "all right," the driver put on the steam with the intention of passing through the station. The train had only proceeded a few yards beyond the platform when it came into collision with a coal-train shunting, and smashed a number of the trucks and a break van. One lady passenger had some of her teeth knocked out by the shock, the guard was cut near the eye, and many of the passengers were bruised, but none were seriously hurt.

Obituary.

The Archbishop of Dublin died at noon on Thursday at his country residence, Roebuck House, near Dublin, in his 77th year. His Grace the Right Hon. and Most Rev. Richard Whately, D.D., Archbishop of Dublin and Bishop of Glendalough and Kildare, Chancellor of the Order of St. Patrick, and a Privy Councillor in Ireland, was the fourth son of the Rev. Joseph Whately, D.D., of Nonsuch Park, Surrey, a prebendary of Bristol, by the daughter of William Plumer, Esq., of Ware Park, Herts, and was born in Cavendish Square in 1787. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where he was contemporary with Dr. Newman, Bishop Coplestone, Dr. Arnold, and Dr. Pusey. He took high honours in classics and mathematics, and in 1810 obtained the university prize for an English Essay. In the following year he obtained a fellowship in his college, which he retained till his marriage in 1821. His connection with the university itself, however, was not broken by that event, nor even by his appointment to the rectory of Halesworth in 1822. He was appointed Principal of St. Alban's Hall in 1825, and on the establishment of a chair of Political Economy, in 1830, Dr. Whately was appointed Professor; this last appointment, however, he only held for a short time, as Earl Grey in the following year selected him as the successor of Dr. Magee in the Archbishopric of Dublin. Long before this time his fame had been established as one of the ablest writers of the day. Among his most important works were "Essays on Some of the Peculiarities of the Christian Religion," "Essays on Some of the Difficulties in the Writings of St. Paul," "Errors of Romanism traced to their Foundation in Human Nature," "Kingdom of Christ Delineated," "Elements of Logic," "Elements of Rhetoric," "Thoughts on Secondary Punishments," "Lectures on Political Economy," "Transportation," "The Kingdom of Christ," "Introductory Lectures on St. Paul's Epistles," "Cautions for the Times," and various papers in the Edinburgh, Quarterly, and other Reviews. The Archbishop was also well known as the chief promoter of the system of National Education in Ireland, and acted as one of the Commissioners till 1853. His Grace married in 1821 the daughter of William Pope, Esq., of Hillingdon. One of his sons is Archdeacon of Glendalough, Chancellor of St. Patrick's Cathedral, and Vicar of Bray. The province of Dublin includes the five dioceses of Ossory, Ferns and Leighlin, Limerick, Ardfert and Aghadoe, Cork, Cloyne and Ross, Cashel, Waterford and Emly, and Killaloe, Kilfenora, Clonfert, and Kilmacduagh. The diocese itself is made up of the counties of Dublin, Kildare, and Wicklow, with some part of Wexford, Queen's county, and King's county. The annual income attached to the archbishopric is 8000*l.*

Lord Sinclair died on the 30th ult. at Pilmuir, near Torquay, at the advanced age of 95. He was born at Edinburgh in 1768, and was the 12th who bore the title, which was created in 1489. He succeeded his father in 1776, and married first the only daughter of Mr. James Chisholm, of Chisholm, and second, a daughter of Mr. Alexander Chatto, of Main House, Roxburghshire. His lordship was formerly a lieut.-colonel in the 15th Foot, from which he retired in 1802, and for many years was one of the representative peers of Scotland. He was a deputy-lieutenant of Haddingtonshire and Berwickshire. The 8th baron obtained an extension of the patent to the heirs male whatsoever of his father, but the ninth, tenth, and eleventh barons never assumed the title. The late lord was confirmed in his right to the peerage by the House of Lords in 1782. He is succeeded by his son, the Hon. James Sinclair, formerly a captain in the Grenadier Guards.

Lady Katherine Wigram died on the 30th ult., at St. Mary's Isle, Kirkcudbrightshire, in her 47th year. She was the youngest of the two daughters of the fourth Earl of Selkirk, by the only daughter of Mr. James Wedderburn Colville, and was consequently sister of the present peer. In 1849 her ladyship married Mr. Loftus Tottenham Wigram.

Lady Sophia Giubilei died on the 30th ult. after a long and painful illness. She was the daughter of the first Marquis of Bristol, and was twice married, first to Mr. William Howe Wyndham, of Felbrigg Hall, by whom she had Mr. William Frederick Wyndham, whose name has been so often before the public; and secondly to Signor Giubilei.

Admiral Edward Barnard died at Hipswell Lodge, Richmond, Yorkshire, on the 5th inst., in his 82d year. He entered the navy in 1797, and in the following year assisted in capturing two Dutch frigates off the Texel. In 1801, he assisted in taking the Dedaigneuse, 36, French frigate, off Cape Finisterre, and in 1805 joined the Achille, 74, in which he was employed in Lord Collingwood's blockading squadron before Cadiz, participated at the battle of Trafalgar, and afterwards took possession of the Berwick, 74, in which he remained until wrecked in the six days' gale that ensued. He was confirmed as lieutenant of the Achille in 1806, and in her was present at the pursuit and capture of the four French frigates from Rochefort, besides contributing to the bombardment of Flushing in 1809, and sharing in arduous boat service at the defence of Cadiz in 1810. In 1811 and 1812, he served in the Mediterranean and Channel, and off Toulon, and took part in the attacks on the French fleet in 1813 and 1814. From 1816 until 1820, he was employed on the East India station in command of the Bacchus, 18, and Conway, 26. From 1833 to 1834 he commanded the Ocean, 81, at Sheerness; and in 1839 the Hercules, 74, in which he conveyed troops from the West Indies to North America, and afterwards to Lisbon; and from 1840 to 1843 he commanded the Cambridge, 78, employed during the operations on the coast of Syria and the blockade of Alexandria. He accepted retirement in 1846, and became full admiral in 1862.

Sir William Bellairs died on the 2d inst. He was son of Mr. Abel Walford Bellairs, of Uffington, Lincolnshire, and was born in 1793. From 1811 to 1819 he served in the 15th Hussars, took part in the campaigns of 1813 and 1814 in the Peninsula, and was present at the battles of Vittoria, the Pyrenees, Pampeluna, Orthes, Tarbes, and Toulouse. He also served in the campaign of 1815, and had a horse killed under him in the retreat from Quatre Bras, and two wounded at the battle of Waterloo. In 1837 he was appointed exon of the Yeomen of the Guard, which he held up to 1849. He married, in 1822, the daughter and heir of Mr. Edmund Hooke, of Mulbarton Lodge, Norfolk.

Mr. Samuel George Smith, of Lacombe Park, Herts, the head of the banking firm of Messrs. Smith, Payne, & Smiths, died on the 4th inst. at Brighton, in his 74th year, from the effects of a recent accident, from which he never properly rallied.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Oct. 10.

Vegetables and most kinds of Fruit in season, with the exception of Peaches, which are scarcer, continue plentiful. Late Plums may be had in great abundance. Of Grapes and Pine Apples the supply is also sufficient for the demand. Of Melons there is a good stock of both English and foreign varieties. There is also a good supply of Louise Bonne of Jersey, Marie Louise, and Gansel's Bergamot Pears. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin Apples have also arrived from Jersey. Kent Cobs and Filberts are now coming in in good condition, and for the Cobs a fair demand is realised at from 60s. to 65s. per 100 lbs. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Asters, Marigolds, Calceolarias, Mignonette, and Roses.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Oct. 5.

The number of Beasts is smaller than on Monday last, consequently trade is more active for the best qualities at an advance on Thursday's quotations. Inferior descriptions, however, are not selling any better. The supply of Sheep is small, so also is the demand, and it is very difficult to obtain any advance. Choice Calves are rather dearer than on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 2450 Beasts, 6310 Sheep, 112 Calves, and 30 Pigs; from Spain, 51 Beasts; from Ireland, 890 and 2406 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Thursday, Oct. 8.

The number of Beasts is not quite so large as on Thursday last; trade is however very dull, and they cannot all be sold. A few choicest qualities maintain Monday's quotations. The supply of sheep is also rather small. The demand is very limited, and many remain unsold. Good Calves being scarce are sold rather dearer. Our foreign supply consists of 390 Beasts, 2020 Sheep, and 294 Calves. Milch Cows, 90.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Oct. 5.

The supply of English Wheat to this morning's market was moderate, and was taken up slowly at the rates of this day week. For foreign there was a retail demand at about the prices current of that day. Malting Barley was 1s. per qr. cheaper, other descriptions were unaltered in value. Beans and Peas brought late rates. The Oat trade was heavy, and new Corn rather cheaper. Flour was a slow sale, without alteration in value.

Friday, Oct. 9.

The weather during the past week has been unsettled and showery, but somewhat finer in Scotland, where the harvest is now nearly completed. The usual trade in Wheat has been inactive, and sales slow at previous rates, excepting at Liverpool and Leith, where more firmness was evinced. A fair extent of business has, however, been transacted in cargoes off the coast, and more c. f. i. sales from the Baltic have been effected, the latter at prices scarcely obtainable of late. Barley has been difficult of sale, at a decline of fully 1s. per qr., excepting the finest malting qualities. Peas were neglected with a downward tendency of prices. Beans commanded more attention, and Egyptians are 6d. per qr. dearer. The value of Oats continues to decline. Flour of fine quality and in perfect condition meets a ready sale; small quantities are beginning to arrive from France; unsweet and secondary are difficult of disposal. Since Friday last 45 vessels have been reported off the coast. Wheat and Maize were a little improving for two days, but relapsed again, and close quiet at last week's prices. Barley and Beans are rather lower. In Paris (Oct. 8), Flour has declined fully 1s. per 280 lbs. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 30s. 2d. per 280 lbs. The present stock is estimated at 10,200 cwt. Only a few sales have been made in Wheat at about 9d. per qr. lower prices, buyers insisting upon a further reduction. The arrivals of English Barley this week have been good, and of other English grain moderate. The supplies of foreign Wheat, Barley, and Oats are large, and of Flour good. The attendance at this morning's market was very small. Both English and foreign Wheats were neglected, but we observe no alteration in prices. Barley, Beans, and Peas brought Monday's quotations. The Oat trade was heavy, at a decline of 6d. per qr.

Liverpool, Oct. 6.—With fair attendance of both town and country millers and dealers at our corn exchange this morning Wheat met a tolerably good consumptive inquiry at the full prices of last market day. Flour was neglected and prices irregular. Indian Corn was held for 3d. per qr. advance, which checked the demand. New Oats are down 1d. per bushel, and Oatmeal 6d. per load. Beans, Peas, and Barley are each firm at late rates. The market closes steady for Wheat.

Friday, Oct. 9.—The market was moderately attended, and the general tone remains unchanged since Tuesday. Wheat and Flour quiet. Indian Corn and Egyptian Beans have undergone no change. Other articles dull.

Larger sizes of any of the above.

By an improved and new action of the handle, this Pump is so constructed that a great deal of friction is avoided; an air vessel is secured, and by introducing a brass lining into the barrel, with brass bucket and sucker, many of the objections to iron pumps are overcome. By this Pump ONE MAN WILL FORCE THE WATER in a continuous stream TO A HEIGHT OF 50 FEET.

When mounted on a barrow it forms a cheap, useful, and portable Fire Engine or Garden and Field Irrigator. The simplicity of its construction enables it to be offered to the public at a less price than any other Pump of equal capabilities.

News of the Week.

BY the Australian Mail we have unsatisfactory accounts of the progress of the Maori outbreak in New Zealand. All the tribes in the Northern Island, headed by the warlike Waikatos, are in open rebellion, and a native army, estimated by the colonists as numbering 7500 men, is prepared to take the field. The city of Auckland, with the country for 40 miles around it, is one vast camp; and the mountain ranges in the rear are swarming with armed men who have commenced hostilities by the barbarous murder of defenceless settlers. These atrocities have thoroughly roused the colony to the dangers of the crisis, and both the Government and people are preparing for war on a large scale. The troops under General CAMERON, in their first engagement with the natives, have defeated them with the loss of seven or eight of their leading chiefs; while the Volunteers and Militia of the province already under arms amount to 4000 men, exclusive of a permanent corps of colonial cavalry. Sir GEORGE GREY has also appealed to the neighbouring colonies for assistance, and regiments of volunteers are raising in Victoria, New South Wales, Tasmania, and South Australia, under liberal arrangements of pay and land bounties from the New Zealand Government.

The French papers state that the Cabinet has not judged it expedient to accede at present to the wish of Prince CZARTORYSKI to recognise the Polish insurgents as belligerents. It is officially announced that the Legislative Chambers will assemble on the 5th of November. M. BILLAULT, the Minister of State, who has hitherto sustained with great ability the post of speaking Minister, died on Tuesday last at Nantes. His death, in the words of the Moniteur, is "an immense loss to the State as well as to the Emperor."

The KING OF PRUSSIA returned suddenly to Berlin on Wednesday to attend a Council of Ministers which is said to have been rendered necessary by foreign affairs. A Royal decree has been issued, directing special services in all the churches on the 16th inst., to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the battle of Leipsic.

A despatch from Vienna informs us that the Transylvanian Diet adjourned on Tuesday, after resolving to send deputies to represent the country in the Austrian Reichsrath. This is considered an important step towards the union of the Empire under the new constitution, and is the cause of much rejoicing at Vienna.

Accounts from Athens state that the National Assembly of Greece and the people generally have received the resolution of the Ionian Parliament in favour of the annexation with great enthusiasm.

From the United States we learn that General ROSENCRANS has been reinforced by two corps from General MEADE's army, and that his position is so strong that he can only be dislodged by a regular siege, which General BRAGG, who is fortifying Mission Ridge, gives no signs of attempting. The Confederates have occupied Knoxville, and General BURNSIDE is retiring to Cumberland Gap. He appears to have fallen into disgrace with his Government, and it is said that he has been superseded by General HOOKER.

The Custom House authorities at Liverpool received instructions from the Government on Friday to seize the two steam rams in the building-yard of the Messrs. LAIRD at Birkenhead. The broad arrow was accordingly affixed to them in the course of the day.

Home News.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Wednesday week the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Louis of Hesse and Princess Helena, drove to Alt-na-Guithasach, where they lunched. On their return home in the evening the coachman mistook the road, and the carriage turned on its side, by which the Queen and Princesses were thrown out, but were merely slightly bruised, and rode home on hill ponies. On Thursday morning the Queen walked and drove, accompanied by the Crown Princess and Princess Louis of Hesse, and again in the afternoon, accompanied by Princess Helena. The Crown Princess of Prussia and Princess Louis of Hesse drove to Invercauld, and honoured Mrs. Farquharson by a visit. On Friday morning the Queen went out, accompanied by Princess Helena. In the afternoon Her Majesty drove out. Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse went out riding. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia lunched with Her Majesty. Princess Helena dined with the Crown Prince and Princess at Abergeldie. Mr. Gladstone left the Castle. On Saturday morning the Queen went out, accompanied by Princess Louis of Hesse. In the afternoon the Queen, accompanied by the Crown Princess of Prussia, drove to the falls of the Garrvhalt. The Crown Princess lunched with her Majesty. Prince William of Hesse arrived at the Castle on a visit to the Queen. On Sunday morning the Queen, Prince and Princess Louis and Prince William of Hesse, and the Royal family, attended Divine service in the Castle. The Rev. Norman Macleod, one of the Queen's chaplains, officiated. Princess Helena and the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia attended Divine service in the parish church of Crathie. On Monday morning the Queen went out, attended by Lady Churchill. In the afternoon the Queen, accompanied by the Crown Princess of Prussia and Princess Helena, drove to Alt-na-Guithasach. Princess Louisa went out riding. On Tuesday morning the Queen, accompanied by Prince and Princess Louis and Prince William of Hesse, the Princesses Helena and Louisa, Princes Arthur and Leopold, went to Aberdeen, and witnessed the uncovering of the Prince Consort's Memorial. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia met the Queen at the Aboyne station, and travelled with her Majesty to Aberdeen. Prince Alfred arrived from Holyrood, and met her Majesty at Aberdeen. After the ceremony the Queen returned to Balmoral, where she arrived at half-past six o'clock, and, though much fatigued by the exertions and trying emotions of the day, her Majesty has not suffered in health. Prince William of Hesse took leave of her Majesty at Aberdeen, and returned with Prince Alfred to Edinburgh, where he will remain for some time on a visit to his Royal Highness. Sir George Grey arrived at Balmoral as the Minister in attendance upon her Majesty.

INAUGURATION OF THE PRINCE CONSORT MEMORIAL AT ABERDEEN.—The ceremony of inaugurating the memorial statue of the Prince Consort took place at Aberdeen on Tuesday in presence of her Majesty and other members of the Royal family. Though the day was very wet, the ceremony excited great interest, as being the first occasion on which her Majesty has appeared in public since her widowhood. The statue, which was subscribed for by the city and county of Aberdeen, is of bronze, by Baron Marochetti. It is placed upon a polished granite pedestal, and represents the Prince seated, wearing the robe of the Thistle over a field marshal's uniform, holding in one hand a roll, and in the other the field-marshal's hat. Her Majesty arrived by special train from Balmoral at 1.30, and was received by the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Saltoun, Mr. Alexander Anderson, Lord Provost, and the city and University officials. Prince Alfred had arrived from Edinburgh by a previous train; and was accompanied by her Majesty, Princes Arthur and Leopold, Princesses Helena and Louisa, the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, and the Prince and Princess of Hesse. Sir George Grey was the Minister of State in attendance. A procession of carriages was formed to the centre of the city, where the statue stands. Previous to uncovering it, Mr. Anderson, the Lord Provost, presented an address from the committee of subscribers, in which they referred to the honour conferred on that part of the kingdom by the annual presence of the illustrious prince, and to the fact that the city a few years ago was signally favoured by the exertion of his great talents as President of the British Association. To this Address her Majesty made the following reply:—

"Your loyal and affectionate Address has deeply touched me, and I thank you for it from my heart. It is with feelings I should vainly seek words to express that I determined to attend here to-day to witness the uncovering of the statue which will record to future times the love and respect of the people of this county and city for my great and beloved husband. But I could not reconcile it to myself to remain at Balmoral while such a tribute was being paid to his memory, without making an exertion to assure you personally of the deep and heartfelt sense I entertain of your kindness and affection, and, at the same time, to proclaim in public the unbounded reverence and admiration, the devoted love, that fill my heart for him whose loss must throw a lasting gloom over all my future life. Never can I forget the circumstances to which you so feelingly allude—that it was in this city he delivered his remarkable address to the British Association, only four years ago; and that in this country we had for so many years been in the habit of spending some of the happiest days of our lives."

The Provost then, by desire of the Queen, knelt down, when her Majesty conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. The Royal party a few minutes afterwards, stepped out upon the platform within 20 yards of the statue, and Principal Campbell having offered up prayer, the statue was uncovered. Her Majesty and the Royal children looked on the figure with a fond and eager gaze which touched all who were present. In about five minutes after the unveiling her Majesty bowed to the vast assembly, and with the Royal family re-entered the Club-house. Having partaken of lunch the Royal party drove back to the railway station, and left for Balmoral soon after 3. With a feeling of sympathy which it was thought would, under the circumstances, be acceptable to the Queen, the crowd along the whole line kept a respectful silence throughout, and with the exception of uncovering as her Majesty's carriage drove past, and while she remained looking at the statue, there was no demonstration of any kind whatever. Her Majesty frequently acknowledged these silent tokens of loyalty and sympathy as she drove slowly along.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—On Friday morning the Prince, accompanied by the King of Greece, went to Richmond Park, and had some shooting with the Duke of Cambridge. The Princess went out in a carriage in the forenoon, and took a drive in an open carriage in the afternoon. The Mayor of Coventry and Miss Soden attended at Marlborough House, and presented to the Princess the marriage gifts of the corporation of that town. The Prince visited Prince William of Hesse at Thomas's Hotel. Prince William afterwards paid a visit to the Princess at Marlborough House. In the evening the Prince had a dinner party to meet the King of Greece. On Saturday Prince and Princess Christian, with Prince Frederick and Princess Dagmar, arrived on a visit to their Royal Highnesses. The Duke of Cambridge paid a visit to Prince and Princess Christian after their arrival. In the afternoon the King of the Greeks and the Prince of Wales honoured the establishment of Messrs Garrard, in the Haymarket, with a visit. The Princess of Wales, the Princess Christian of Denmark, and the Princess Dagmar took a drive in an open carriage. The King of Greece, the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian, and Prince Frederick, rode on horseback. On Sunday morning the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Prince and Princess Christian of Denmark, Prince Frederick, and the Princess Dagmar attended divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. In the afternoon the Prince and Princess of Wales, the King of Greece, the Prince and Princess Christian, Prince Frederick, and the Princess Dagmar of Denmark, went to Kew, and in the evening dined with the Duke of Cambridge at Gloucester House. On Monday morning a deputation of the Council of the Society of Arts waited on the Prince of Wales and presented an address. The King of Greece, the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian of Denmark, and Prince Frederick, rode on horseback. The Princess of Wales, the Princess Christian, and Princess Dagmar, took a carriage drive. The Duke of Cambridge paid a visit to the Princess Christian at Marlborough House. A deputation of the Entertainment Committee of the Corporation of the City of London had an interview with the Prince and Princess of Wales, and presented a memento of their visit to the city on the 8th of June. In the afternoon the King of Greece, the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian of Denmark, and Prince Frederick, went to the Crystal Palace. The Princess of Wales, the Princess Christian, and the Princess Dagmar took a drive in an open carriage. In the evening the King of Greece, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Prince and Princess Christian, Prince Frederick, and Princess Dagmar honoured the performance at the Covent Garden Opera with their presence. On Tuesday morning the King of Greece, the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian and Prince Frederick left town for Newmarket, to witness the races. The Princess of Wales, the Princess Christian and Princess Dagmar took a drive in an open carriage. On Wednesday morning the King of Greece left Marlborough House for Paris. The Prince of Wales and Prince Frederick rode on horseback. The Princess of Wales and Princess Christian took a carriage drive in the morning, and in the afternoon took an airing in an open carriage with the Princess Dagmar. In the afternoon the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian, with the Princess Dagmar, honoured Mr. Theodore Jensen with a visit at his studio in Berners Street, to view his full-length portrait of the Prince and Princess of Wales in their State robes. The Duke of Cambridge paid a visit to Prince Christian, who visited the Russian and French Ambassadors at their respective residences. In the evening the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian, Prince Frederick and the Princess Dagmar, honoured the performance at the Haymarket Theatre with their presence. On Thursday the Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by Prince and Princess Christian, Prince Frederick, and Princess Dagmar, left town for Sandringham. The Royal party travelled to Wolferton by a special train on the Great Eastern Railway, and arrived at Sandringham soon after 3 o'clock, having performed the journey in three hours. It is understood that the Prince and Princess will stay at Sandringham for about six weeks.

THE KING OF GREECE on Saturday received deputations from the Greeks of London, Liverpool, and Manchester, and also from the English Philhellenic Committee. On Sunday his Majesty attended Divine service at the Greek Church in London Wall, when a Te Deum was sung in his honour. Earl Russell, as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Mr. A. Westenholz, Consul-General of Denmark, and Baron Brunnow, the Russian Ambassador, had an audience of his Majesty. In the afternoon the King visited the French and Russian Ambassadors at their residences. On Monday his Majesty visited the Crystal Palace. On Tuesday he attended Newmarket races, and on Wednesday morning took leave of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and left town for Paris. The Prince of Wales, Prince Christian, and Prince Frederick accompanied his Majesty to the Victoria station, whence he travelled by the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway to Dover.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF DENMARK, father and mother of the Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Prince Frederick and Princess Dagmar, landed at Dover on Saturday afternoon, and travelled to London by a special train on the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway. On their arrival at the Victoria terminus their Royal Highnesses were met by the Prince and Princess of Wales and the King of Greece, who escorted them to Marlborough House.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday at the official residence of Lord Palmerston in Downing Street.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—On Wednesday Parliament was further prorogued to the 1st of December next. The Tamworth election terminated on Monday in the return of Mr. John Peel, by a majority of 57 over Mr. Cowper, the numbers being 224 to 167.

THE ARMY.—The Colonelcy of the 98th Regiment, vacant by the death of General Darling, has been conferred on Major-General Wynyard, C.B. It is stated that the court martial on Lieut.-Colonel Crawley, of the Inniskilling Dragoons, will take place at Aldershot. A party of 37 officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the regiment arrived at the camp from India on Friday.

Foreign.

France.—The King of Greece arrived in Paris on Wednesday evening. A grand dinner was given at St. Cloud on Thursday evening in honour of his Majesty. The Moniteur announces the meeting of the Senate and Legislative Body on the 5th of November. The Emperor presided at a Council of Ministers on Monday, and was to preside at another yesterday. His Majesty on Friday visited the works in connection with the new Halles, now near completion, and was received with enthusiastic cheering. His Majesty also paid a visit to the new boulevard near the Rue Lafayette, in course of construction. On Monday the Emperor paid a visit to Marshal d'Ornano, Governor of the Invalides, who was at the point of death. The Marshal said, "Sire, we shall not see one another again till we meet in heaven." The Emperor was greatly affected on leaving the Marshal, who died the next day. He was the last survivor of the generals of division of the first empire. M. Billault, the Minister of State, died on Tuesday morning, at his estate near Nantes; he was born at Vannes in November, 1805, and is universally regarded as the greatest Ministerial loss which the Empire could have sustained. The Moniteur of Wednesday thus alludes to his services:—

"The death of M. Billault causes a sorrowful emotion throughout France. His decease is an immense loss to the State, as well as to the Emperor, whom he served with equal devotedness, talent, and eloquence."

An Imperial decree published on Thursday announces that in consideration of the eminent services rendered to the Government by M. Billault, his obsequies will be celebrated at the cost of the public Treasury. The Emperor was not present at the opening of the Italian Opera on account of M. Billault's death. The post of Minister of State, vacant by the death of M. Billault, will, it is said, be filled by M. Baroche or M. Rouher, but the Emperor has manifested no intention to take any decision in the matter before the funeral of M. Billault. Count Walewski had an interview with the Emperor on Thursday, and it is asserted that M. Dupin has been summoned by telegraph to Paris. The Duke de Morny is also expected. General Montebello was received by the Emperor on Thursday. His Majesty was to receive the Mexican deputation yesterday or to-day. The following diplomatic appointments have been made:—As French Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, M. de la Tour d'Auvergne, who will be replaced at Rome by M. de Sartiges. Baron de Malaret will fill the place of the latter at Turin. The Marquis Ferrière de Levayer will go as Ambassador to Brussels, M. Raiset to Hanover, and the Marquis d'Astorme to Nassau. The Emperor has addressed the following letter to Baron Gros:—

"At a time when you intended to retire from public service, your devotion induced you to accept the office of Ambassador at London. You have thus acquired fresh rights to my good will. Circumstances now permit me to relieve you of this post, but, before giving you a successor, I wish to say how glad I have been to crown your long and honourable career by a testimony of my confidence."

La France of Wednesday evening says that the new diplomatic nominations involve no change in the policy of France towards England, Rome, and Italy. The Duchess de Montebello, who has long suffered severely from cancer in the breast, died a few days since at St. Petersburg. The Duke will shortly leave St. Petersburg for Paris with his children. The Constitutionnel of Friday, in an article signed by M. Limayrac, says that the negotiations promoted by France have succeeded in placing Poland under the protection of Europe, and that such a policy is neither ineffectual nor unfruitful. In another article on Sunday, M. Limayrac attaches serious importance to Earl Russell's speech at Blairgowrie. "If," says the writer, "England proposes to abolish the treaties of 1815 relative to Poland, the reply of France is known beforehand. Austria, however, may require certain guarantees. We believe the treaties of 1815, relative to Poland, have never been so near being annulled. They are not yet buried, but they are dead." The Courrier du Dimanche says that the Cabinet of the Tuileries has not judged it possible to accede at present to the wishes of Prince Czartorysky. The trial trip of the Cherbourg squadron of iron-clads is said to have been a perfect failure, and the commission have come to the conclusion that they are only adapted for smooth water. The two ships of the line were least injured, but both they and the three frigates rolled fearfully, particularly La Normandie, and the sea washed the decks in continuous streams. It was impossible to keep the portholes open, and consequently no trial could be made of the guns. It is said that the fleet will shortly leave Brest on another cruise to continue its experiments.

Spain.—The Queen of Spain has invited the Empress of the French to visit Madrid, and on the 17th inst. will give a grand ball in her honour. Her Imperial Majesty left Seville on Saturday morning for Cadiz, and on Thursday embarked at Cadiz for Valencia. Although travelling incognita, her Hajesty met with a cordial reception from the populace. The result of the elections in Madrid and the provinces has been favourable to the Government. The Minister of Finance has resigned for reasons unconnected with politics, and Señor Lescioli has been appointed his successor. The Budget for 1864 of the Departments of War, Marine, and the Colonies will show an increase of 80,000,000 reals. The Pueblo publishes an article advocating the abolition of slavery in the Spanish colonies by means of an indemnity to the slave-owners. A very serious accident has occurred on the railway between Barcelona and Granollers. As a train coming from France, consisting of nine carriages, was crossing a bridge over a torrent, the bridge gave way, and the locomotive and seven carriages were precipitated into the water. Two of the carriages remained suspended from the broken bridge. Many dead bodies have already been drawn out; others have disappeared, having been carried away by the current. There are also many persons more or less injured.

Portugal.—The health of the Queen and the young prince is as satisfactory as could be desired. The King, on the occasion of the birth of his son and heir, published two decrees of amnesty as extensive as possible. One of them revokes the exceptions made in that granted on the occasion of his marriage, and which maintained the punishments pronounced against certain insurgents of Braga. These two measures have produced an excellent effect in Portugal.

Denmark and Sweden.—The King arrived at Copenhagen on Thursday evening unexpectedly, from Schleswig. The Dagbladet states that the gravity of the political situation is the cause of his Majesty's arrival. Important notes are said to have been received from England and France. It also states that Sweden will shortly sign the treaty of alliance with Denmark. The Ministry were prepared to hold a privy council immediately on the King's arrival.

Belgium.—The King of the Belgians arrived at Baden-Baden on the 8th inst., and on the next morning paid a visit to the King and Queen of Prussia. On Thursday King Leopold left Baden for Switzerland, intending to pass a short time at his villa on the Lake of Como, and then return to Brussels.

Coburg.—Among the papers laid before the Coburg-Gotha Landtag, which has just assembled, is an act bearing the signature of the Prince of Wales, renouncing the Crown of the Duchies for himself and male descendants, so long as his brothers and their male descendants exist in a direct line. The document is accompanied by another from King Leopold confirming it as the guardian of Prince Alfred and his brothers. This renunciation is in accordance with the provisions of a Gotha law, for which the assent of the Prince Consort was expressly obtained.

Prussia.—The King of Prussia was expected to attend a festival at the Cathedral of Cologne on Wednesday, but a telegram was received on Monday from the Marshal of the Court, announcing that business which could not be postponed, would require the King's presence at Berlin on that day. His Majesty accordingly, after paying a hurried visit to the Cathedral on Tuesday to see the progress of the works, returned direct to Berlin, and presided at a Council of Ministers. A deputation from the parish of Steingrund, in Silesia, has presented an address to the King. His Majesty in reply said:—

"The parish should elect men who would support the Ministers in the execution of the task he had confided to them. An inimical bearing towards the Government was incompatible with fidelity to the Sovereign. The work with the carrying out of which he had intrusted his Ministers was the maintenance of the present organisation of the army. Tranquillity would be re-established in the country, and the execution of his intentions, to forward the progressive development of legislation on a constitutional basis, would thereby be assured."

Austria.—It is asserted that Austria has declared her intention to insist on the maintenance of the treaties of 1815, but that she will join any protest of France and England against the violation of these treaties by Russia. In the sitting of the Upper House on Wednesday a resolutien was passed annulling the laws excluding Jews from practising as notaries in Austria. In the sitting of the Lower House on Thursday the Minister of Finance brought in a Bill for a new loan of 96,000,000 florins, the proceeds of which are to be applied to cover the deficit, to assist in relieving the distress in Hungary by a grant of 30,000 florins, and to withdraw from circulation 12 millions of 10-kreutzer notes and 20 millions of Salt-mine notes.

Transylvania.—In the sitting of the Transylvanian Diet on Friday all the members who took part in the debate were in favour of sending deputies to the Austrian Reichsrath, with the reservation, however, that the electoral law be maintained in accordance with the constitution. The debate terminated in the adoption of a resolution to send deputies to the Reichsrath. The members separated with cheers for the King of Hungary and the Constitution of the Empire. The election of deputies was to take place on Saturday.

Russia.—Accounts from Constantinople state that the Russian Minister in that city had declared to the Porte that any recognition of the Poles as belligerents by Turkey, would be considered by Russia as a declaration of war between the two Powers. The news that the Russians are constructing twelve gunboats in the Black Sea is confirmed.

Poland.—An Imperial decree has detached the government of Augustowo and the district of Lomza from the Kingdom of Poland, and has declared them henceforth incorporated provinces of the Russian Empire. An Aide-de-Camp of General Mouravieff has already arrived in Suwalki to assume the office of Governor. In consequence of the protest of the English Consul at Warsaw, General Berg has released Mr. Evans from payment of the fine of 15,000 roubles, and granted him permission to re-open his factory. The execution of his workman, William Alger, for the alleged manufacture of grenades, took place on the 8th inst., and was a painful scene. As usual the Russians aimed badly. After firing two volleys, which covered the unfortunate man with wounds, none of which were fatal, a sergeant ended his sufferings by shooting him with a revolver. The accusation of his having been found with grenades in his pockets is alleged to be false, the so-called grenades being nothing but rivets for iron bedsteads. MM. Massaliki, Silwicz, Joiz, and Wroblewski, all Polish nobles, and Wroblewski's wife, have been shot at Warsaw, the latter on suspicion of being a spy in the interests of the insurgents. In consequence of information received by the police, a search was made on the 11th at the Grabowski Palace, in Warsaw. It is said that arms, cartridges, and uniforms were found on the premises. The proprietor and male inmates were arrested, and the palace surrounded by military. General Mouravieff has superintended the destruction of the village of Ibiany, 12 miles from Kowno, and kindled the flames himself. The inhabitants, numbering upwards of 200 men, women, and children, are to be sent to Siberia. The cause of this terrible deed was the execution by the insurgents of a roskolnik who had committed great atrocities in the village. The National Government has brought the insurgent chiefs Sokolowski and Iskra before a court-martial. They were found guilty of abuse of authority, and sentenced to be shot. Mackiewicz has gained an important victory at Krakinow, in the district of Poniewiecz. The loss of the Poles was small. Fresh detachments of insurgents have been formed near the Galician frontier and in the palatinates of Warsaw and Lublin. Engagements took place in the government of Plock between the insurgents and the Russians on the 10th and 12th inst. The insurgents, led by Kablinsky, Orlik, and Czerny, were defeated, and suffered considerable loss.

Italy.—The Hon. Mr. Elliot on Friday had an interview with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and on Sunday was received by the King, to whom he presented his credentials. Prince Humbert arrived at Naples on Wednesday evening. Salutes were fired by the ships and forts. The King of Bavaria has arrived at Rome, and taken up his residence at the Villa di Malta. General de Montebello left Rome on Sunday morning for Paris, the difficulties between him and the Papal Government having been removed.

Greece.—The National Assembly has received with enthusiasm the resolution of the Ionian Parliament in favour of union with Greece. The National Assembly proceeded in a body to the cathedral, where a Te Deum was performed. The joy of the population is extreme.

Ionian Islands.—The Lord High Commissioner has delivered a speech to the Legislative Assembly, calling upon them to decide with as little delay as possible whether they desire annexation to Greece. In the event of their answer being in favour of annexation, his Excellency states that the following arrangements will be necessary for the completion of that measure.

"1. A resolution in the usual constitutional form, by which, after the cessation of the British protectorate, and until the establishment of the new constitution, his Majesty the King of the Hellenes shall be enabled to exercise in the Ionian States all rights of sovereignty, including those privileges and functions hertofore exercised by the protecting Sovereign, the Lord High Commissioner, and the Most Illustrious the Senate. 2. On the cessation of the payment of the sums heretofore reserved as the contribution for military protection, and as the civil list of the Lord High Commissioner, the reservation as the first charge on the Ionian revenue of 10,000*l.* yearly in augmentation of the civil list of King George. 3. The recognition of all contracts and engagements entered into by or on behalf of the Ionian Government up to this time, and all equitable claims on the same. 4. Provision for the preservation and safeguard of the British cemeteries in that and the other islands. 5 A settlement of the debt of 90,289*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*, due to Great Britain for arrears of military contribution.

Turkey.—The Budget was adopted by the Grand Council on Sunday last. The Levant Herald announces that there is a surplus of 188,794*l.* The secularization of the Vacoufs is again under serious consideration by the Council, and will very probably be carried. The Porte has offered to buy the steam rams which are being built in the Mersey, and Earl Russell is said to be favourable to this solution of the difficulty.

Circassia.—A Polish expedition has successfully disembarked at Vardar, in Circassia.

Syria.—The Kurds in the neighbourhood of Damascus have attacked the Turkish troops, 100 of whose number were killed. The chief of the Zapties, who came to the assistance of the troops, lost 60 men.

Coast of Africa.—Lieutenant-Commander Dolben and Lieutenant Atkinson, of her Majesty's ship Rattlesnake, were drowned on the 1st of September in crossing the bar of Lagos. Mr. Ewbank, midshipman, and three of the crew, clung to the boat and were picked up by a canoe.

India.—Disturbances have occurred on the North-west frontier, but nothing of a serious character has taken place. Notice of appeal has been given in the Burney case. The East Indian Railway is to be opened from Delhi to Calcutta on the 1st of February. Great disappointment is felt in India that Sikhs are not to be sent to New Zealand.

CHINA.—Since the Danish Treaty was signed nothing of consequence has occurred in Pekin. Major Gordon had had some successes over the rebels.

JAPAN.—Official advices from Japan state that the Tycoon had succeeded in escaping from the sort of captivity in which he was held by the Mikado, and had returned to Yeddo. According to the same advices, the Tycoon displayed the most favourable disposition towards Europeans. Much was expected from the effects of the chastisement which the English squadron had gone to inflict upon Prince Satsuma. There is at present no confirmation of the report brought by the Russian war steamer Novich, from Hakodadi to Francisco that the British fleet had been repulsed from Kagosima. According to this report, as the fleet entered the inner harbour an armed Japanese decoy boat drew towards the shore, which was pursued, attacked, and speedily sunk. Masked batteries then opened on the fleet from the shore, riddling the advance vessels before they could get out of range. The report says that the Japanese disabled the greater portion of the fleet, and the remainder retired from the contest.

NEW ZEALAND.—Accounts from New Zealand to the 11th of August, bring tidings of some horrible murders by the Waikatos, and of two severe combats between the troops and the natives. The Waikatos and their allies are in arms to the number of some 7500 in the neighbourhood of Auckland, and for 40 miles to the southward of that capital the country is a vast camp, a general rising of the tribes in the Northern island being apprehended. On the 15th of July General Cameron crossed the Waikato frontier, the natives retreating before him to a position called Kohiroa, which they had previously prepared and covered with rifle pits. Here, on the 17th, the first fight took place. One portion of the troops was detached to outflank the Maories and intercept their retreat, while the rest, headed by the general, stormed the pits under a fire, by which they had two men killed and 10 wounded. The natives were pursued for six miles, and are stated to have suffered a heavy loss, including some chiefs of distinction. Pushing forward, another attempt was made a fortnight later to bring the natives to an engagement at a place called Paparata, where they had a settlement fronted by swamps and a river, and where it was supposed they would hold their ground. The river was bridged over by the Sappers, and the village was at once rushed at but found empty, the Maories retreating to a dense jungle, into which the soldiers followed in single file. Here they beat about in the thick underwood, chasing the fire amid the yells of an antagonist whom they could not come up with or even once see. The Maories were so cautious in keeping at a distance that, notwithstanding their constant fire, they only hit one of our men; but when the troops were withdrawn to the open, they issued forth in considerable numbers out of range of our rifles, to tempt the Pakeha to a repetition of this harassing and fruitless game. On the evening of the 21st of July, the schooner Tuaranga arrived at Auckland from Tuaranga with 32 European and seven native passengers, intimation having been given them by William Thompson to "clear out" in 24 hours, as their lives were in danger, and that he was collecting the natives along the coast, with the intention of prosecuting the war. So immediate and urgent was the danger considered to be that Archdeacon Brown and the old established residents of Tuaranga lost no time in obeying Thompson's warning. The schooner Maupere was to follow the Tuaranga, and the impression was that every settler on the east coast would be compelled to come in. These events were preceded by several murders, denoting a description of warfare which in the end may rival the atrocities committed by Indian mutineers. Two settlers near Drury, a place 15 miles from Auckland, Mr. Meredith and his son, were murdered on the 15th, two days before the fight at Kohiroa, and their bodies frightfully mutilated. Another man who was cutting wood with Mr. Greenacre and two others at Papakura, was murdered by the Maories, and the others only escaped by flight. On the 25th July the natives attacked Captain Calvert's house, on the high ground near the Maori position, on Pukekiweriki, and in the Wairoa district, and shot his son aged 18, while he was endeavouring to get into a place of hiding. On the same day a party of Maories shot Mr. George Cooper, settler at Wairoa, and then lighted his clothes and roasted the body. One of the last outrages committed in the Auckland district was an attack upon an escort party. The natives, who were supposed to belong to friendly tribes, were repulsed with severe loss, the casualties of the British being five killed, eleven wounded, and three missing. This attack was also accompanied with great barbarities on the part of the natives towards the soldiers killed and wounded. The authorities recognise the urgency of the crisis, and have sent requisitions to the Australian colonies and Tasmania for troops, and have despatched Major Pitt and Captain Harrison—the one to Melbourne and the other to Sydney—to enlist volunteers. Before making these applications, Sir George Grey had called out for active service in the disturbed provinces every male between the age of 16 and 40 years, and many others between 40 and 55 years of age were on duty in the towns.

AUSTRALIA.—A telegram from Melbourne, dated August 26, states that large numbers were volunteering there for New Zealand. The Treasurer had announced that three pressing requests had been sent by Sir George Grey for military help. All the imperial troops in the colony—about 250 of the Artillery and the 40th Regiment—were to be sent with the colonial battery of six Armstrong field-pieces. From Hobart Town also we learn that "volunteering for New Zealand is carried on with enthusiasm." At Sydney also a large number was likely to volunteer. A detachment of the 12th Regiment, consisting of 53 rank and file, had embarked for New Zealand on the 19th, and the Colonial Storekeeper had been directed to supply the New Zealand Government with 1000 stand of rifles and 200 breech-loading carbines for the service of the war. A Bill had passed the South Australian Assembly to legalise marriage with a deceased wife's sister.

UNITED STATES.—Official despatches from General Rosencrans of the 1st inst. report the situation of his army as satisfactory. It is asserted by letters from Nashville and by New York and Cincinnati journals that two whole corps from the Army of the Potomac, numbering upwards of 20,000 men, have passed through Cincinnati on their way to reinforce General Rosencrans. The Confederates are attempting to intercept the communications between Nashville and Chattanooga. They have also occupied Knoxville, and compelled General Burnside to fall back to Cumberland Gap. The Southern journals assert that Burnside's junction with General Rosencrans is impossible, that the result of the battles of Chicamauga has put an end to General Rosencrans' campaign in Eastern Tennessee, and that he will eventually be compelled to abandon Chattanooga and fall back to Nashville. General Bragg is fortifying Mission Ridge, and the Confederate troops concentrated in the vicinity of Chattanooga are said to amount to upwards of 135,000 men, of whom General Joseph Johnstone has the supreme command. The responsibility of General Burnside's failure to reinforce General Rosencrans earlier is now attributed to General Halleck, who, it is asserted, only issued the orders for Burnside's advance when it was too late. It is reported however that General Burnside's resignation has now been accepted, and that General Hooker will supersede him. Accounts from General Meade's camp state that the Confederates are in a well fortified position, which they are daily strengthening, on the south bank of the Rapidan, their lines extending from Germania to Burnet's Fords; while a large body of their troops is believed to be concentrating in the lower end of the Shenandoah Valley, but with what purpose has not been divined. The report of an advance of the Federals beyond the river and upon Gordonsville is now pronounced to have been untrue. Accounts from Washington, claimed to have been derived from Confederate sources, state that General Lee's army, having been filled up with conscripts, now numbers 70,000 good men. On the same authority Lee is reported to have 12,000 men in reserve in Richmond, engaged in the fortifications of that city. The iron-clad Merrimac No. 2 is in a complete state of preparation for offensive operations, and is lying at Jones's Bluff, awaiting the completion of her consort, the Lady Davis, which has already received her iron plating, in order that the two vessels may proceed to Fortress Monroe together to attack the Federal fleet stationed in Hampton Roads. Cincinnati telegrams of the 2d report that General Sterling Price has been commissioned Lieutenant-General, and given the supreme command of the Confederate trains (Mississippi Department). The troops under his command are estimated at upwards of 50,000. New Orleans advices to the 27th ult. do not confirm the Southern report of the defeat of Weitzel in Louisiana. Three Federal gunboats shelled the Confederate fort at Grant's Pass, near Mobile. Female bread riots are reported to have occurred at Mobile. The women threatened to burn the city unless relieved, but they were eventually pacified. The Russian flag-ship Alexander Newsky, Admiral Lasofski, with four other Russian men-of-war, have anchored in New York Harbour, and it is rumoured they will remain there all the winter. Great popular sympathy is evinced towards the officers and men of the fleet. A dinner has been given to the Russian admiral, at the Metropolitan Hotel. The admiral made a speech in which he said that the Emperor was not only the benefactor of his subjects, but the friend of mankind, and from what he had already done, and what he was doing every day, he was certainly entitled to the same surname which once a Roman emperor claimed—"the Delight of Mankind." With regard to Russia, he expressed a hope that present circumstances would end peacefully. The Russians, however, were ready for any sacrifice; and, as Moscow was burned, so they would not shrink from burning St. Petersburgh if necessary. If foreign nations were for peace, the Russians would receive it on honourable terms, and bless God for peace. This speech produced a great sensation. A Militia General named Wallbridge then observed that Russia, in sending a fleet to New York, wished to have it where, at a given signal, it could sweep English and French commerce from the seas. On the 1st inst., a public reception and a congratulatory address was given to the Russians by the authorities of New York. One division of the National Guard escorted the procession up Broadway, which was lined by enthusiastic crowds. Admiral Lestgski rode in a carriage drawn by six horses, and was accompanied by Alderman Fremont. On the previous day the Russians visited the forts in New York harbour. At a banquet on board the steamer, Admiral Paulding made a speech, in which he expressed a hope that whenever it became necessary for America to fight foreign enemies Russia, would be found shoulder to shoulder with Americans. The British frigates Nile and Immortalité, and the French frigates Guerrière and Bellone, have arrived at New York. It is said that the harbour never before contained so many foreign ships of war. Admiral Milne officially visited Mayor Opdyke. The Morning Post alludes enthusiastically to the admiral's visit to the Mayor, and observes that the reception given to the Russians will not be extended to the officers of any other nation. The Federal gun-boat Semim (?) is reported to have captured the British ship Sir Robert Peel in Mexican waters, off Matamoras. She was supposed to be fitted out as a privateer. The British steamer William Penn, captured near the Rio Grande, has arrived at New Orleans. The blockade runners Alice Vivian, Fox, Alabama, and Montgomery, have been captured in the Gulf of Mexico.

CENTRAL AMERICA.—Accounts from Belize state that the President of Guatemala, aided by Nicaraguans, has invaded and captured Comayague and Tegucigalpa, in Honduras, committing great atrocities on the adherents of President Montes, and banishing Mr. Kilpatrick, the British Consul General, from Spanish Honduras. The Consul at Truxillo had sent for assistance.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

French Excursions to the Crystal Palace.—On Monday the two railway companies from Dover to London, in connection with their steam boat services from Calais to Dover and from Boulogne to Folkestone, ran excursion trains to the Crystal Palace, for the purpose of enabling the French to see the building and grounds, and return home at night. About 600 of our French neighbours availed themselves of this opportunity of visiting the Palace; and as in most cases it was their first visit to the building, their admiration was unanimous. A variety of amusements was provided:—Blondin's low rope performance, and repeated performances of Pepper's Ghost Illusion, which appeared to afford much gratification to the excursionists. In the afternoon the Prince of Wales, accompanied by the King of Greece and Prince Christian of Denmark, with a numerous suite, paid a visit to the Palace and witnessed the latter portion of Blondin's performance. On their Royal Highnesses taking their seats in the great orchestra they were vociferously cheered by the assembled thousands, the company's band at the same time playing the National Anthem. On the departure of the Royal visitors the band of the Coldstream Guards performed the Danish National Air. In the evening the Palace was lighted up, and the visitors took their departure, on their return home, arriving at their respective ports at about half-past 10 P.M. The total number of visitors during the day was upwards of 10,000.

Launch of the Steam-Ram Valiant.—Her Majesty's armour-plated steam-ram Valiant, of 34 guns and 800-horse power, was launched in the most successful manner on Wednesday afternoon, from the yard of Messrs. Westwood, at Poplar, in the presence of many thousand spectators. She is one of a new class of iron frigates—a connecting link between the Warrior and the broad-bowed vessels of the Defence and Resistance class. She has been about three years under construction, and two contractors have had her in hand. She is an iron ship, cased stem and stern with 4½-inch wrought iron plates, on a backing of 18 inches of teak. She will carry 34 guns, two of which will be placed on her bow for use in chasing an enemy, or when bearing down on one to strike her as a ram. The Minotaur, 50, iron-clad, of 6621 tons, and 1350-horse power, now building for the Government by the same company, is in a forward state, and will be launched in the course of next month.

The Loss of the Norwegian.—The Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of this steamer terminated on Saturday. The master's certificate is suspended for 12 months, the chief point urged against him being that he was going at full speed in a dense fog, and exposed to the varying influences of strong currents.

The Great Eastern.—The adjourned general meeting of the shareholders in the Great Eastern Steam-ship Company was held on Monday, when a long report from the committee appointed at the last meeting was read, recommending that the shareholders should endeavour to raise a sufficient sum, by a subscription of 5s. per share, to rank with the preference shares, to relieve the company from their present difficulties, and that the vessel should be tried in the Indian and Australian trade, for which she was built. After a long discussion, the report of the committee was adopted, with a resolution inviting the directors to co-operate with the committee in raising the necessary funds to carry out the recommendation of the report. The chairman of the board declined to co-operate in any way, on the ground that it was useless to do so, as the ship was no longer in the hands of the shareholders, the trustees on behalf of the bondholders having taken possession, with instructions to sell on the 1st January, in the event of no arrangement being come to in the meantime. The meeting was ultimately adjourned to the 3d November, with the object of getting new directors, and taking the necessary measures for the maintenance of the company.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended on Saturday, Oct. 10, were 1258. The average number in the corresponding weeks of the 10 years 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1126. The present return is therefore 132 above the average. During the week the births of 962 boys and 911 girls—in all, 1873 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1818.

Birkenhead.—On Friday morning the Customs authorities at Liverpool received orders to seize the two rams in the yard of Messrs. Laird, and in the course of the afternoon they proceeded to put the order formally into execution by affixing the broad arrow to them. It was reported on Monday that a guard of Marines from her Majesty's ship Liverpool had been put on board the El Tousson, but the statement has since been contradicted, though the gunboat Goshawk, tender to her Majesty's ship Majestic, was removed from the lower basin into the great float, and moored close to the ram which is fitting up there.

Coleorton.—A fatal accident occurred on Thursday week at a colliery near this town, by which two men and 16 horses were drowned. The pit was subject to an overflow of water, and a carpenter was sent down to plug the leak; but while he was engaged in the work the side of the pit gave way and the water rushed in like a torrent. Upwards of 200 men and boys who were working in different galleries at the time, immediately rushed to the bottom of the shaft, and were all drawn up with the exception of six, who were supposed to be drowned, with all the horses in the pit. The progress of the flood, however, was partially retarded by a large reservoir which absorbed a portion of the water before it overflowed, and on Friday a number of men were enabled to descend the pit, where they found three of their companions alive. They were immediately hoisted up, to the great joy of their relations, and 10 horses were subsequently recovered alive. The dead body of one of the three men missing was likewise found, and there is no doubt that the two others are drowned.

Guernsey.—The statue to the memory of the Prince Consort, which has been erected in this island, was inaugurated on the 8th inst. by the Lieut. Governor, in the presence of about 15,000 spectators. It is a copy of that erected in London by order of the Queen and the Prince of Wales, having been cast with her Majesty's permission in the same mould, after the designs of Mr. Durham. The statue is of "electro deposit," or pure copper, stands 9 feet high, and represents the Prince in his full robes of the Order of the Bath. It stands on a pedestal of granite, with a plinth of 3 or 4 feet. The cost of the whole is about 1200*l.*

Guildford.—Some of the residents in this town having called the attention of the Home Secretary to the recent riots in St. Catherine's, and to the probability of their recurrence on the 5th of next month, a reply has been received from Whitehall, stating that Sir George Grey is in communication with the Mayor on the subject of the prevention of disturbances in the borough on the 5th of November.

Hull.—At the borough Police Court on Saturday, Mrs. Maria Cooke was finally placed at the bar on the charge of being concerned in stealing the South Cave letter-bag containing cheques to the amount of 700*l.* Some further evidence having been given, the prisoner was committed for trial, bail being refused.

Liverpool.—On Saturday the Earl of Derby distributed the prizes to the successful candidates belonging to the Collegiate Institution at the Liverpool centre of the Oxford local middle-class examinations. He prefaced the distribution by an address in which he traced the progress of public education in this country for the last 23 years, and spoke at length upon the great advantages which had been conferred upon it by the new university system of local examinations, which had, as it were, incorporated the schools of the kingdom with those ancient seats of learning. He also dwelt upon the great importance of combining religious with secular instruction, pointing out that no amount of intellectual acquirement would tend to the ultimate success in life of the youth of the country unless founded upon the firm basis of religion and morality. He also defined the position of the middle classes with reference to the pursuits and occupations of public life, and spoke in high terms of praise of the Collegiate Institution of Liverpool, which afforded the means of educating both the higher and middle classes. The address was listened to with the greatest attention by an audience of more than 2000 persons.—A young man called Samuel Hey Parker, who had absconded with the sum of 2500*l.* belonging to his employers, Messrs. Chambres, Holder & Co., cotton brokers, in this town, was apprehended at Salisbury last week by Mr. Smith, of the Liverpool Detective force. He was brought before Mr. Raffles, at the police court on Friday, and discharged, the firm declining to offer any evidence against him. The robbery caused considerable gossip in commercial circles, and the interest in it has been enhanced by the fact that three letters, each containing a 500*l.* Bank of England note, were sent back by the prisoner to his employers. It appears that on absconding from Liverpool he took the first train to Manchester, and from thence went to Preston, Blackpool, and Blackburn. He did not, however, think he was safe at the latter place, and took the train thence to Birmingham. He there went to the theatre, and by a singular coincidence, the piece which was performed was the Ticket-of-Leave Man. He seems to have drawn a moral from the representation, for when the scene in which the interview between the detective and the ticket-of-leave man took place, he was so affected that he went out of the theatre, got three envelopes, and sent 1500*l.* back to his employers. On the following day he went to Bristol, and from thence to Exeter and Salisbury, where he was apprehended with about 340*l.* and some valuables which he had purchased with the remainder of the money in his possession, so that nearly all the money which he carried away with him has been recovered.

Ireland.

The Lord-Lieutenant in the West.—An incident occurred during his Excellency's recent visit to the Western Highlands which is the subject of general conversation. It seems that, according to the arrangements made for the tour, the Lord-Lieutenant was to pass a night at Maam Hotel, in Connemara; but when within two miles of it, and weary after a long journey, his secretary was handed a letter by a mounted policeman from the sub-inspector at Maam, which led to the postilions driving rapidly past Maam Hotel, and not drawing rein until they reached Cong. The people of the district, who expected that his Excellency would stay at Maam, immediately perceived that something unpleasant had occurred. It was not until next day, however, that it became known that the Earl of Leitrim, who owns the hotel, had directed its doors to be closed against the representative of her Majesty. It will be remembered that Lord Leitrim was shot at some time since, and it is said that he believes the Irish Government did not sufficiently exert itself to discover and punish the assassin. The following is the order issued by the Earl to Mr. King, the landlord, on the occasion:—

"Galway, Oct. 6.

"King.—I will be obliged to you to fill the hotel with my tenants forthwith. Let every room be occupied immediately, and continue to be occupied, and when so occupied, you will refuse admittance to Lord Carlisle and his party. If there should be the slightest difficulty as to filling the hotel, or the occupation of the rooms, my desire is that you will fill each room with the workmen; but you must not admit Lord Carlisle, and consequently the rooms should be occupied previous to his coming there, any orders you may have received notwithstanding. I rely on your observing my wishes to the letter.—Yours faithfully, "Leitrim."

"P.S.—I will pay for the tenants using the rooms."

The Government has since shown its sense of the insult offered to the Queen's representative by superseding Lord Leitrim in the commission of the peace for the counties of Galway, Leitrim, and Donegal, and in the deputy-lieutenancy of Leitrim.

Railways.

Fatal Accident on the Caledonian.—A frightful railway accident occurred at the Port Glasgow station of the Caledonian line on Friday morning. The early Irish mail passenger train was just about starting from that station when a goods engine ran into it. One passenger was killed, and others so seriously injured that one has since died, after suffering amputation of both legs, and little hopes are entertained of the recovery of others. The pointsman at the station, and the driver, stoker, and breaksman of the engine tender have been apprehended.

Obituary.

LORD LYNDHURST died on Monday morning, at his house in George Street, Hanover Square in his 92d year. He was the son of John Singleton Copley, R A., the distinguished painter, and was born at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1772, while America was still a British colony. His grandfather, Mr. Richard Copley, of Limerick, by the daughter of Mr. John Singleton, an ancestor of the Singletons of Queinville Abbey, county Clare, emigrated to America some years before the revolution, and married the daughter of Mr. Richard Clarke, a wealthy merchant in Boston, who filled the office of agent and factor of the East India Company for their tea trade. It was in Boston that the duty on tea was first resisted by the colonists, who seized the ships and threw the tea chests overboard, to avoid paying the tax. Lord Lyndhurst, who as a child is said to have witnessed the tea-chests which were consigned to his grandfather destroyed by a people who were about to shake off the yoke of the mother country, lived to witness, 80 years later, the dismemberment of the Republic founded on the ruins of the monarchical dependency under which he was born. From his father's windows he saw the beginning of the rebellion which ended in a separation and a Republic, and in his latter years he read the details of the disruption of that Republic by a rebellion whose peculiar characteristic is that it is considered lawful by English Conservatives, in whose eyes the original separation was unlawful, and unlawful by the English Radicals, who always supported the right of the rebellion of Republicans against Monarchists. At the outbreak of the rebellion Mr. Copley with other loyalists came to England, and was introduced to the highest society in London by his countryman, Benjamin West. He first took a position in London as a portrait-painter, but subsequently acquired the highest reputation and popularity as the painter of the "Death of Chatham," the "Siege of Gibraltar," the "Tribute Money," &c. He became A.R.A. in 1774, and a few years later R.A. His son, after having undergone some years of private tuition, was sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became second wrangler and Smith's prizeman in 1794. He was elected a Fellow of the College in 1797, and was called to the bar of Lincoln's Inn in 1804. He went the Midland Circuit, was appointed a Serjeant in 1813, King's Serjeant and Chief Justice of Chester, in 1818, in which year he was elected M.P. for Ashburton in the Tory interest. In the following year he was knighted and appointed Solicitor-General, and retained that office till 1823, when he became Attorney General. Three years later he was elected M.P. for Cambridge University, was appointed Master of the Rolls, and in little more than six months was raised to the woolsack as Lord Chancellor by the title of Lord Lyndhurst. He held the Great Seal till 1830, and in the following year, on the restoration of his party to office, he was made Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer. He remained at the head of that Court till 1834, when he again occupied the woolsack for six months. In 1840 he was elected Lord High Steward of the University of Cambridge, after a contest in which he defeated Lord Lyttelton by 924 votes to 457. In Sept., 1841, he became for the third time Lord Chancellor, and remained so till July, 1846, when Sir R. Peel's Ministry broke down, and he finally retired from office. In his latter years his lordship has not identified himself with any party, but has taken an important part in the judicial and other business of Parliament. Lord Lyndhurst was great as a lawyer, a statesman, and an orator; and it has been said that there never was any orator in Parliament except Sir James Graham who delivered such perfect English sentences—so perfect, in fact, as to be fit for the press. His sonorous voice, his noble appearance, his courtly bearing, all helped to increase the effect of his eloquence. He was twice married, first, in 1819, to Mrs. Thomas, the niece of the Attorney-General, Sir Samuel Shepherd, and widow of Colonel Thomas, who fell at Waterloo. By this marriage he had a son and four daughters. The son, born in 1824, died in the following year. His eldest daughter also died when a year old. Another daughter, born in 1822, died in 1837. The eldest survivor of his daughters, born in 1821, married in 1850, Mr. Henry John Selwin, the unsuccessful Conservative candidate for Maldon at the last general election, and eldest son of Sir J. T. Ibbetson-Selwin, of Down Hall, Essex: and the fourth, born in 1828, married Mr. Hamilton Beckett in 1854. Lady Lyndhurst died in Paris in January 1834, and in 1837, his lordship married in that capital the daughter of Mr. Louis Goldsmith, by whom he leaves issue an only daughter, Georgiana, born in 1838, and married in June last to Mr. Charles Duane, M.P. for North Essex.

SIR GEORGE BONHAM, K.C.B., late Governor of Hong-Kong, died on the 8th inst., aged 60 years. He was born at Faversham in 1803, and was descended from the ancient family of Bonham, long seated in Essex. He married in 1846 the eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Barnard, of the Bombay Civil Service, but she died in 1859. He was for nearly 10 years Governor of Prince of Wales's Island, Singapore, and Malacca, and was appointed in 1847 Governor and Commander-in Chief of the island of Hong Kong and Plenipotentiary and chief superintendent of trade in China, which post he held till December, 1853. He was nominated a C.B. in 1848, a K.C.B. in 1850, and was created a baronet in 1852. He is succeeded by his son George Francis, who was born in 1847.

GENERAL WILLIAM LINDSAY DARLING, Colonel of the 98th Regiment, died on the 8th inst. at [illegible] House, near Chepstow, at an advanced age. He entered the army in 1801, and after taking part in the reduction of Guadaloupe in 1810, he proceeded to the Peninsula, and served with the 51st Light Infantry at Castelo Branco, San Christoval, Salamanca, Madrid, Burgos, Echallar, Nivelle, St. Pé, and Bayonne. On the renewal of the war in 1815, he was appointed Assistant-Adjutant-General to the 4th Division, under Sir Charles Colville; and was employed with his division in the operations connected with the battle of Waterloo, the storming of Cambray, and capitulation of Paris. He received the war medal with three clasps for Guadaloupe, Salamanca, and Nivelle. He became a Major-General in 1846, and was appointed Colonel of the 98th Foot in 1854.

MRS. TROLLOPE died at Florence on the 6th inst. in her 84th year. She had ceased to exercise her pen for a few years past, and lived in retirement with her son at Florence. She was born at Heckfield, Hants, in 1779. Her father, the Rev. Mr. Milton (who held the New College living of Heckfield), was the designer of the wet dock at Bristol, and was well known as a man of science. The old Wykehamist connection brought about Miss Milton's marriage with Mr. Thomas Anthony Trollope, B.C.L. of Oxford, and Fellow of New College, who was called to the bar in 1801, and died at Bruges in 1835. Mrs. Trollope's first appearance as an authoress was caused by her displeasure at the way she considered herself treated in America. "America and the Americans," with its companion novel of the "Refugee in America," established Mrs. Trollope's reputation, and she forthwith entered upon that long career of authorship which has been as prolific as it has been successful. In 1833 appeared "Belgium and Western Germany," which was followed by "Paris and the Parisians," "Jonathan Jefferson Whitlaw," a novel bringing out the peculiarities of the black and coloured races of the Southern States; "Vienna and the Austrians," "The Romance of Vienna," "The Vicar of Wrexhill," "The Widow Barnaby," "Michael Armstrong, the Factory Boy," "One Fault," "The Widow Married," the "Barnabys in America," "Chesterfield, or the Youth of Genius," "Hargrave," "Jessie Phillips," "Lauriston," "Tremordyn Cliff," "The Robertses on their Travels," "The Blue Belles of England," "The Ward of Thorpe Combe," "The Attractive Man," "Petticoat Government," "Father Eustace," "Uncle Walter," "The Clever Woman," "The Three Cousins," "Mrs. Matthews, or Family Mysteries," "Gertrude, or Family Friends," "Fashionable Life in Paris and London," and other works, the last of which was written on the verge of 80. For the last few years Mrs. Trollope has lived in retirement at Florence, and has long passed out of the mind of novel readers as a leading celebrity. She has left one son, Mr. Thomas Adolphus Trollope, educated at Winchester and St. Albans Hall, Oxford, who is also known as an author, having published a work on Brittany, "The Life of Filippo Strozzi," "The Girlhood of Catherine de Medici," "La Beata," "Tuscany in 1849 and 1859," and other works.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Oct. 16.

There is still a good trade doing and at full rates. The demand embraces nearly all descriptions of fleece and skin wool; but fleeces are the most sought after, and especially of the deep grown descriptions, which are scarce in the market.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Oct. 16.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report the trade brisk for the new growth, and fine samples are being fast cleared off at slightly advanced rates: Currency:—

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Oct. 12.

We have again a large supply of Beasts; the weather is favourable, and the best qualities maintain late quotations. Inferior descriptions meet with a heavy sale, and several remain unsold. The number of Sheep is rather larger than on Monday last, and trade very dull, consequently it is difficult to realise late rates. Calves are selling about the same as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 3180 Beasts, 9160 Sheep, and 223 Calves; from Ireland, 950 Beasts; and 2360 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Oct. 15.

The supply of Beasts is considerably shorter, yet more than equal to the demand. Choice descriptions meet with ready purchasers at Monday's quotations, but it is difficult to dispose of inferior qualities. The number of Sheep is small; trade is, however, exceedingly dull, and there is no improvement in prices. Trade is also very heavy for Calves at about Monday's quotations. Our foreign supply consists of 390 Beasts, 1790 Sheep, and 269 Calves. Milch Cows, 85.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct. 12.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and met a slow sale on the terms of this day se'nnight. Business in foreign was limited, and quite of a retail character at late prices. Prime malting Barley brings about last week's rates; secondary sorts are 1s. per qr. cheaper. Beans are a very dull sale at a decline of 2s. per qr. Peas are unaltered in value. With a large supply of Oats the trade was very heavy; good old corn brought about last Monday's quotations, but new and out-of-conditioned parcels sold slowly at 6d. to 1s. per qr. less money. In Flour there was but little done.

FRIDAY, Oct. 16.

On the 10th, 11th, and 12th inst. we had fine summer weather, on the 13th very heavy storms of rain. During the week the Wheat trade has been dull, and in several markets a further slight decline has occurred in prices, their low range (viz. 41s. to 42s. for good 63 lbs. white English, and 36s. to 38s. for red) is beginning to attract the attention of capitalists and speculators, and some purchases have been made in several parts of the kingdom to hold over. Barley, excepting the finest malting samples, continues to recede in value, and is quoted 6d to 1s. per qr lower. Oats have also declined 6d. per qr. in the majority of markets. The value of Beans and Peas was barely maintained. Flour continues to be a very heavy sale, but is not written lower, excepting in Leith, where a decline of 2s. per sack is quoted. Since Friday last 23 vessels have been reported off the coast. In consequence of the very few arrivals the floating trade has remained steady but inactive, for Maize 6d. per qr. more money is obtainable. In Paris (Oct. 15), the prices of Flour after a trifling improvement have relapsed, and the trade closes quiet at last week's rates. The present stock is estimated at 10,500 cwt. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 30s. 6d. per 280 lbs. Wheat is firm, and in a few instances an advance of 6d. per qr. has been paid. The arrivals of English grain this week have been very small, of foreign Wheat, Barley, Oats, and Flour large. The market was not well attended, and both English and foreign Wheat met a very slow sale at Monday's quotations. The same may be said of all descriptions of spring corn.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 13.—We have had a good attendance of buyers at this day's market, and Wheat has met a healthy demand for consumption at the full prices of Friday last for general runs, and 1d. per cental advance for fine amber and winter reds. Flour is held firmly, but does not meet a brisk sale. Indian Corn has found more favour with country buyers, and prime mixed is now difficult to be bought at Friday's prices. Oats and Oatmeal dull, but no lower. Beans are the turn dearer, and offered quite sparingly. Peas and Barley steady at late rates. The market closes with a firm tone.

Obituary.

LADY KATHERINE STEWART died a few days since at her residence in Bryanston Square. She was the only surviving daughter of Francis, Lord Elcho, eldest son of the sixth Earl of Wemyss, brother of the late Earl of Wemyss and March. She married in 1805 the Hon. Edward Richard Stewart, son of the seventh Earl of Galloway, by whom (who died in 1851), she had the Duchess Dowager of Marlborough, and several other children.

SIR RALPH ANSTRUTHER, BART., died on Sunday at his seat, Balcaskie, Fifeshire, in his 59th year. He was son of General Anstruther, who distinguished himself in the Peninsular war, and died at Corunna in 1809. In 1818 he succeeded to the title on the death of his grandfather, Sir John Anstruther, the third Baronet, M.P. for the Eastern Burghs of Fife, and at one time Chief Justice of Calcutta. At the first election under the Reform Act he stood as Conservative candidate for the St. Andrew's Burghs, but was defeated by a large majority. About 18 years ago his opinions changed, and he returned to the hereditary politics of the family, his grandfather having when in Parliament been a friend of Charles James Fox, and one of the "managers" of the impeachment against Warren Hastings. He is succeeded in the baronetcy and estates in Fife and Caithness by his son, Colonel Robert Anstruther.

GENERAL J. DOUGLAS JOHNSTONE, late Colonel of the 33d Regiment, died a few days ago in Dublin, aged 55. He went out to the Crimea with his regiment, and was sent home to England so seriously invalided that he was considered to be in a dying state. On his partial recovery he again joined his regiment at the seat of war, and with his son, Captain Johnstone, was the first in the assault on the Redan, where he lost an arm. He never fully recovered this shock to his system. He remained in the Crimea till the end of the war, and six months afterwards went out to India in broken health, having in this brief interval formed a new regiment, only 60 of the trained soldiers of the 33d who went out to the Crimea having returned home. On his return from India he retired from the service, but never recovered his health.

MR. LANGSTON, M.P. for Oxford, died on Monday at Sarsden House, Chipping Norton. He had been seriously ill for some time past, and within the last week or two his death had been hourly anticipated. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and was created honorary D.C.L. in 1819. He was distinguished as an enterprising agriculturist, and more especially as a breeder of short-horn stock. As a politician he was strongly attached to Whig principles. He first sat in Parliament for Woodstock, where he was defeated at the general election in 1832. Immediately on the conclusion of that contest he was invited to stand for Oxford, where he was elected with Mr. Stonor, now Lord Camoys. In 1835 he withdrew from public life, but at the general election in 1841 he was again induced to come forward, and was returned with Mr. Donald Maclean; and at the general election in 1847 he was returned with Sir W. Page Wood. At the general election in 1852 he was again returned, his colleague being Mr. Cardwell; and in 1857 he was re-elected with the same gentleman without a contest. Mr. Langston was in his 58th year, and married in 1824 Lady Julia, second daughter of the first Earl of Ducie. His daughter by this marriage married her cousin, the present Earl of Ducie, in 1849.

MR. HOPE, M.P. for Windsor, died on Sunday last, at his seat, Luffness, in East Lothian, aged 55. He was the son of General the Hon. Sir Alexander Hope (of the Hopetoun family), and was born at Blackheath in 1808. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1831, but devoted himself chiefly to political life. He entered Parliament for Weymouth in 1837, and was re-elected in 1841, but unseated on petition. In 1842 he was elected for Southampton, but did not again offer himself for that constituency. In 1859 he was returned for Windsor. When member for Southampton he was Under Secretary for the Colonies in Sir R. Peel's Administration. He married in 1836 the daughter and co-heir of the second Lord Montagu, and granddaughter of the third Duke of Buccleuch.

MR. JOHN BOWYER NICHOLS, F.S.A., one of the veterans of the literary world, died at his residence, Hanger Hill, Ealing, on the 19th inst., in his 85th year. He was the only son of Mr. John Nichols, the historian of Leicestershire, and author of the Literary Anecdotes of the Eighteenth Century, with whom he was formerly associated in conducting, during many years, that prototype of our monthly periodical literature, the "Gentleman's Magazine." Mr. Nichols had been for more than 60 years one of the printers of the votes and proceedings of the House of Commons. He was for many years the senior Registrar of the Royal Literary Fund, and nearly the oldest member of the Stationers' Company, of which he served the office of Master in 1850.

THE REV. WILLIAM OXENHAM, Lower Master of Harrow School, died last week at Reigate, in his 64th year, after a long illness. He was educated at Harrow, appointed an assistant master in 1826, and on the death of the Rev. Henry Drury succeeded to the post of Lower Master. He was an admirable classical scholar, of the type of Keate and Drury, and had probably few living superiors in an intimate knowledge of all departments of Latin versification. For many years past he has been a living link between Harrow men whom time and absence had divided. He was devoted to the school and its associations. Within the last year he had presented to the chapel a beautiful stained glass window, with a touching inscription recording the term of his protracted service; and only a few days before his death he made known his desire to found a prize in aid of that branch of Latin composition which he had so zealously contributed to foster.

MR. JOHN SHEEPSHANKS, the accomplished owner of the famous collection of pictures, known as the Sheepshanks Gallery, which he presented to the nation in his lifetime, died at his residence, Rutland Gate, on the 5th inst., in his 76th year. He was born in 1787, and was the son of a wealthy cloth manufacturer at Leeds, whom he succeeded in the business. His brother, the Rev. Richard Sheepshanks, F.R.S., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, was the distinguished astronomer. Mr. John Sheepshanks has for a long time been known as a collector of choice pictures, but has led a quiet and unobtrusive life, liberal to artists and happy in their society—though unknown to the general world up to the act of patriotic munificence which transferred to the nation the whole of his splendid collection of drawings and paintings, for the purposes of public instruction in art. Mr. Sheepshanks made it a condition that the responsibility of taking care of his collection should rest with an individual minister—the Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, that the collection should be removed to South Kensington, and that provincial towns should be allowed to have the pictures on loan, if the authorities provided suitable places to exhibit them in. Another condition was one which he ultimately did not insist upon—the opening of the collection on Sundays. This collection, which was removed from Rutland Gate to South Kensington early in 1857, is worth about 60,000*l.*, and is especially rich in the best works of Mulready, Leslie, and Landseer, and in fine examples of the principal modern British painters. There are 233 oil paintings and 103 sketches and drawings by Turner, Stanfield, Chalon, &c.

MR. WILLIAM BUCKLE, C.E., the builder of the first locomotive engine which made the journey from Liverpool to Manchester, so unfortunately remembered less for the triumph of engineering art than for the dreadful death of Mr. Huskisson, died on the 30th ult. at his residence in the Royal Mint in his 70th year. He was the contemporary and friend of Watt and Stephenson, and his name is associated with many scientific improvements. He was born in 1794 at Alnwick Castle, where his father held some situation under the Duke of Northumberland. He was educated at the Hull Grammar school, and was subsequently apprenticed to Messrs. Humphreys & Co., a firm of London engineers. In 1817 he went to Memel, to establish a company of steamers on the rivers and lakes of Prussia, where his chief friend, it is said, was the Prince of Hardenburg, one of whose daughters he saved from drowning. He afterwards superintended the arrangements of the famous visit of George IV. to Ireland, and took charge of the first steam mail-packet between England and Ireland. He then became connected with the Soho Works of Messrs. Boulton & Watt at Birmingham, where he held a responsible post till 1851, when he was appointed by Sir J. Herschel to an important office in the coining department of the Royal Mint. The great labour which he underwent lately, in superintending the coining of the Crimean and Baltic medals, injured his health so much as to have shortened his life. In 1835 he wrote a paper on the equalising motion for preventing the unequal action of steam engines. In 1847 he published a series of papers on the fan blast, and in 1848 a paper on the manufacture of bone manure. He was a vice-president of the Institute of Mechanical Edgineers. He built the lofty flue at Birmingham, which was first known as "Buckle's Folly," and a number of other chimneys built inside without scaffolding.

Markets.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Oct. 23.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report a good demand for all new Hops at fully late prices.

COVENT GARDEN, Oct. 24.

Both home-grown and foreign produce is for the most part abundant. Late Plums may still be had. Of Grapes and Pine Apples the supply is also sufficient for the demand. Of Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Brown Beurré, Crassane, Duchesse d'Angoulême, and Marie Louise Pears. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin Apples may now be obtained. Kent Cobs and Filberts are good and plentiful. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Asters, Marigolds, Calceolarias, Mignonette, and Roses.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Oct. 19.

We have again a large supply of Beasts; a considerable proportion is, however, of inferior quality, consequently there is very little reduction, if any, in the choicest descriptions. Trade is by no means brisk for Sheep, but there is a decided improvement from Thursday, although the average advance is not large. Choice Calves are rather dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 2980 Beasts, 8320 Sheep, and 233 Calves; from Ireland, 960 Beasts; and 2620 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Beasts, 6920; Sheep & Lambs, 28,240; Calves, 230; Pigs, 440.

THURSDAY, Oct. 22.

We have a larger supply of Beasts than on Thursday last; but there is no improvement in the average quality, consequently choicest descriptions are not cheaper. Inferior qualities meet with a heavy sale. The number of Sheep is small, but the demand is equally so, and prices are not better than on Monday. Trade is rather worse for Calves. Our foreign supply consists of 330 Beasts, 1980 Sheep, and 315 Calves. Milch Cows, 85.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct. 19.

The supply of English Wheat to this morning's market was very small, which enabled factors to clear it at the prices of this day se'nnight. Foreign was in very limited demand at our late quotations. Best Barley sells at about the prices of this day se'nnight, other qualities 1s. per qr. lower. Beans and Peas are each 1s. per qr. cheaper. Fine old Russian Oats bring late rates, other descriptions are a slow sale at a decline of 6d. per qr. Flour is unaltered in value.

FRIDAY, Oct. 23.

Excepting on the 20th inst., when we had some heavy driving showers, the weather since the 16th was fine. The Wheat trade for the week has been dull throughout the kingdom, but the supplies of good and dry samples of English Wheat having been limited, for such previous prices have been obtained. Foreign Wheat has not been pressed for sale, and business was limited at former rates. Fine Malting Barley has maintained its late value, but other descriptions have declined 6d. to 1s. per qr. Where any alteration has been made in the quotations of Oats, Beans, and Peas, it has been in favour of buyers. Flour continues to be difficult of disposal. Since Friday last 55 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has remained quiet, but Wheat maintained its full value, and was yesterday rather dearer. Maize, Barley, and Beans are a little cheaper. In Paris (Oct. 22), there was little doing in Flour at unaltered rates. The six marks for delivery this month remain quoted at 30s. 6d. per 280 lbs. The present stock is estimated at 10,600 cwt. For Wheat 9d. per qr. advance is asked, but this improvement is obtained only in a few instances. The arrivals of English grain during the week have been small, of foreign Wheat, Barley, and Oats large. The attendance at to-day's market was nearly confined to the factors. The show of English Wheat was small, and met a dull sale at Monday's prices. Foreign was taken only in retail at late rates. Secondary descriptions of Barley were 6d. to 1s. per qr. cheaper; other sorts unaltered in value. Beans and Peas brought Monday's quotations. The Oat trade was heavy, and prices rather in favour of the buyers.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 20.—With a moderate attendance of millers and dealers at this day's market Wheat has had a fair consumptive sale at the extreme rates of Friday last. Flour is difficult to move, but good conditioned parcels are scarce and not to be bought cheaper. Indian Corn displays an upward tendency, and is held for an advance of 3d. per quarter, but buyers act cautiously. Oats have undergone no improvement, but Oatmeal has been taken freely at the present low prices, and must be quoted fully 6d. per load dearer. Beans, Peas, and Barley steady at late rates. The market closes firm, but without activity.

FRIDAY, Oct. 23.—Fair attendance at market. Wheat, moderate demand at late rates. Flour, more doing in westerns at the late low rates. Other sorts unchanged. Indian Corn steady. Egyptian Beans unchanged. Oats and Oatmeal rather dearer.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Oct. 23.

There is no new feature in our market to remark on. As is usual, previous to a series of Colonial Wool Sales, there is an attitude more of expectation than of action, and as many persons visit town at that time they frequently put off making their purchases until they know the result of the sales.

was liberated. Eight insurgents only were deprived of their arms. The Austrian troops have since stopped and arrested several hundred insurgents with waggons, conveying munitions of war, and with horses, forming reinforcements for Wierzbicki's corps. Another insurgent band, on the contrary, succeeded in penetrating into Russian Poland.

THE CAUCASUS.—The Moniteur in its bulletin of Sunday states that the movement in the Caucasus appears to be of a serious character. A certain number of the tribes had joined the Circassian mountaineers.

ITALY.—It is believed that in the early part of November the King will be present at the inauguration of the railway to Foggia, and will subsequently hold a review of the fleet at Naples. It is asserted that the Italian Parliament will be convoked after the 15th of next month. The Russian Consuls in Italy have published a circular, requesting all Poles residing in Italy to return to their country as soon as the term for which their passports are granted expires, under penalty of their property being confiscated. The Duchess of Leuchtenberg is expected at Turin on a visit to the King. Signor Minghetti left on Monday for Bologna, in order to visit General Cialdini, who is seriously ill.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—The Ionian Parliament has resolved by a note of 33 to 3 that the protectorate of England over the Ionian Islands shall cease immediately, the Senate be dissolved, and the Ionian Islands forthwith be annexed to Greece. The Parliament has also discussed the draught of a message to the Lord High Commissioner. One paragraph of the address states that the fortresses should be handed over to King George in their present condition. This is considered as a protest against the scheme attributed to England for their destruction. Public rejoicings on account of the annexation continue.

GREECE.—The National Assembly has decided that only a few men from each division of the army shall be present in Athens at the reception of the King. A report being current that the soldiers would come to Athens without permission, the English Minister requested the British Admiral to inspect the barracks in the capital and its environs, to select places for quartering troops in case of their disembarkation. The National Government has resolved that the King shall sanction its resolutions, and subsequently sign the constitution to be drawn up. Several accidents occurred in Athens on the occasion of the fêtes given to celebrate the annexation of the Ionian Islands. The arrival of the new King is eagerly expected.

TURKEY.—The Journal de St. Petersbourg contradicts the rumour current last week that the Russian Minister at Constantinople had declared to the Porte that the recognition of the Poles as belligerents by Turkey would be considered by Russia as a declaration of war between the two countries. It has since been reported that the Poles have offered to Turkey an alliance, offensive and defensive, to re-conquer for the Sultans all that they have lost in their various wars with the Czars. It is said that Russia, fearing these proposals may be accepted, is preparing to transform the town of Kertch into a place of war of the first class, to convert the Sea of Azoff into an arsenal and harbour for an armed fleet, and to construct 12 gunboats and 11 plated batteries for service in the Black Sea. The latest news states that the Emperor Alexander, with the Grand Dukes Constantine and Michael, has gone to Kertch, in order to inspect the new fortifications, in company with General Todtleben.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Accounts from the Cape to the 20th ult. state that the Governor, having declined acceding to the prayer of the Cape Town memorial, that he would reconsider his decision to convene the next Parliament at Grahamstown, a second meeting had been held, at which it was resolved to petition her Majesty to direct that the next session of Parliament be held in Cape Town. This petition, largely signed, has been brought home by this mail for presentation. On the other hand, in the eastern province, addresses expressive of confidence in the Governor, and approving his policy, were adopted. The Cape Town people allege that his Excellency has been frightened into this measure by the Easterns threatening to obstruct his Government, while the Easterns declare such a measure absolutely necessary from the vast increase of the colony eastward. Both parties exhibit strong feeling on the question. The elections for the House of Assembly will take place in November. Parliament has been further prorogued to December 21. The Alabama, Georgia, and Tuscaloosa continue cruising on the coast. The Federal war steamer Vanderbilt has arrived at the Cape in pursuit of them. Captain Semmes has sold his prize, the Sea Bride, and the wool taken in the Tuscaloosa, alias Conrad, but had not made any further captures. The Alabama was in Simon's Bay repairing when the packet left.

INDIA.—The Governor-General was to leave Simla about the 26th of September for Sealkote, where he will be joined by his camp. After holding a Durbar, and having a special interview with the Maharajah of Cashmere, his lordship will proceed to Peshawur, where he will be joined by the Commander-in-Chief. Orders have been issued to stop all leave of absence to officers of corps stationed in the Punjab for the present, owing to the disaffected state of the frontier. Central Asia continues in a very disturbed state. It is stated that the Ameer Shere Allee Khan has gone to the fort of his brother Auzim Khan, at the request of the latter, to discuss with him the terms of peace. If this be true, he will probably never leave it again alive. The prisoner supposed to be Nana Sahib turns out to be a high priest of the Mahrattas, who is waiting the final orders of Government for his disposal. He subsists entirely on milk, refusing every other kind of food. The Rev. S. Hislop, of Nagpore, missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, was drowned, near Nagpore, on the evening of the 4th of September. He possessed great influence with the natives of Central India. At Ellichpoor Captain George Hare has been shot dead in the mess house. At the same place Mrs. Macquoid, wife of Captain Macquoid, of the 5th Infantry Hyderabad Contingent, was severely wounded with a sword by a discharged domestic, who, while making his escape, was killed by the officers. Mrs. Macquoid is doing well. The East Indian Railway will be open to the public from Delhi to Calcutta on the 1st of February next at the latest, with the exception of crossing the Jumna at Allahabad.

JAPAN.—News has been received at Shanghae of the arrival of Admiral Kuper, with the fleet, at Kagosima on the 15th August. Negociations having failed, the admiral ordered the fleet to take up its position opposite Kagosima, and prepare for action. Two shore batteries opened fire on the fleet, which returned it. By dusk the town was in flames in several places. Three forts were silenced. Our loss consisted of 11 killed and 39 wounded. Captain Josling of the Euryalus, and Captain Wilmot were killed by the same shot. At 9 p.m. the whole town was in flames. On the following day the fleet stood out, engaging the whole of the batteries. The city was one mass of ruins—palace, factories, arsenal, &c. Three steamers of Prince Satsuma were completely destroyed. The shore batteries are reported to have been well served.

NEW ZEALAND.—By the Overland Mail we learn that her Majesty's troopship Himalaya was expected to take her Majesty's 50th and 68th Ragiments to New Zealand. The former regiment will embark at Ceylon, the latter at Rangoon. The I battery 4th brigade Royal Artillery, in command of Lieut.-Col. Barstow having gone through a course of practice at the school of gunnery at Shoeburyness, will leave Woolwich for New Zealand on the 7th November.

UNITED STATES.—Federal accounts from the Army of the Cumberland confirm the Confederate report that General Bragg shelled the position of General Rosencrans for several hours on the 6th inst., but assert that not a man was injured. Look-out Mountain, upon which the Confederate batteries are posted, is but two miles distant from Chattanooga, 1800 feet higher, and is considered a key to that position. Federal accounts from Nashville on the 7th and 8th, state that skirmishing was of constant occurrence, and that another general engagement was considered imminent. Communication between General Rosencrans and his base at Nashville is still interrupted, and reports had been received at Nashville that Shelbyville, with the 15,000 Federal troops there, had been captured by the Confederates. M'Minniville had previously been captured with 500 prisoners and seven waggons. Another account says that the Confederate cavalry has been overtaken below Shelbyville and completely routed, with a loss of 100 killed, and that the Federals are in pursuit. It is said that General Bragg has been heavily reinforced from Richmond and elsewhere, and that his forces now number at least 175,000 men. It is also represented that 55,000 troops, under the command of General Joe Johnstone, are held as reserves. A portion of the Confederate cavalry has moved towards Kentucky to harass General Burnside's lines. Exchanges of wounded prisoners have been made under flags of truce, and the number of Federal wounded now accumulated at Chattanooga is so great that the city is described as an hospital. The responsibility of Gen. Burnside's failure to reinforce Gen. Rosencrans earlier is now attributed to General Halleck, who, it is asserted, only issued the orders for Burnside's advance when it was too late. Despatches from head-quarters of the Army of the Potomac of the 8th inst. state that during the previous 24 hours there had been many indications of another advance of General Lee with a powerful army. General Lee has effected an important flank movement on Meade's right. General Hill's corps has passed from the left to the right of Meade's front at Blue Ridge Mountain, apparently to get on Meade's right and cut the railroad communication, or else as a ruse to cover an attack upon his front; and a strong Confederate force is concentrating in the vicinity of Madison Court-house. A Federal cavalry brigade encountered Stuart's cavalry, while reconnoitering the Confederate position near Robertson's River. An engagement ensued. The Federals, being repulsed, retired to Culpepper. Serious apprehensions exist in Leavenworth of a Confederate invasion of Kansas. On the 8th the Confederates were reported to be advancing on Fort Scott and Kansas city. All the Government troops in Leavenworth had been ordered forward, and the State Militia called out, to repel the invader. The whole of General Blunt's Staff and body-guard, and the entire Federal command stationed at Baxter Springs, in Kansas, have been captured by the Confederates, and it was considered highly probable that General Blunt himself was made a prisoner. Uncertain reports have been received of a defeat of the Federals above Port Hudson, with a loss of 1500 prisoners Accounts from New Orleans report that the Federals under Generals Franklin and Weitzel had been repulsed in an attack upon the Confederates at Brashear City. The same accounts add that the Federals were subsequently reinforced and had defeated the Confederates. No dates or particulars are given, and the report is not confirmed by subsequent advices. An expedition of land and naval forces sent out by General Foster from Fortress Monroe, on the 4th inst., to some point in North Carolina, had not been heard from up to the 6th inst. General Banks has ordered the conscription in Louisiana. Negroes on the plantations will be detailed for service. Governor Brown, of Georgia, who is a Secession upholder, is reported to be re-elected. Twelve Federal steamboats, of the aggregate value of 500,000 dollars, have been burnt at different points on the Mississippi within the two past months. It is believed the perpetrators are connected with the conspiracy recently reported to have been discovered for the destruction of all the Government transports on the western rivers. The Navy Department are in receipt of official advices from Charleston to the 3d inst. but have suppressed their publication. Confederate accounts from Charleston state that on the 6th an attack was made upon the Federal fleet, in which the frigate Ironsides was considerably damaged, and the other vessels of the fleet greatly alarmed for their safety. It is not stated what constituted the attacking force, but, from the fact that three of the crew of the Confederate gunboat Chicora are reported missing, it is presumed that it consisted of Confederate ironclads. A combined land and naval attack on Charleston was to take place on the 11th. President Lincoln has appointed the 26th of November as a day of thanksgiving for Americans at home, at sea, and abroad. The New York Herald asserts that peace propositions have been discussed in the Federal Cabinet. The nature of them is unknown. Late despatches from San Francisco announce that a fleet of Russian war vessels was expected off the coast of California some time during the present month. The Russian admiral has accepted an invitation to visit Boston with the squadron. The foreign Ministers at Washington, the consuls at New York, and the French and British officers in the harbour are to be invited to the municipal banquet to the Russians. A portion of the Committee appointed to arrange the ball to be given to the Russians are opposed to inviting the French and English officers. The question is not yet decided. The recent news from Europe, which states that the Emperor of the French will immediately recognise the Southern Confederacy, and that an alliance between France, Mexico, the Confederacy, and probably Great Britain, will be established, though not universally believed, is the cause of considerable disquietude in political and financial circles. The Richmond Inquirer expresses the gratification of the Confederates at having the French for their neighbours in Mexico, and says that the South would willingly make an alliance with France to protect French and Southern interests in America. The Richmond Examiner denounces all peace propositions. The New York Evening Post urges the Government to demand from England an explanation of the conduct of the Cape Town authorities respecting the Alabama. If an explanation is not rendered it calls upon the Government at once to redress its wrongs. The papers describe a confederation of Irishmen, under the name of "Finnian Brotherhood," who, when peace is restored to the American continent, are to come over and conquer Ireland for the Irish, and then march upon London. The society has Generals Meagher and Corcoran at its head, and is said to number more than a million persons.

MEXICO.—Advices from Vera Cruz to the 18th September state that the Archbishop of Mexico had arrived, and had met with a magnificent reception. The national fête of the 16th was of a brilliant character. The blockade of all hostile Mexican ports has been effective since the 8th of the month. Accounts from the interior state that a numerous party exists favourable to the annexation, pure and simple, of Mexico to France.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—At a meeting of this Society on Thursday the bye-laws were suspended, in order that the Prince of Wales might be elected, first a member, and then the President of the Society, in the room of the late Mr. Tooke, who succeeded the Prince Consort. Mr. Hawes, in moving that the bye-laws be suspended for this purpose, stated that some negociations had taken place with the Prince on the subject, and read his Royal Highness's reply to an address, in which, while stating that it was not without diffidence that he ventured to undertake the duties, he added that it was the Queen's wish that he should accept the situation his father had so long held, in order that he might carry out the great and beneficent objects the Prince Consort had so much at heart. The motion was carried by acclamation.

MR. WARD BEECHER ON THE AMERICAN QUESTION.—On Tuesday evening the Rev. H. Ward Beecher of New York, addressed a crowded meeting at Exeter Hall, on the American question, under the joint auspices of the Emancipation Society and the London Corresponding Society on American Affairs. Soon after 6 o'clock the body of the Hall and the galleries were filled to their utmost capacity, and outside in the Strand and Burleigh Street a crowd sufficient to have filled the Hall over and over again knocked vainly at the doors. So thick was the crowd, that Mr. Beecher himself only obtained an entrance by mounting on the shoulders of a strong posse of policemen, who carried him through in safety. Mr. B. Scott, the City Chamberlain, took the chair, and was supported on the platform by the principal members of the two societies, consisting chiefly of Dissenting ministers. Mr. Beecher, in a speech of two hours, claimed the sympathies of Englishmen for the cause of the North, on the broad ground that the war, as the North conducted it, was hostile to slavery, and would eventually extinguish it. There was a good deal of diversity of opinion manifested, but, upon the whole, he was heard very patiently during the whole of his address. The following are extracts:—

"As this is my last public speech on the American question in England I may be permitted to glance at my previous history here. At Manchester I attempted to give a history of the external political movements for 50 years past, so far as was necessary to illustrate the conflict which has broken out in America. At Glasgow I undertook to show the condition of labour necessitated by the unprofitable system of slavery, to show that it brings labour to contempt and fixes on it the badge of degradation; that the struggle across the American Continent interests every free working man in the world, for I sincerely believe that the Southern cause is the natural enemy of free labour and the labourer all the world over. In Edinburgh I endeavoured to sketch how out of separate colonies and States there grew up an established nation, and how in that nation of United States two distinct systems of development were formed, and strove for the possession of the Government and the control of the national policy, and how, when the North gained control, the South abandoned the Union, simply and only because the Government was henceforth to be administered by men who would conduct it for the interests of freedom. In Liverpool I laboured to show that slavery in the long run was hostile to commerce and manufactures all the world over, and to every other interest in human society; that a slave nation must be a poor customer, buying the fewest and the cheapest goods at the least profit; that the interest of every manufacturing nation is to promote freedom and intelligence and wealth among all nations; that this attempt to cover the fairest portion of the earth with a slave population that buys nothing, and a degraded white population that buys next to nothing, is contrary to all political economy, and must breed a vital want of commerce, not want of cotton, but want of customers. I have endeavoured to enlist against this flagitious wickedness the judgment, the conscience, and the interests of the British people. I ask you to-night to look at this struggle from an American point of view in its moral aspects. The history of slavery in America showed that for the last 50 years it had been the policy of the South, steadily pursued, so to control the territories, and so to control the Government, as to establish slave influence throughout North America. The North hated slavery, but the different States came together with this doctrine, that each State, in respect to the interest and institutions local and peculiar to it, was to have undivided sovereignty, but that all other questions—such as taxes, wars, treaties of peace, which belong to all—went into the general Government. The general Government had no more power than was delegated to it, and the power to meddle with the interior and domestic economy of a State was never given to it. We had no power to touch slavery while slavery remained a constitutional institution, but when it lifted itself up from its state of humility and attempted to become a national policy it became a national enemy, and no longer had a national exemption. But it is said, after all, the President issued his proclamation for political effect, and not for humanity. Why, the right to issue the proclamation was political, but the disposition to do it was not. We could not touch slavery in time of peace, because it was a local institution. How do we do it now? Because in time of war it is shifted out of its sphere—it is no longer a local institution, but a national and public enemy. But it is said, 'Why not let the South go?' Since they will not be at peace, why do you not allow them to separate from you?' Oh! if the Southerners only would go! but the fact is they are determined to stay. That is the trouble. We would gladly furnish them with a free passage if they would take their departure; but then we say, "that territory which you inhabit is ours, and we do not choose to have it wrested from us." The war in America was begun by the act of the South, who fired upon that old flag which has covered both the contending parties with glory and protection. The war commenced under circumstances which obliged the North to join issue in order to prevent actual humiliation and subjugation. The Southerners had in their hands the keys of the country. They had robbed our arsenals; they had made bankrupt our treasury; they had possession of the most important offices in the army and navy; they had the advantage of having long anticipated and prepared for the conflict. We, on the contrary, knew not whom to trust. Men pensioned by the Government had lived on the salaries paid them by that Government only to betray it. There was but one Judas in the disciple band. There were in our country a thousand; and for the North to lay down like a spaniel and to have given up the territory which we had been taught to regard as a sacred right and trust, without a blow, would have been to have marked her to all eternity as mean and craven beyond expression. In the second place, the honour and safety of the grand experiment of self-government by free institutions demanded that so flagitious a violation of the freedom of vote should not be suffered to pass with impunity; as that a minority when out-voted should be able to turn round and to say to the majority, 'If you do not give us our way we shall have recourse to war.' Would you Englishmen allow a minority to dictate to you after such a fashion? If it be right for a million of men in a State to secede when they please from the national Government, why should not half or quarter that number be justified in seceding likewise? And if it be right for States and counties to separate at their will, why should not towns and cities do the same thing? This doctrine of secession is a huge millstone, which grinds national life to powder. It is the doctrine of anarchy and national destruction clothed in soft phrases and periphrastic expressions. We know it; we have fought with that devil slavery, and understand it better than you do. But beyond this let me tell you that no people possessed of feelings of patriotism and honour would without a struggle give up an integral portion of their territory. Would you do so? I should like to ask Englishmen how they would like this experiment tried in the case of Kent, the county from which I derive my blood? I would like to ask him who bawls out in favour of Southern secession, what would be his feelings if he were to read some fine morning at his breakfast the intelligence that Kent had set up for itself as an independent kingdom on your southern coast? Would he think the step justifiable? If not, why should he seek to apply to us a different principle, seeing that the course which we took was rendered necessary for the maintenance of national territory, of national civilisation, and national laws, and that over and above these political considerations, the Mississippi, which is our Southern door to go in and out, was only to be open for our use owing to the magnanimous pleasure of the seceding States? We could not suffer a line of fires to be established along 1500 miles of our southern border, out of which in coming years should start quarrels, wars, and disturbances of every kind. A people who never kept faith in the Union we knew would never keep faith out of it. They disturbed the land as did old Ahab of cursed memory; and when liberty found this Ahab in the way he said to her, 'Art thou it that disturbeth Israel?' We know the nature of this people; we know that a truce with them would be to create a cloud breeding thunder and lightning, and simply to furnish them with time, means, and opportunity to renew their purposes to take possession of an entire continent in the name of the devil and of slavery. One other reason why we do not wish to let this contest end and this people to go is, that we do not desire to become a military nation. A great many men say that America has become too strong, and that she is dangerous to the peace of the world; but let me tell you that if you permit or favour this division, the South will become a military nation, and the North will be compelled to become so too. Along a line of 1500 miles she must have forts, and men to garrison them. A force of not less than 250,000 will constitute the national standing army of the North, and when a nation has a standing army we all know she is in great danger. Before this war the legal number of our national army was 25,000 men, and the actual number 18,000. We required no more. But let the country be divided into two great belligerent nations, and, instead of a paltry 180,000 soldiers, you will have 150,000 on one side, and 250,000 on the other, and when, owing to political disruption, America is forced to maintain this vast number of troops, she will, like boys with a knife, always want to whittle with them. It is the interest, then, of the world, that America should be united, and that the whole nation should be under the control of that portion of it which has been always for peace, and should be rescued from the policy of that which has ever been in favour of the acquisition of more territory, of fillibustering, and of snubbing other countries. But this is not all. The religious minded among our people feel that in the territory committed to us we hold a high and solemn national trust, and that God gave it to us not merely for territorial aggrandisement, but that there we might plant the seeds of Christian civilisation, and build up institutions which should afford a spectacle of the working of the Church of Christ, which would make all good men glad. We could not help the existence of slavery before the war, but now, since it has been divested of its local defence, and has become a declared public enemy, it is our duty to see that it never again is in a position to blight our fair Western land. When I look out upon that immense territory I feel that the question is brought home to me as an individual man, as a citizen, and as a Christian minister. Will you permit that territory to be darkened by this hideous spot from the Atlantic to the Pacific? Why do we send our ships round the globe bearing missionaries to the Sandwich Islands, to Asia, and to Africa, if we are to follow the advice of those who counsel us to abandon the work of rescuing our own homes from worse than heathendom and to deliver it up to the Devil? Independent of pounds, shillings, and pence, independent of national honour, independent of all material and secular considerations, it is surely the duty of every conscientious man towards his God to endeavour to secure that continent from the blast and blight of slavery. But I hear a loud protest against all war. There is a small band in your land and mine which is opposed to war under any circumstances, and although I cannot accept their judgment, I bow with profound respect to their consistency. But putting those aside, I regard this British horror of war as something wonderful. It is a phenomenon of itself. On what shores, let me ask, have not the prows of your ships clashed? What land is there with a name and a people where your banner has not waved above your soldiers? When the great resurrection reveillé sounds, it will muster men who have fought in your ranks from every clime under heaven. 'But,' it is said, 'this is a war against your own blood.' How long, let me ask, is it since you poured troops into Canada, and caused all your dockyards to work night and day to avenge against your own blood the taking of two men out of the Trent? Old England ashamed of a war of principle! She gained her glory in such contests. Old England ashamed of a war of principle! Your national ensign symbolizes your history—the cross on the field of blood—and will you tell us who are your descendants, and who inherit your ideas and your pluck, that we must not fight in such a cause as that which I stand here to advocate? Ah! the child must pay heed to the parents, until they get so old as to tell the child that he must never do what he used to be whipped for not doing. Then the child naturally says, 'Father and mother are getting too old. They had better leave their present home and come to live with me.' And whereas England comes to that state that she dare not go to war for principles, she must emigrate. I have been asked to say a word about the Russians, and as this is a little private and confidential meeting, I do not mind telling you that the whole affair, so far as relates to the Russian officers in New York, is simply a little piece of coquetry. But you will say, 'Is it not an indecent thing for America, now that Russia is engaged in suppressing the liberties of Poland, to make believe to flirt with her?' I think it is. And now you know precisely how we felt when you flirted with Mr. Mason at your Lord Mayor's banquet. It does us no harm to have the English people tell us our faults; nor does it do you Britishers any hurt that we should let you know yours, and you will allow me to say to you that while England, which is a Christian nation, and has the guardianship of the dearest principles of civil liberty, ought to be friendly with every nation, she ought when she looks out for an ally to find one in her own blood, her own language, and her own children. I maintain that all sorts of alliances with continental nations as against America are monstrous, and that all flirtations of America with Pandours and whiskered foreigners are equally to be deprecated. Since I have come hither, since you have told me the truth, since I am permitted to bear back the assurance that popular sympathy in England is with us, since I have such significant facts to refer to as the detention of those rams in Liverpool, and such words as those spoken by Earl Russell at Blairgowrie, and those spoken also by the Attorney-General to recall, I feel that I have that to bear with me which will come home warm and sweet to the American heart. One in civilisation, one in religion, one in substantial feeling, let us be one in national policy, one in every enterprise for the furtherance of the Gospel and for the happiness of mankind."

THE FUNERAL OF LORD LYNDHURST took place on Saturday morning, at Highgate Cemetery. The pall bearers were the Earl of Ellenborough, General Forester, Mr. Walpole, M.P., and Mr. Barlow, each of whom carried a wreath of immortelles, which they deposited on the coffin as it was lowered into the vault. The service was read by the Rev. Mr. Howarth, of St. George's, Hanover Square. There was a large attendance at the ceremony, and the carriages of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and several of the nobility, followed in the procession.

ACCIDENT TO THE MAIL STEAMER AFRICA.—The outward going Royal Mail steamship Africa struck in a dense fog near Cape Race, on the night of the 12th inst. She was ashore half-an-hour, but got off, making much water, and bore up for St. John's, Newfoundland, where she arrived on the 13th. The ship has been beached, and must discharge. The injury is supposed to be extensive, and the cargo is damaged.

THE LOSS OF THE STEAMER GEORGIA.—The Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of the Georgia on Sable Island came to a close at Liverpool on Saturday. The certificate of Captain Gledell was suspended for 12 months, the court observing that this was one of the numerous cases in which the neglect to use the lead line led to disastrous consequences.

COLLISION IN THE BAY OF BISCAY.—On Wednesday week a collision took place between her Majesty's screw corvette Scylla and the Duke of Wellington merchant vessel of 1100 tons, in the Bay of Biscay. Both ships were much injured, and were obliged to put back in a disabled state, but there was fortunately no loss of life. Since the return of the Scylla, another ship of war the Pelorus, bound also for Japan to reinforce our squadron in those seas, has put back with damage, having caught fire from the overheating of her boilers.

SANITARY STATE OF BETHNAL GREEN.—The Home Secretary has called upon the Bethnal Green authorities to inform him what they are doing to remedy the evils brought to light by several inquests on children who had died in Thorold Square. The vestry in reply state that Bethnal Green is not worse as to its sanitary state than other parishes. They admit that Thorold Square is very bad, but steps have been taken to cleanse it, and the nuisances complained of in it have been abated. They state in conclusion that they have a very intelligent medical officer of health, an inspector of nuisances, and a committee of six members to carry the Nuisances Removal Act into execution.

LANCASHIRE RELIEF FUND.—At the meeting of the Mansion House Committee on Friday, grants of money to the amount of 3509*l.* were made to places in Lancashire and Cheshire, for distribution by the local relief committees.

THE ENCLOSURES ON WANDSWORTH COMMON.—A deputation, consisting of the clergy and parochial officers of Battersea, had an audience of Lord Spencer, lord of the manor, a few days before his departure for the Continent, relative to the enclosures on Wandsworth Common. The memorial on the subject having been read, his lordship replied that he was most anxious to continue the friendly relationship which had always subsisted between himself and the parish, and that at present he had no intention or idea of any scheme for enclosing any portion of the common; that he concurred in the desirability of providing open spaces for public recreation in populous localities, and believed that out-door games and exercises greatly contributed to the happiness and morality of the humbler classes, and any future scheme for enclosures would be considered with reference to that object. He did not see how the recent enclosures of the railway, which were, he believed, the only considerable ones that had been made since his succession to the property, could now be interfered with, but there was no objection to further inquiry being made in the matter; though the parochial authorities ought to have urged their objections at the proper times.

DARING BURGLARY IN NEW OXFORD STREET.—On the night of Wednesday week a burglary of a very daring character was committed on the premises of Messrs. Law, tea dealers, New Oxford Street. The thieves entered the premises at the back, in Pembroke Lane, got into the first floor, and from thence into the shop, cutting away the lock and carrying away the iron safe, containing upwards of 200*l.* in gold and silver, and nine chests of tea, besides warrants on which duty had been paid. A number of young men were in the upper part of the house and heard no noise. The burglars must have had a horse and cart in readiness, and several persons were no doubt concerned in the robbery. A large reward has been offered.

THE ZAMBEZI EXPEDITION.—The Rev. James Stewart, a Commissioner from the Free Church of Scotland, has come home passenger from the Cape by the Saxon. He has explored the Zambesi thoroughly; first with Livingstone's expedition, and afterwards alone up beyond Tete in one direction, and beyond the Murchison Falls in another. He has also visited all the chief missionary stations in the Cape Colony. The death of a distinguished young geologist, Mr. Richard Thornton, has been communicated by Dr. Livingstone to Sir R. Murchison.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday October 17 were 1205. The average number in the ten corresponding weeks of 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1149. The present return is therefore 56 above the average. During the week the births of 1001 boys and 938 girls, in all 1939 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1843.

ABERAVON.—On Saturday morning a fatal explosion occurred at the Morfa Colliery, by which 38 lives were lost and much property destroyed. The pit is one of the largest in South Wales. It is situate in the parish of Margain, Glamorganshire, on the estate of C. R. M. Talbot, Esq., M.P., and lord-lieutenant of the county, but is leased to and worked by the Messrs. H. H. Vivian, M.P., and Co. There were 360 men and boys at work in the whole colliery, but, fortunately, the explosion was confined to the old 9-feet working, in which 42 men and boys were working at the time. The old 9-feet seam is about 400 yards from the bottom of the shaft, and the workings are to a considerable extent right under the sea. The colliery is known as of a "fiery" nature, and therefore requiring the greatest care and caution in the working, and nothing seems to have been left undone which capital can supply or engineering skill suggest to provide for the safety of the large number of men daily at work. The colliery is ventilated by means of a furnace, and there are two shafts, the up and the down, and none but locked safety lamps are allowed to be used. It appears however that despite all the stringency exercised the men were in the habit of smoking, and it is believed that the explosion was caused by one of them picking the lock of his lamp for the purpose of getting a light. "Shifts" of men have been incessantly at work since Saturday morning, and upwards of 20 have been either brought up dead or have died after they were brought up; but the recovery of the bodies is attended with so much danger that the others have not yet b een found.

BATH.—A few days ago the Duke of Buckingham was subjected to a gross outrage by two commercial travellers called Norton at the Bath station of the Great Western, as he was removing the luggage belonging to the Duchess out of the carriage. The offenders were brought before the Bath magistrates on Saturday, when they expressed their regret for their unmannerly conduct, which they attributed to their eagerness to get into the carriage, as the train did not stay more than a minute or two at the station. The duke accepted their apology, on their undertaking to pay all expenses and give 5*l.* to the Bath United Hospital.

BIRKENHEAD.—The steam ram El Tousson is now under surveillance of a party of marines. At dusk on Sunday a marine, under arms, was pacing the forecastle. The Goshawk is not now moored alongside El Tousson, but is moored to the quay, at the stern of the ram. No attempt however has been made to stop the builders from completing and fitting the rams for sea. The Liverpool frigate left the Mersey on Sunday for Plymouth.

COLEORTON.—The bodies of the two men who were drowned by the flooding of Coleorton Pit, near Leicester, were got out on Wednesday. It is supposed that they were suffocated by the foul air.

HEREFORD.—On Saturday Robert Wilton Fryer, late chief clerk in the Hereford Old Bank, whose defalcations, amounting to several thousands of pounds, are said to have been a primary cause of the failure of the bank, was brought up before the city magistrates for final examination, and, after a long examination, was fully committed for trial, bail being refused.

LEEDS.—The annual congress of members of the British Archæological Association was held last week in Leeds under the presidency of Lord Houghton (formerly Mr. Monckton Milnes). His Lordship also delivered his inaugural address on Monday week in the Victoria Hall, after the mayor and corporation had given the society a formal reception and welcome to the town. In the evening a conversazione was given by the civic authorities. The archæologians during the week made excursions to a Norman church at Adel; to Ilkley, the Olicana of the Romans; to Aldborough, the Isurium of the Romans; to the wayside chapel and old houses in Wakefield; to Pontefract Castle and Church; to Ripon Cathedral and Fountains Abbey; to Kirkstall Abbey, to Halifax, and to York. The Society had the use of the lecture hall of the Philosophical Society, and many interesting papers were read by Mr. Planché, Rouge Croix; Mr. Lawson, of Aldborough; Dr. Lee, LL.D., F.R.S.; Mr. T. Wright, M.A., F.S.A.; Mr. Gordon Hills; Mr. Levien, of the British Museum; Mr. Syer Cuming, Mr. Roberts, F.S.A., Mr. G. R. Wright, F.S.A., Rev. C. H. Hartshorne, Mr. G. Wentworth, Rev. W. C. Lukis, Rev. Scott Surtees, and other distinguished antiquaries. It is intended to hold the next congress at Northampton.

MANCHESTER.—The third annual meeting of the Church Congress commenced in this city on Tuesday week with a service in the cathedral, when the sermon was preached by Dr. Hook, Dean of Chichester. In the afternoon an address on Church Extension was delivered by the Bishop of Manchester, president of the congress. In the debate which followed, Mr. Hugh Birley, Archdeacon Utterton, Archdeacon Bickersteth, Mr. Knott, chairman of "The Committee of Laymen," Mr. Murray Dale, Mr. W. Cotton and other gentlemen took part. In the evening an address on Church Architecture was delivered by Mr. Beresford Hope, Mr. E. B. Denison, Q.C., and Mr. G. E. Street taking part in the discussion. On the following morning the business was opened by the Rev. T. E. Espin, of Lincoln College, Oxford, who read a paper on the "Supply and Training of Ministers." In the discussion of this paper the Bishop of Melbourne, the Rev. Dr. Stowell, the Rev. A. D'Orsey of Cambridge, the Rev. H. P. Liddon, of Christ Church, Oxford, and other gentlemen took part. In the afternoon a paper was read on "The Church in Ireland," by the Rev. W. C. Plunket, on which the Right Hon. Joseph Napier, and the Rev. Dr. M'Neile spoke. In the evening a paper on "Lay Co-operation" was read by Mr. E. Akroyd, which led to a discussion in which Mr. F. S. Powell, M.P., Mr. R. A. Cross, and Mr. Henry Hoare were the principal speakers. On Thursday morning the Rev. W. Cadman, Rector of Trinity Church, Marylebone, read a paper on "The Management of a large Parish," which was spoken to by the Dean of Chichester, the Rev. Dr. Molesworth, and the Rev. J. Bardsley. This was followed by a paper on "Parochial Mission Women," by Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood. In the afternoon a paper on "The Law of the Colonial Church" was read by Dr. Bayford, and a paper on "The Supply of Native Missionaries," by the Rev. Dr. Francis Hessey, Incumbent of St. Barnabas, Kensington, which was spoken to by the Bishop of Sydney, and the Rev. Ernest Hawkins, Secretary to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. In other sections papers were read by the Rev. T. Lund, the Rev. W. Emery, the Rev. J. E. Clarke, the Rev. Dr. Kennedy, and other gentlemen, on practical Church subjects. Among the topics discussed at this closing meeting was the conduct of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The Earl of Harrowby defended the Commission, and showed that a larger sum had been expended on the augmentation of small livings, and at a less cost, than was at first anticipated. It was agreed that the next meeting should be held at Bristol, and a vote of thanks to the Bishop of Manchester, as president of the congress, closed the proceedings.—At the monthly meeting of the General Relief Committee on Monday, the report stated that though the Boards of Guardians are now relieving 87,000 persons, the total numbers relieved from all sources have fallen since January last from 456,786 to 184,625. In an Appendix to the report, Mr. Ashworth stated his opinion that next year will bring a supply of upwards of 800,000 bales of cotton above the present year's importations. This would enable the manufacturers to consume 33,000 instead of, as at present, 22,000 bales a week; and to give four and a half days' work. The balance in hand is now 271,513*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*, in Liverpool 39,355*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and the Bridgewater House Committee 86,270*l.* 17*s.*, making in all 397,140*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.*

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—On Monday, week the inquest on Martin Linskay was resumed in the presence of Terence Quin, who had been apprehended on the charge of causing his death. After hearing further evidence, the jury returned a verdict of Manslaughter again the prisoner.

OXFORD.—The corporation of this city gave a dinner on Wednesday week, at which the members for the county, and Mr. Cardwell, the member for the city, were present. Mr. Langston, the other member, was prevented attending by ill-health. Mr. Cardwell, in his speech, contrasted the state of England with the distractions of other countries, and appealed to Mr. Henley whether the present harvest was not the best he had ever known. Mr. Henley however declined to commit himself on the point till the end of the year, when the value of the crops would be fully known. With regard to foreign affairs he expressed his hope that the Government would continue to follow that wise course of policy which they had hitherto pursued, and said that he had no fear that the honour of the country was safe in their hands.

PEMBROKE.—The Royal yacht Alberta, which has been built expressly for her Majesty's convenience in crossing between the mainland and the Isle of Wight, was launched a few days since at this dockyard.

RICHMOND.—Sir Roundell Palmer, the Attorney-General, delivered a long address to his constituents in this town last week, and spoke as follows on the part which the Government has taken in regard to the civil war in America:—

"Our Government had felt itself bound, in the first place, to recognise facts, and, in the second place, to do nothing in anticipation of them. We heard a great many people say, 'The Government have recognised the South as belligerents,' that is, as States carrying on lawful war, 'why not go on and recognise their independence?' Now, he said, those who asked such a question were totally ignorant of the principle on which the Government did recognise the South as belligerents, and, at the same time, declined to recognise their independence. There was no doubt that the Southern States were States exercising government for themselves and in themselves for the time being, and that they were carrying on war on their own and sole account. Our Government recognised these things as facts established, but be it remembered that they recognised the South as belligerents only because they had no control over the events that had led the South to assume that position, and the Government were shaping their conduct in the best manner they could to preserve an honest neutrality, according to the laws of their own country, and according to the laws of nations. They gave them no privileges as such; they wished to God they were not belligerents, but, being so, they did not refuse to take notice of the fact. The Americans themselves, the Northerners, who complained sometimes that we had given the South premature recognition as belligerents, forgot that unless the South were belligerents, they could not have maintained the blockade against the South, nor have taken from neutrals on the high seas ships, guns, powder, and all that was known as the munitions of war. Therefore, it was necessary for their purposes, as for the purposes of the South, and above all, for our purposes, that our position should be understood, and not be of an equivocal character. There was nothing more important than that we should regard the laws, rules, and regulations of war applicable between the parties and ourselves as a neutral nation taking no part in their quarrels. As to our recognising the independence of the South before seeing whether these States can establish their independence or not, we should neither get more cotton, break the blockade, nor put a stop to the dreadful carnage. Giving them words was not what was wanted, they wanted action. If we gave recognition in words merely, without altering our conduct in other respects, we should be holding ourselves up to the scorn of Europe, doing very little or no real benefit to the Southerners, and at the same time giving just offence to the Northerners, against whom we should be pronouncing a verdict prematurely. We must therefore wait patiently, praying devoutly that the unhappy contest in America might soon terminate. And let who will abuse us, whatever pressure may be put upon us, we must be determined to do that, and nothing but that, which we believe our duty, applying the best and fairest test to any doubtful case,—considering what we should like to be done to ourselves if we were in similar circumstances. Now our Government had up to this point acted upon that principle. Our Government acted upon this principle when the question arose regarding the assertion of maritime rights—the rights of war by the vessels of the United States against the shipping of this country. We would not for a moment endure that they should invent new powers, that they should transgress the laws of nations, and violate the hospitality of England by attacking upon the wide seas our ships which happened to have on board persons supposed to be on an errand hostile to the interests of the North. The whole country was prepared, much as we deplored the necessity of it, instantly to vindicate its honour, and to go to war rather than tolerate such a proceeding. But, on the other hand, when it was a question of submitting on our part to the established laws of war, ship after ship in attempting to run the blockade having been taken from us, and about which all sorts of stories were told in the papers, though in many cases there might be a real doubt about the justice of the seizure, we had always said, 'We will bear from America what America bore from us under the same circumstances—we must have this matter investigated by Prize Courts according to the laws of nations, and if these Prize Courts decide against us, we must submit to it, unless we can prove some gross and manifest injustice done by them to us which we would not have practised ourselves." He was bound to say in justice to the United States that our Government had not as yet been able to find any such gross or manifest injustice. He did not think the honour of the courts of law in the American States had suffered. He believed they had asserted the laws of war about as strictly as we did, and not more strictly, and we had, therefore, submitted in good faith. Some of the decisions might seem to us harsh, but, before we could make that a ground of complaint against them, we must compare it with what was done in England with regard to the ships of neutrals when war was carried on by ourselves, and with what we may be obliged to do again if unhappily war should occur again. It would be very surprising if the statesmen of America do not see we have acted in good faith and in honour towards them; for on their account as well as for the sake of our own nation Government had endured some obliquy from powerful and wealthy citizens who had an interest in carrying on trade with the Southern States, and who endeavour in many instances to carry it on without for one moment considering the trouble and anxiety they cause the Government, or the peril in which they may possibly put the nation. He believed he might venture to state, however, that the Government would rather venture to endure any amount of obloquy, or relinquish office, than attempt by false distinctions to fritter away and pare down the rules of international law when they happen to tell against our trade—inasmuch as by so doing we should be abrogating the very course we ourselves had adopted when in the position of belligerents, and when to the uttermost we took advantage of those rights of war which some people would now deny to the North. There was one other subject on which the conduct of our Government also deserved a remark. We know very well that it is perfectly lawful for the citizens of a neutral country to trade with both parties if they can. It is also lawful to sell anything which either party would take in the way of merchandise—powder, shots, guns, or any other things; and we had on both sides had customers, and sold a great many articles of that description. But there was, on the other hand, a limit to all that, and it is not consistent with the duty of a neutral nation to supply the means of carrying on war, as a Government, to either party, or to suffer warlike expeditions and ships of war to be prepared and fitted out in its harbours; and in order to prevent such things from being done—which undoubtedly we should have reason to protest against if done to us, and which could hardly be carried on by any nation on a large scale professing neutrality without involving it in war,—we had got a law which may or may not be easy to construe, but which certainly was intended to prevent these things. We all knew as a matter of fact that the Confederate States had endeavoured to some extent to make this country the basis of their maritime operations. Our Government, in perfect good faith, said this,—'We will not permit anything to be done which can be shown to be a violation of our own laws or of the laws of nations; we cannot go beyond our laws and the laws of nations, but we will do all we can to prevent the evasion of either one or the other, not caring whether one party or the other benefits by it, not balancing their relative strength or trying to alter it, but simply performing our obligations according to what is dictated by our own domestic legal enactments, and according to the received law of nations.' The Americans had complained of the escape from this country of the well-known Alabama, which, as we know, had committed great ravages upon their commerce, and of other ships, said also to have left England for the same purpose. They spoke as though it was a very easy thing for the Government to prevent that sort of thing being done, whereas it was a most difficult thing; and it was remarkable that, although their Government in former wars had not shown any want of will to prevent the same thing occurring, he was not aware that they had ever succeeded in preventing it when it was really intended, in one single instance, because, although several cases were brought into their courts of law of ships which had gone out of their harbours commissioned by other belligerent Powers and taken prizes on the seas, they were taken notice of only because they had the boldness to come with their prizes into the ports out of which they had in the first instance sailed. Therefore it would not be reasonable for them to hold our Government responsible for every evasion of our laws to their disadvantage. On the other hand, he hoped and believed that the people of the country at large would not be inclined to identify themselves in feeling with those merchants of ours who seemed to think they were bound by no obligation to our laws at all, and that it was perfectly fair for them if they chose to carry on an unlawful trade with a belligerent Power, while at the same time they knew that Government were anxious for the sake of the nation to preserve a strict neutrality. He did not think that was the part of patriotic Englishmen loyal to their laws, and having a true view of the interests of their country. Though perfectly conscious of the great difficulties of bringing the law to bear by complete and conclusive evidence in cases of this kind, where every artifice is used for the purpose of disguise and evasion, he had every confidence in the people of this country would support the Goverment in the measures they had taken to make it clear and plain that those proceedings were perpetrated without the will, connivance, or consent of those who are responsible for the government of the country."

Salisbury.—On the 29th ult. James Matthews, a workman in the employ of Mr. F. R. Fisher, builder, of the High Street, made an ascent of the lofty Cathedral spire in this city for the purpose of painting the external iron work at the summit,—an operation which occupied him nearly two hours, and necessitated his mounting the cross above the vane, which is at the height of more than 400 feet from the ground. The ascent, as it was market day, was witnessed by a very large number of spectators, and was accomplished by means of 20 or more small iron handles firmly fixed to the spire above the weather door, which is reached by a flight of ladders inside, placed almost perpendicularly one above the other. During the process of painting Matthews secured himself to the spire as best he could with a leather belt buckled round his waist.

Slough.—Mr. Mackenzie, of Fawley Court, has transmitted to the directors of the British Orphan Asylum a check for 14,000*l.* in redemption of his promise to indemnify them to the extent of what may be termed the "capital" expenditure upon that institution. It was calculated that 12,000*l.* would be sufficient, but the numerous alterations and repairs found to be necessary increased the sum to 14,000*l.*

Stafford.—The parishes of Cauldon and Waterfall in this county have been thrown into a state of excitement by the proceedings of the incumbent, the Rev. B. Hennikey, whose father is patron of both livings. It appears that the rev. gentleman, as a general rule, has set the rubric at defiance, has read the lessons from the Douai version of the Bible, has ordered Dissenters to leave the church, and has lately crowned his other eccentricities by refusing to bury the dead of his parish. The consequence is that the church has been converted by a portion of the parishioners into a bear garden, and the day of rest into one of riot. Matters have gone so far that the ecclesiastical authorities in the diocese are about to hold an investigation into his conduct.

Winchester.—At a meeting of the county magistrates on Monday the Earl of Carnarvon, as chairman, presented the report of a committee appointed a short time ago at his suggestion to consider the state of the prison discipline in the county. The report recommended that hard labour should be made more use of, that the hours of rest should be diminished, and that the dietary should be reduced, especially in the article of fresh meat. The visiting justices, and especially the chairman, dissented from several of the recommendations of the committee, but it was ultimately agreed to print the report, and take it into consideration on a future day.

Wolverhampton.—The inquest on the body of the man Cheeuery, who was found murdered in this town in August last, was resumed on Tuesday for the fifth time. The man who had been seen in company with the reputed wife who was afterwards found murdered at Dudley, was brought up in custody and examined at great length with several others. After a brief consultation the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown. After recording the verdict, the coroner said the mystery still remains a mystery.

Shocking Murder in County Waterford.—A murder of a horrible character is reported from Clonmel. In a desolate mountain district in the county of Waterford, about three miles from Ballymacarbry, and 12 from Clonmel, lived an aged man named Thomas Connolly, in a wretched cabin, to which was attached an acre of boggy land. There is another cabin close by, and below it a slated house belonging to a farmer named Flyn. With the old man lived his grandson, Pat Hennessey, who married the daughter of a man named Walshe. Old Conolly had received 9*l.* from Walshe, for letting him and his wife live in the house, but the two families were constantly quarreling. The cabin contains two rooms, a kitchen and a bedroom. To the kitchen the light was admitted only through a small door; the bedroom was lighted by a bit of glass four inches square, stuck in plaster. Young Hennessy went away to look for harvest work. When he returned to the cabin he found his wife and his father-in-law there asleep, but the grandfather was absent. He was told by Walshe that the old man had walked away on the 29th of September, and they had heard nothing of him since. The young man informed the police. Search was made about the country, but no trace of him could be found. Soon after this the young wife, only 17 years of age, made an appalling disclosure. She stated that on the 29th she called the old man to his breakfast and then went to the well. When she returned the door was shut, and her father, who was inside, told her to go away for a while. When she returned she saw the old man on the floor and a hatchet beside him. Her father threatened to kill her in the same way if she gave any alarm. He dragged the body into a turf-house, and then made her help him to clear away the blood. He then took the hatchet to the turf-house and locked himself in. While there she heard the noise of chopping for some time, after which she saw her father bring out the mangled portions of the body in his arms and bury them in the garden. He subsequently told her that he had hid them in a turf bog, jumping on them till he had sunk them deep enough, having taken off his shoes and stockings for the purpose. The story was deemed incredible by the police, though they found some of the old man's clothes bloodstained and the hatchet; but after diligent search the mutilated remains could not be found. On Sunday last the search was resumed by nine sub-constables and 20 of the country people, and about half a mile from the cabin, in a bog, was found the head of old Connolly, with the nose attached by means of the skin; the left side of the trunk, minus one of the ribs; the scalp, to which was attached one ear and a portion of the second; and one foot, in which there were the marks of three chops. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against some person or persons unknown. Walshe and his daughter, who revealed the crime and had been taken into custody, not having been produced.

Railways.

The Metropolitan.—The Great Northern Company are now running through trains from the Farringdon Station to Hitchin, and the Great Western Company run through trains from the same station to Windsor, the latter being composed of broad gauge, and the former of narrow gauge carriages. There are 15 Great Northern trains from Farringdon Street during the day, bringing that station in direct communication, without break of gauge, with Hitchin, Luton, Dunstable, Hertford, and the intermediate stations. The Great Western trains between Farringdon Street and Windsor are only five each way. The new carriages ordered by the Company, when the Great Western withdrew their trains, are now in use on the line, and are of a very superior character, first, second, and third class alike having two gas-lights in each. Great improvements have also been made in the line itself. A ventilating shaft has been made at the Portland Road, which has done away with the unpleasant smell in the tunnel, by forcing air through it by means of fans.

The Proposed Line from Walbrook to Regent Circus.—At a recent meeting of the City Commissioners of Sewers, the improvement committee brought up their report on the plan of Mr. Giles, C.E., for a railway from Walbrook to Regent Circus, Oxford Street. The committee stated that they had been in communication with a committee of the Court of Common Council and with Mr. Giles, and they thought that it was not advisable to give any opinion on the scheme until the Parliamentary plans have been deposited.

Miscellaneous.

Acclimatisation at the Antipodes.—The Acclimatisation Society of Victoria has fortunately met with very liberal support from the Government, and has been enabled to obtain a most valuable site in a reserve of 500 acres appropriated as the Royal Park. It is described as being well grassed and timbered, presenting an agreeable undulating surface, though somewhat bleak and exposed. To this spot the society and its friends are enabled to take the animals and birds which they may import into the colony. In order to fit it for the reception of animals, a sum of about 4000*l.* has been expended. There are paddocks with sheds erected, into which the goats and llamas that feed about the park in the daytime are driven for shelter. In the 50 acres which are allotted to the society ample arrangements have been made for dividing and classifying the live stock. Substantially-constructed cages contain pheasants and doves, and such class of birds, with shelter cots in the centre. The water fowl have their ponds in which to disport themselves, and an island on which to breed. The zebras, the elks, and the ostriches have their separate compartments; a system, in short, is provided even more complete than that which exists at our own Zoological Gardens in the Regent's Park. What would, however, be a novelty, and, indeed, a matter of surprise to many persons in this country, is the care which is manifestly bestowed upon the protection of those small birds which are considered here as the general enemy of the gardener and farmer. There, sparrows, and rooks, and finches, and yellowhammers, and blackbirds, and thrushes, and linnets, and robin redbreasts, and a host of other familiar members of the feathered tribes, have been brought together, and, after resting from the fatigues of their voyage across the sea, they are set at liberty to breed in the country, and establish for their races a home among the wilds of Australia. The birds which have been set at liberty at the Botanical Gardens of Victoria up to the present time have been 18 canaries, 18 blackbirds, 24 thrushes, 6 Californian quail, 60 English wild ducks, 35 Java sparrows, 4 English robins, 8 turtle doves, and 50 mino birds. At Philip Island there have been located 5 pheasants, 6 skylarks, 6 Californian quail, 4 thrushes, 4 blackbirds, 1 pair white swans; at Sandhurst, 4 pheasants, 4 skylarks, and 4 thrushes; at Yarra, 6 thrushes and 4 skylarks; and near Sydney, 7 thrushes, 4 skylarks, and 10 blackbirds. The stock on hand of beasts, birds, and fishes is not only interesting as shewing the value which is set upon

News of the Week.

By the overland mail we have full details of the attack of Admiral Kuper's fleet on Prince Satsuma's stronghold at Kagosima. They confirm the telegraphic announcement that the Japanese batteries were silenced, and the town of Kagosima destroyed by fire, but at the same time they show that the object with which the expedition was sent into the Japan seas was not accomplished, and that the success of the fleet in silencing the forts was dearly purchased by the loss of the captain and commander of the flagship, in addition to 11 men killed and 50 wounded. It now remains to be decided what are the next steps to be taken to obtain reparation for the murder of Mr. Richardson, and for the other outrages committed on English residents in Japan. Prince Satsuma, who has submitted to the destruction of his property rather than comply with our demands, is said to be as powerful as the Tycoon himself, and it is considered improbable that matters will ever be brought to a satisfactory termination without the aid of a strong military force.

The results of the Prussian elections continue to be more unfavourable to the King and his Ministers than the most sanguine members of the opposition had ventured to anticipate. In Berlin all the candidates of the Fortschritt party have been returned by large majorities, and the telegrams from the provinces indicate a decided triumph for the Liberal party.

In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday the Danish Minister presented the reply of Denmark to the resolution of the Diet to send an army of execution to Holstein. The reply is conciliatory in form, but in all essential points it maintains the views hitherto held by the Danish Government. At the same sitting a third note of Earl Russell was communicated to the Diet. His Lordship in this note endeavours to form a basis upon which a mediation between Denmark and Germany may be established in accordance with international law. Meanwhile it is reported that Prussia and Austria have determined upon definitively rejecting the mediation of England, on the ground that the subject involved is one of a purely domestic character.

From the United States we learn that General Lee's whole army crossed the Rapidan on the 8th inst. with the intention of turning General Meade's right. A cavalry engagement on the 10th ended in the defeat of the Federals, and General Meade was obliged to retreat to Culpepper and afterwards to cross the Rappahannock. The retreat is said to have been made in good order, though he was severely harassed by the Confederate cavalry. He subsequently found himself unable to make a stand on the north bank of the Rappahannock, and retreated to Manassas Plains, after burning his stores and everything which could not be readily removed. On the evening of the 14th General Lee attempted to get in General Meade's rear by way of Fairfax Court House, and thus cut him off from direct communication with Washington. The attempt, however, was defeated by General Meade himself falling back to Fairfax, which is only 15 miles from Washington. At the latest dates the armies were still confronting each other. General Hill, however, had moved round the Federals in the direction of Leesburg, and a general engagement appeared imminent, unless General Meade should still decline to accept battle. The position of General Rosencrans in Tennessee has also become very critical. He has not only not received the expected reinforcements from the West, but the Confederates have made arrangements which will render it very difficult for any reinforcements to reach him, while they have completely isolated him from General Burnside. The threatened attack on Charleston has not been made, and the Confederates have effectually closed the harbour channels to the entrance of the ironclads. The repulse of the Federals above Port Hudson is confirmed. The latest news says that President Lincoln has considered it necessary to call for 300,000 volunteers. Mr. Curtin, the Republican candidate, has been elected Governor of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Vallandigham has been defeated in Ohio by a large majority.

Home News.

THE QUEEN'S RETURN TO WINDSOR.—The Queen, accompanied by Prince Leopold, Princesses Helena, Louisa, and Beatrice, and the children of the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Prussia, left Balmoral on Tuesday about noon, and reached Aboyne, where they commenced their railway journey at half-past 2. The Royal party reached Perth at 6.18, stopped an hour for refreshments, and resumed the journey to Windsor. The train travelled at night along the lines of the North Western Company through Carlisle, Kendal, and Preston to Bushbury Junction, and proceeded thence by the Great Western through Leamington and Oxford to Windsor, where it arrived at 3 minutes before 9 on Wednesday morning; performing the distance of 582 miles by railway in 18 hours and a half. On this occasion the public were not admitted to the stations, and every care was taken that her Majesty should be perfectly undisturbed during the journey, and the usual precautions observed to ensure the safety of the train. Her Majesty bore the fatigue of the journey remarkably well, and was in the enjoyment of excellent health. On Thursday morning the Queen walked and drove in the grounds, accompanied by Princess Louisa. Princess Helena came to London, and returned in the afternoon.

THE QUEEN IN SCOTLAND.—On Wednesday week the Queen went out, accompanied by Princess Louisa. In the afternoon, her Majesty, accompanied by the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia and Princess Louis of Hesse, went up to the Prince's Cairn on Craig Lowrigan. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia lunched with her Majesty. On Thursday week the Queen went out, accompanied by Princess Louisa. In the afternoon her Majesty drove to the Balloch Buie and Glen Beg. Princess Louisa went out riding. On Friday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Louisa, drove to the Lynn of Quoich. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia dined with her Majesty. On Saturday the Queen, accompanied by Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse and Princess Helena, drove to Loch Bulig, and returned in the evening by the Sluggan water and Invercauld. Princess Louisa went out riding. On Sunday the Crown Prince and Princess took leave of the Queen, previous to making a short tour in the Highlands. On Monday their Royal Highnesses left Abergeldie for Gordon Castle. Prince and Princess Louis of Hesse, with the Princess Victoria, left the Castle for Edinburgh. The Queen drove to Bowmont's Moss, accompanied by the Princesses Helena and Louisa.

THE PRINCESS OF WALES.—The Observer of Sunday states upon what it describes as the best authority that the Princess will probably be confined in or about the last week in March.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES AT SANDRINGHAM.—On Thursday week the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian, and the Duke of Cambridge, walked and inspected the estate. The Princess of Wales, Princess Christian, and Princess Dagmar, walked in the grounds. In the afternoon the Royal party visited Houghton Hall, the residence of the Marquis Cholmondeley. On Friday evening the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian, and the Duke of Cambridge, went out shooting on the Babingley and Appleton side of the estate. The Princess of Wales, the Princess Christian, and the Princess Dagmar, walked in the grounds. On Saturday the Prince of Wales and Prince Christian went out shooting. The Princess walked in the morning, and in the afternoon drove out with the Princess Christian and the Princess Dagmar. The Duke of Cambridge left Sandringham for town. The Prince of Wales accompanied his Royal Highness to the Wolferton Station. On Sunday morning the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian, and the Princess Dagmar, attended Divine service at Sandringham Church. The Rev. G. B. Moxon, the rector, officiated. On Monday morning the Prince of Wales and Prince Christian went to Holkham for a day's shooting with the Earl of Leicester. The Princess of Wales drove out, accompanied by the Princess Christian and Princess Dagmar. On Tuesday the Prince of Wales and Prince Christian went to Newmarket and witnessed the running for the Cambridgeshire Stakes. Earl Granville arrived at Sandringham on a visit. On Wednesday the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian, and Earl Granville walked over the estate. In the afternoon the Princess of Wales, Princess Christian, and the Princess Dagmar drove out. On Thursday morning Prince Christian left Sandringham for Oxford, to visit his son Prince Frederick.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS LOUIS OF HESSE, with the Princess Victoria, arrived at Douglas's Hotel, Edinburgh, on Monday night from Balmoral. On Tuesday their Royal Highnesses spent the day with Prince Alfred and Prince William of Hesse at Holyrood Palace, and in the evening left for London by the Great Northern express, arriving at Buckingham Palace about half past 10 on Wednesday morning. The Duke of Cambridge, the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Princess Mary visited the Prince and Princess at Buckingham Palace during the day. On Thursday Prince Arthur arrived from Greenwich, and visited their Royal Highnesses at Buckingham Palace, returning to Greenwich in the afternoon. The Prince and Princess visited the Royal Horticultural Gardens at South Kensington, and in the evening honoured the Adelphi Theatre with their presence. Yesterday morning their Royal Highnesses left town for Dover, there to embark for Calais on their return to Germany.

THE PRINCESS HOHENLOHE arrived at Windsor Castle from the Continent on Tuesday afternoon, on a visit to her Majesty.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—The Hon. F. Lygon was elected for West Worcestershire on Monday without opposition. The election for Tewkesbury, rendered vacant by this election, will not take place until the meeting of Parliament, when Mr. Yorke, who is the only candidate in the field, is expected to be returned without opposition. There is a vacancy for Andover caused by the death of Mr. Cubitt.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor presided at a Ministerial Council on Sunday and at another on Wednesday. The Minister for Foreign Affairs had a conference with his Majesty on Monday. The Empress arrived at Toulon on Thursday morning, and was received by the authorities of the town. Her Majesty was afterwards present at the launch of a frigate and a steam debarcation, and left for Paris in the evening. The Emperor, moved by the cordial reception of her Imperial Majesty at Madrid, has thanked the Queen of Spain by telegraph; and is said to have invited her Majesty to visit France in the ensuing spring. The Moniteur of Sunday, giving an account of the reception of the Empress in Spain, says:—

"The visit of the Empress is destined, both in the present and in the future, to exercise a happy influence upon the relations which unite France and Spain."

The King of Greece embarked at Toulon on Saturday for Athens, intending to touch at Messina on his way. The French and Italian squadrons from Ajaccio were present at the departure of his Majesty. MM. Suin and Villemain and General Herbillon have been appointed Senators and Councillors of State. General Lawœstine has been appointed Governor of the Invalides, and General Mellinet Chief Commandant of the National Guard of the Seine. La France asserts that the Council of Ministers has examined the constitutional questions discussed by the papers upon the occasion of the decrees of the 18th of October. The Nation says it has reason to believe that M. Fould's report will state that but for the Mexican expedition the Budget will show a large surplus. It adds that the present state of the finances does not necessitate a loan of 400,000,000f. Such a measure would only be taken in the event of the political situation in Europe rendering a loan necessary. The same paper of Wednesday publishes "under reserve" the news that the French army will shortly evacuate the Pontifical States, only leaving a garrison at Civita Vecchia, and that Spain will send 10,000 men to Rome. "The journey of the Empress to Madrid," it says, "is stated to be not unconnected with this combination." At a banquet given to the cavalry officers at Versailles, Marshals Magnan, Regnault de St. Jean d'Angely, and Allonville were present. Colonel Pajol, of the Dragoons, in replying to the toast of his regiment, said:—

"Perhaps at no distant day the Emperor will summon us to measure our swords with the oppressors of a people sympathetic with France. Then, like our ancestors, we shall make known to the world the advantages to be derived from the combination of cavalry with all other arms."

The France of Monday notices with regret England and Austria's hesitation and want of decision with regard to Poland. "France," it says, "has clearly defined her views, and the efficacious form of united action. She waits for England and Austria to come to an understanding." The Patrie attacks with much warmth the policy of England, and says that she sees a question of public right in the Dano-German conflict, but refuses to see it in the cases of the Russo-Polish and American conflicts. This egotism, it says, is a sign of the decadence of England. M. Nadar and his wife have returned to Paris with the Giant balloon. As soon as the necessary repairs are effected, M. Nadar intends to bring the car and the balloon to London, for exhibition at the Crystal Palace. Dr. Richard, who was sent to Hanover to attend the wounded aëronauts, has returned to Paris. He reports that with the exception of M. St. Felix, who fractured his shoulder, none of the passengers received serious injury. Preparations are making for taking down the military statue of Napoleon I. from the column of the Place Vendôme, and replacing it with one in Imperial robes, with the crown and sceptre, in order to represent not so much the General as the founder of the dynasty. The establishment of the Messageries Impériales at Ciotat has been destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at three millions of francs.

SPAIN.—The Empress of the French left Madrid on Friday for Aranjuez and Toledo. The King and Queen accompanied her Majesty to the railway station. The Queen, on quitting the Empress of the French, presented her Majesty with a bracelet bearing the word "Recuerdo" (keepsake) in diamonds and rubies. On Tuesday afternoon the Empress embarked at Valencia, on her return to France. M. Barrot, the French Ambassador, who accompanied her Majesty, returned to Madrid. The Constitutional Opposition will put forward Señor Mon as a candidate for the presidency of the Cortes.

PORTUGAL.—The steamer Braganza, which has arrived at Lisbon from Liverpool, reports having been boarded in the Bay of Biscay by the Confederate cruiser Georgia, and being asked by her for newspapers and shipping intelligence.

SWITZERLAND.—The elections to the National Council took place on Sunday. The state of parties has very little changed. The Liberals count about five-sixths of the members selected, and the Conservatives and Ultramontanes one-sixth. M. Fornerod has been elected at Lausanne, M. Stoempfli at Berne, M. Ochs at Zurich, and M. Pioda at Ticino. The principal candidates of the Radical party, including MM. Fazy, Vautier, Challet, and Vuy, have been elected.

SWEDEN.—A despatch from Stockholm of Wednesday last says that the Swedish and Norwegian press, comprising the organs of the different political parties, are unanimous in their energetic opposition to the Danish alliance. The Finance Committee has proposed to the Council of the Empire the grant of a sum of 1,000,000 rigsdalers ([illegible] sterling), to form the two credits available by the constitution for extraordinary expenses during the current financial year. This amount, however, does not exceed the usual rate of expenditure.

DENMARK.—According to the Aftonbladet of Stockholm the King of Denmark has just delivered the following speech:—

"I have every confidence in the victory and the justice of our cause. I know that my faithful Schleswigers are Danish at heart, and that it would be a crime against them to consent to [illegible] Schleswig. History shall not tell that the last of the Oldenburgs parted with Denmark. If, however, in the course of time we must succumb, as being the weakest, and France and Sweden permit the most southern province of Scandinavia, the old Jutland of the south, to share the fate of [illegible], of Poland, and of Northern Italy, by being overpowered and oppressed by German Governments, then I will descend from the throne and will proclaim the republic. I passed three years of my youth in Switzerland; I have studied the laws and institutions of that country, and I am convinced that no people in Europe is more fitted for the republican system than my dear Danish people."

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the Federal Diet on Thursday, the reply of Denmark to the resolution of the Diet to send an army of execution to Holstein was read. The reply is conciliatory in form, but in the essential points it maintains the views hitherto held by the Danish Government. It enters into lengthy explanations, and declares that the ordinance of the 30th of March last is merely to be considered as a temporary measure. The reply was referred to the United Committee. A third Note of Earl Russell concerning the Schleswig and Holstein question was also communicated to the Diet. His Lordship in this Note endeavours to form a basis upon which a mediation in the conflict between Denmark and Germany can be established in accordance with international law. It is reported that Austria and Prussia have agreed to decline the arbitration of England in the conflict with Denmark, regarding it as having a purely German character.

PRUSSIA.—All the candidates of the Fortschritt party in Berlin have been returned by a large majority. The telegrams received up to Wednesday last from the provinces indicate a most decided triumph for the United Liberal party. Prominent among the newly-elected representatives are Herr Johann Jacoby and Professor Momsen. Herr Georg von Vincke has failed to obtain re-election by his former constituency. As regards the Conservatives, the returns indicate that they are rather more strongly represented than at the last elections. The principal members of that party elected up to the present are the Minister of War, Herr von Roon, Herren von Gottberg, Blankenburg, Schulrath, Wantrup, and Von Elsper. A Berlin letter states that the Prime Minister, Count von Bismark, has just received the following extraordinary letter, written in French and bearing the postmark of Barcelona. It is believed, however, to be a hoax:—

"The undersigned, the committee of the revolutionary propagandists, have summoned you before its tribunal. You have been condemned to death unanimously, and the execution is fixed to take place during the first few days of next month. It is useless to attempt to escape your doom. An avenging hand would reach you were you in the spot the most sacred. (Signed) The Chief of the Committee. Death to all traitors!"

AUSTRIA.—The Conference of Ministers at Nuremberg closed on Friday. The Ministers who took part in the meeting left on Saturday morning, and are said to be satisfied with the result. In the sitting of the Reichsrath on Wednesday the Finance Committee proposed to grant to the Minister of Finance a loan of 80,000,000fl. Count Wickenburg, the Minister of Commerce, has been relieved of his functions, and appointed member of the Upper House for life. It is said that the post he has quitted will not be filled up for the present.

HUNGARY.—The Chancellor of Hungary has forwarded a letter to the Lower House of the Reichsrath, stating that he will be represented by an Aulic Councillor in the Finance Committee during the debate upon the loan to palliate the distress existing in Hungary. The Surgöny of Pesth on Saturday published a leading article, in which it openly pronounces itself in favour of the acceptance of the February constitution. It reminds its readers that the acceptance of the Pragmatic Sanction took place in Hungary 10 years later than in Transylvania, and it proves that the apprehension of being annihilated by the majority of the Reichsrath is not justified. It concludes by urging the acceptance of the constitution as soon as possible, in case the Nationalities, tired of waiting, might declare their adhesion without the concurrence of the Hungarians.

Russia.—The French papers state that Earl Russell a few days since addressed a despatch to the English Minister at St. Petersburg, repeating in an official form, as the deliberate opinion of the Government, that Russia had forfeited the right she had acquired to Poland under the Vienna Treaty; and that a counter order was sent by telegraph that this despatch should not be communicated to Prince Gortschakoff. It is stated that the counter-order was obtained at the pressing instance of Count Von Bismark, the Prussian Prime Minister, who instructed the Prussian Minister in London to take the earliest opportunity of declaring to Lord Russell that Prussia not only would not join in the intervention of the Powers, but would consider armed intervention as a casus belli. Letters from St. Petersburg state that General Annenkoff and General Mouravieff have both demanded their recall. Numerous reinforcements have been sent to the Caucasus, and the corps of observation in Bessarabia has been considerably increased.

Poland. — The landowner Piotrowski and the peasants Horuszewski and Profunezuk have been hung at Dobryr, in the government of Grodno, by order of General Mouravieff; and on Thursday four Polish gendarmes were hung in the Gezyboff Square, in Warsaw, by sentence of court-martial. In the course of Friday night 50 members of the municipality of Warsaw were arrested. Among them were Provosts Bialsbezeski, Wyscynski, and Stecki, the photographer Bayer, the banker Kamics, the pastor Kramstuck, and the editor Neufeld. On the same day a razzia was made upon the young men of Warsaw. Several hundreds were seized, searched, and stripped to the skin. The same operation was repeated at night, 180 young men being arrested and carried off to the citadel. A domiciliary visit also took place at the residence of the Saxon Consul, Herr Lessir. His effects were sealed up, and the Consul himself confined to his house. General Trepow, the chief of the police, has since paid a visit to the Consul, and explained that the steps taken with respect to him were the result of a misunderstanding. The seals placed upon the Saxon Chancellery have been removed. General Berg has ordered that passports for abroad be no longer delivered on any pretext. He has also issued orders forbidding mourning to be worn after the 10th November. Passengers on foot violating the ordinance are to be fined 10 roubles; the proprietors of private carriages with mourning emblems, 100 roubles; persons in hired vehicles, 15 roubles. Officials transgressing are to forfeit one month's pay. Mourning for the dead is permitted. On the 14th the detachment under the orders of Captain Vendorff defeated the remainder of the united bands of Slapski and Matuszewicz in the district of Kalisch. The insurgents suffered a considerable loss. Russian accounts say that the corps commanded by Waligorski and Slaski, 700 strong, has been completely defeated by the Russians, and that the fugitives retreated upon Austrian territory. Another account says that a corps under Waligorski is encamped on the Galician frontier. Russians being on their way to meet them, an encounter is expected. Czachowski has gained a decided victory over Russian infantry and cavalry, capturing their arms and munitions. The Russians retreated to Staszow, in the government of Radom. Another account says that Czachowski's detachment has been almost entirely dispersed, and that Czachowski himself fled with a body of cavalry. A corps of 2000 well-armed insurgents, with cavalry, has crossed the Vistula at Baranow—and entered Poland. At Palawy, on the Vistula, the insurgents have captured a Russian convoy. Another band, numbering 700 men, is said to have been defeated and dispersed. A new insurgent corps has since made its appearance, commanded by Baron Plötz. Railway communication between Warsaw and Vienna is interrupted, the insurgents having destroyed the bridge at Skierniewice.

Italy.—The Official Gazette of Saturday publishes a decree convoking the Senate and Chamber of Deputies for the 17th November. The review of the Italian naval squadron, consisting of 24 vessels, will take place at Naples on the 10th November. The King will leave Turin for Naples on the 7th. The Diplomatic Body have been invited to accompany the King to witness the review. M. de Sartiges has been decorated with the grand cross of the order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus. Gen. Bixio has been appointed to the command of the military department of Alessandria. Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne has arrived at Turin and had an interview with M. de Sartiges, who will immediately repair to Rome. The young Queen of Naples is in bad health, and is said to be spitting blood. Her cousin, the King of Bavaria, anxious to effect her restoration to health, has brought with him a German doctor of great repute, under whose care he is desirous of placing her.

Sicily.—The King of the Greeks arrived at Messina on Tuesday morning, and was received by the civil and military authorities. His Majesty proceeded on his voyage after a stay of four hours.

Malta.—The Maltese papers loudly protest against the assertion of La France that discontent exists in Malta. They admit, however, that a petition is in course of signature against the military administration of the island; praying for the appointment of a civil governor and a reform of their council.

Ionian Islands.—The Lord High Commissioner has stated, in reply to the address of the Ionian Parliament, that the British Government was unable to come to any decision at present as to the demolition of the fortifications, the other great Powers having not yet come to an understanding upon the question. The Parliament was prorogued on Saturday for six months. Public rejoicings on account of the annexation continue.

Turkey.—The question of the Budget is settled. The surplus is to remain undiminished, and the Imperial Bank is to pay the dividends on the New Consolidés in Constantinople. The Nord asserts that there is no truth whatever in the assertion that Russia is building vessels of war in the Black Sea, or that her relations with Turkey are disturbed. The entire statement is based upon the additions being made to the fortifications of Kertch.

Syria.—The Opinion Nationale states that a serious state of things prevails in Syria, and says that 20,000 Arabs have revolted in the Hauran, and that the English have recommenced their intrigues, and patronise the Greek Catholic candidate for the position held by Daoud Pacha.

China.—From Pekin and the northern ports there is no news of importance; everything appears to be quiet at the foreign settlements. Major Gordon continues to manœuvre against the rebels. He is said to have occupied an island in the Tae Hu Lake, while Dr. Macartney has taken a large city called Fungching. The rowdies who compose Burgevine's force have not again attacked the Imperial troops. It is rumoured that they are to be led against Ningpo; and, as loot is their object, and they cannot sack Shanghai, the rumour may prove correct. The American Consul has protested against the proclamation of the military mandarin at Shanghae offering a reward of 1000*l.* for the person of Burgevine, dead or alive, but the mandarin has refused to withdraw the proclamation.

Japan.—By the overland mail we have further details of Admiral Kuper's operations at Kagosima. It appears that the fleet reached Kagosima on the 24th August, and that Colonel Neale at once intimated by letter to Prince Satsuma that the object of its visit was to demand 25,000*l.* compensation for Mr. Richardson's murder, and the execution of his assassins. A vague and unsatisfactory reply having been returned, a second more stringently worded despatch was sent, but as it produced no more satisfactory result it was resolved to commence measures of coercion. Prince Satsuma had lately bought three steamers, the Sir George Grey, Content, and England, which were lying, as it was thought, safe in a small inlet, out of reach of the guns of the fleet. It was decided to cut these out, an operation which was quickly effected by the boats. The steamers were then lashed alongside three gunboats, and a further delay ensued to enable the Japanese to choose their course of action. A volley fired from one of the heaviest batteries at the Euryalus flagship, soon showed that they had determined on hostilities, and Admiral Kuper at once ordered the three prizes to be cut adrift and burnt, and a general engagement ensued. The Japanese fought their guns admirably, and the cannonade, after six hours' continuance, was only put a stop to by night, without any apparent relaxation in their fire. The next morning, however, it was notably weaker, and in less than two hours had completely ceased. By this time the fortifications were almost destroyed, two-thirds of Kagosima were levelled with the ground, and a large arsenal and foundry had been reduced to ruins. With the exception of the Euryalus, which led the line and sustained the heaviest fire, the British fleet escaped without serious injury. The flagship, however, suffered severely. Her Captain (Josling) and Commander (Wilmot) were killed; Lieutenant Jephson was wounded, besides 30 of the crew put hors de combat. The Euryalus was holled ten times, and her masts and rigging cut to pieces. The casualties among the remaining vessels were only 33. The vessels engaged were the Euryalus, Pearl, Argus, Perseus, Coquette, Havoc, and Racehorse. The first two only are frigates. The guns used by the Japanese varied between 150-pounders and 32-pounders, and are said to have been of American manufacture. Admiral Kuper had now done his worst. Without a land force he could do nothing further to compel Satsuma to accede to our demands; and as the latter evinced no desire to negotiate, the Admiral left for Yokohama on the 17th to refit. The Rattler, which arrived at Hong Kong on the 30th, brought news of his safe arrival; she was sent over for provisions and stores, and left again with all speed on the 1st September. Everything was quiet, both at Yokohama and Nagasaki, when she started.

United States.—General Lee's whole army crossed the Rapidan on the 8th inst., moving towards Madison Court House, to turn General Meade's right. A sharp engagement occurred on the 10th, between a Federal reconnoitring party and Stuart's cavalry, near Robertson's River, resulting in a defeat of the Federals, who were pushed back to Culpepper. General Meade subsequently abandoned Culpepper, and has fallen back to the north bank of the Rappahannock, in the neighbourhood of Manassas Plains, Gen. Lee's whole force, having crossed the Rappahannock, pressing his rear. The retreat of General Meade was conducted in good order and with little loss. General Buford's and Kilpatrick's cavalry, which covered the rear, had severe engagements with the Confederates, experiencing considerable losses in officers and men. Gregg's cavalry was surrounded while reconnoitring, and lost 500 men. On the 14th a desperate fight occurred between Generals Lee and Meade near Bristow Station and Manassas Junction. On the following day General Meade issued a complimentary order, reporting to his army that the attack made upon its rear guard had been repulsed with the loss to the enemy of five cannon, two colours, and 450 prisoners. On the evening of the same day General Lee attempted to flank General Meade by way of Chantilly, and to get in his rear through Fairfax Court-house. The attempt was frustrated by General Meade falling back to Fairfax, which is only 15 miles from Washington. The objects of Lee's advance and the reason for Meade's refusal to accept battle form the subject of much conjecture. General Meade is in position at Centreville, but General Lee has not yet crossed the Potomac. General Lee occupies the old battlefield of Bull Run, and his pickets are close on Meade's front. A Confederate corps under Hill moved towards Leesburg on the 15th. A Federal reconnoitring force was watching its movements. The Confederates hold all the Bull Run mountain passes. Chattanooga advices to the 10th inst. report that the Federal artillery have compelled the withdrawal of Bragg's head-quarters from Missionary Ridge, and of the Confederate batteries from the north-eastern slope of Look-out Mountain. The Confederates are building pontoons, probably with the view of crossing the river to flank Rosencrans. The Confederate Gen. Wheeler, with his cavalry, recently engaged in harassing General Rosencrans's supply trains, had returned to Georgia, crossing the Tennessee at Misele Shoals, in Alabama, pursued to its banks by the Federals. The railroad between Nashville and Stevenson has been repaired. It is reported that no Western reinforcements have yet reached Chattanooga. The Confederates are intrenching themselves in force on Burnside's left, and Bragg has thrown a force across the Kiawashee river, upon Burnside's right, compelling him to fall back to beyond Athens which the Confederates occupy, thus isolating Burnside from Rosencrans. General Burnside however is said to have been successfully skirmishing on the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad. General Longstreet has succeeded Bishop Polk, who has been suspended on account of a misunderstanding between him and the general commanding the department. The Atlanta papers report that President Davis will shortly move to Georgia to command Bragg's army. Advices from Charleston to the 11th state that the closing of Charleston Channel to the iron-clads will, it is supposed, render the siege of Charleston very lengthy. A vessel carrying a torpedo had struck the Ironsides amidships. The explosion caused a severe shock, breaking the bulkheads. Official despatches say she is not materially injured. The torpedo vessel was sunk, and her captain captured. He asserts that the Ironsides was driven under, so that the water ran into the torpedo's smoke-stack. Three Monitors have been injured by the Confederate batteries, and are repairing at Hilton Head. One, struck in the side, leaks. Washington despatches assert that a combined land and naval attack against Charleston will shortly take place. The repulse of the Federals above Port Hudson is confirmed. They lost 480 prisoners. General Dana has since advanced against the Confederates, who retreated. The Federals advancing into the Teche country are still occupied in considerable skirmishing. Gen. Blunt has started in pursuit of the Confederates who captured his body guard. Guerillas are still active in Missouri and along the Pacific railroad. Generals Price and Kirby Smith are reported moving on Little Rock in force. Shelby's guerillas have been defeated in Missouri, losing all their artillery, baggage, and numerous prisoners. The Federal General Saxton has placed a lien upon the North Carolina cotton crop until all the claims of the plantation labourers are paid. Mr. Curtin, the Republican candidate, has been elected Governor of Pennsylvania. Mr. Vallandigham has been defeated in Ohio by a large majority. The elections in Iowa and Indiana have also gone in favour of the Ministerial candidates and of the vigorous prosecution of the war. President Lincoln has called for 300,000 volunteers. The bad feeling between the Conservatives and Abolitionists in Missouri is increasing. The Governor of Missouri has warned the people against forcible interference with the State government or with the elections. It is reported that President Lincoln refuses to comply with the principal requirements of the Missouri Abolition delegation. Secretary Chase, who is making a tour in the West, has delivered a speech in Cincinnati, in which he justified every act of the Administration, and believed the rebellion virtually at an end. He declared that the evidences of strength shown by the Republic during the war were sufficient guarantees against intervention; that certain acts of unfriendliness had sometimes made him feel "as if he should like to take old Mother England by the hair and give her a good shaking." He was certain that no more pirate ships would be sent out from England to prey upon American commerce, and that eventually England would consider it the best policy to pay for all the depredations of the Alabama and her consorts. In another speech he declared that the English aristocracy and French despotism would like to see the Union destroyed. He attributed the non-intervention of foreign Powers to the great display of Federal strength. He foresaw a grand future of power for America; and the time would arrive, he said, when England would regret her friendship with America's enemies. He felt certain that England, after calm reflection, would conclude that it was best to pay the American merchants for the damage done by the Alabama. He thought that England would be very much troubled about Vallandigham's defeat. He did not believe that a Mexican empire could last on the American continent. The Tammany and Mozart Democratic parties at New York have united. Earl Russell's Blairgowrie speech has been favourably received. The press attributes his confirmation of England's neutrality to the great display of the Federal resources. At a citizens' banquet given to the Russians at Astor House, the Russian Admiral accepted an invitation to Baltimore. Another Russian steamer has arrived at New York, and six others are expected. Admirals Milne and Renau, with the officers of the English and French fleets, have visited the public institutions of New York. The absence of the Russian Admiral and officers, who were invited, was a subject of much remark. President Davis has been making a tour of inspection in the South. A sharp correspondence has passed between the British Consul of Savannah and the Governor of Georgia respecting the enlistment of British subjects. The Richmond Whig strongly urges the dismissal of British Consuls, because they are only accredited to President Lincoln's Government. The Richmond Despatch is incensed at the detention of the Confederate rams, and observes:—"If England would stop Irish emigration, the war would end in three months." The captain of the ship Robert Peel has protested, through Lord Lyons, against her seizure. The steam-transport Union captured the English blockade-running steamer Spaulding, on the 11th, with a valuable cargo from Nassau. The captured vessel had a crew of 25 men and 4 Confederate colonels on board, all of whom were made prisoners. The steamer Sumter is reported to be in Wilmington harbour. The steamer Bowmanaville, from Quebec for Havannah, calling at New York in distress, has been seized upon suspicion of being a blockade runner.

CANADA.—The Legislature was prorogued on the 15th inst. The Toronto Leader publishes a lengthy manifesto by Mr. W. Cornell Jewett to Governor Seymour, of New York, in advocacy of European mediation.

MEXICO.—The city of Orizaba has been captured by the Mexican forces, under General Cuellar, and General Negrete has entered Puebla, where he defeated the forces of General Ornoz, one of the French-Mexican generals. General Ornoz has been recalled by General Forey, and his command taken from him. General Marquez has been sent a prisoner to France, for some reflections cast upon the French Government in an address which he sent to the Triumvirate. The report that General Comonfort and Senor Doblado had given in their allegiance to the French, turns out to be untrue. They have both published strong appeals to their countrymen to resist the French to the last.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

CITY TRAFFIC REGULATIONS.—The Court of Aldermen have agreed to a series of bye-laws for the regulation of the City traffic, framed under the City Police Act of last session, and ordered them to be transmitted to the Home Secretary for his approval. The first and principal regulation makes it obligatory upon the driver of every omnibus and cab going eastwards through St. Paul's Churchyard, the destination of which is London Bridge, or any place beyond the bridge, to pass along Cannon Street, and to take the same route in making the reverse journey. The effect of this rule will be greatly to relieve Cheapside and the narrow gorge of the Poultry. Again, between 9 in the morning and 6 in the evening no one is to drive a vehicle through the streets so heavily laden as to require more than four horses to draw it, or laden with merchandise to a greater height than 16 feet from the ground. Between 6 in the morning and 10 at night the conducting of any kind of locomotive propelled by steam, except a steam fire-engine actually going to or returning from a fire, is strictly prohibited; as is also the driving, between 9 in the morning and 6 in the evening, of any cart or wagon wholly or partially laden with timber or any other material exceeding 25ft. in length or 8ft. 6in. in breadth. No coals, beer, wine, or other liquid in casks, conveyed in carts, waggons, or vans, will be allowed to be delivered in 24 of the principal streets of the city between 9 in the morning and 5 in the evening—namely, Gracechurch Street, Bishopsgate Street Within, Threadneedle Street, Cornhill, Lombard Street, Leadenhall Street, Fenchurch Street, Tower Street, Eastcheap, Cannon Street, King William Street, Upper or Lower Thames Street, Fleet Street, Ludgate Hill, Ludgate Street, Newgate Street, Cheapside, the Poultry, Gresham Street, Princes Street, Lothbury, Throgmorton Street, or Old Broad Street. The sale of vegetables, fruit, fish, or other articles carried upon any truck or vehicle is prohibited between 9 in the morning and 6 in the evening in the same streets, and on London and Blackfriars bridges. Every waggon, van, and the like is to be placed with its side parallel with the foot pavement when being loaded or unloaded, or stopped for any other purpose. Upwards of 70 principal places are indicated at which 88 shoeblacks may ply their calling. At the greater number of places one shoeblack will be stationed, and in many two; but at the Royal Exchange, by the Duke's statue, there well be six, and in front of the General Post Office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, four. The Commissioner of the City Police is empowered for the public convenience to alter or increase the standings or the number of shoeblacks, so that the number of standing places does not exceed 150, and the number of shoeblacks 300 in the whole. These are the principal regulations; but there are others prohibiting the obstruction of streets and footways by persons with various enumerated articles for sale, or by goods or merchandise during removal, so as to hinder or incommode a free passage. By the Act each of the by-laws, when sanctioned by the Secretary of State, may be enforced by penalties not exceeding 40s. for each offence, with the alternative of a term of imprisonment. The Aldermen have not exercised the power conferred by the Act to regulate the mode of distinguishing hackney cabs when empty and when actually plying for hire, on the ground, it is said, that these questions rest rather with Sir R. Mayne, but various improvements connected with them as well as with the inconvenient system of touting for hire are said to be under consideration. On Saturday nearly 200 drivers of omnibuses, cabs, and other vehicles, were summoned before Aldermen Wilson, Mechi, and Challis, for various offences under the Act. They were informed that the fines for all offences calculated to impede the traffic will in all cases be endorsed upon the licenses, and for every repetition of an offence double the amount of the previous penalty will be imposed. These proceedings have caused no little sensation among the drivers and proprietors of public conveyances, and on Saturday a deputation from the different proprietors of omnibuses attended before the Court of Aldermen, to hear the new Regulations read. They were informed that it is proposed to remove the present time-keepers from all the omnibus stations, and to appoint others in their places, to be under the control of the Commissioners of Police, and to be changed from time to time for the purpose of avoiding any chance of bribery. It is also proposed to remove the line of stationary omnibuses from one side of Gracechurch Street, whereby additional space for traffic will be opened in one of the most important thoroughfares. No omnibus will be allowed to turn round except on taking up its position at its starting point. Omnibuses will on no account be allowed to crawl, as it is termed, through the Poultry on their journey from London Bridge and the Bank—a practice which the magistrates are determined to put down by the most stringent measures. The deputation expressed their entire approval of all these arrangements, and their determination to aid the authorities in carrying out the regulations.

THE CORPORATION AND THE ROYAL HOSPITALS.—At the last meeting of the Court of Common Council it was resolved to institute a law suit, with the view of obtaining a conclusive decision by the proper tribunal as to the class of men eligible for election as Presidents of the Royal Hospitals. It appears that for more than 300 years, namely from 1549 to 1854, it has been the custom, whenever a vacancy has occurred in the presidency of these Hospitals, to elect the Lord Mayor for the time being, or at least an alderman who had passed the chair. This rule was first broken about nine years ago, when the Duke of Cambridge was chosen President of Christ's Hospital over the head of Alderman Sidney, the then Lord Mayor, and again within the last 12 months, when Mr. Cubitt, then no longer an alderman, was elected in preference to the present Lord Mayor. It was therefore resolved to apply for a writ of quo warranto, in order to try the legal right of Mr. Cubitt, M.P., to sit as a governor of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the ground that he was not an alderman of the City at the time of his election. The threatened litigation however has now been cut short by Mr. Cubitt's death.

GOVERNORSHIP OF THE IRISH SOCIETY.—The Lord Mayor (Alderman Rose) has been unanimously elected

Governor of the Irish Society by the Court of Common Council, in the room of the late Alderman Humphery.

Westminster Bridge Approaches.—Notices are posted up in Palace Yard, by direction of the commissioners for the erection of Westminster Bridge, that it is their intention to sell some more houses in Bridge Street and Palace Yard, which are to be taken down in order to widen the approach to the bridge. It is expected that before the meeting of Parliament the remainder of the houses will be cleared away, so that there will be an open space to Westminster Hall.

Northern Embankment of the Thames.—At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works, the tender of Messrs. Furness for the construction of the northern embankment between Westminster and Waterloo Bridges, his sureties having been found satisfactory, was accepted. The sum demanded for the contract was 520,000*l.* There was another estimate lower by 25,000*l.*, but the Board was not satisfied with the securities offered nor with the competency of the contractors to carry out the work. At a previous meeting the Embankment Committee had reported that they had considered the plans of the engineer for the construction of the embankment, and had received from their superintending architect a report which had been carefully examined by their solicitor with regard to the properties referred to, and had directed the necessary notices to be served for acquiring or otherwise dealing with those properties. They had also ascertained that the question with regard to the interest of the Crown in the foreshore required for the works had been arranged, and that no impediment existed to the Board approving the plans and letting the contract for the works in question. It is understood that the works will now be commenced forthwith. The tenders for the embarkment between Waterloo Bridge and the Temple Gardens are to be sent in on the 26th November.

The Public Health. — The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended on Saturday, October 24, were 1246. The average number in the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1888. The present return is therefore 58 above the average. During the week the births of 1003 boys and 948 girls, in all 1951 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1889.

Provincial.

Aberavon.—Relays of workmen have been almost constantly employed, since the recent explosion at Morfa Colliery, in endeavouring to recover the bodies still in the pit; but in consequence of the extensive falls of roof and rubbish the work proceeds but slowly, and up to Saturday there were nearly 20 bodies unrecovered. Two more of the sufferers have died from the serious injuries they received, making a total of 39 deaths. Messrs. Vivian, the proprietors, and Mr. C. R. M. Talbot, the lessor of the colliery, have undertaken the whole responsibility of providing for the future wants of the sufferers by the calamity. This spontaneous act of generosity has made a deep impression throughout the entire district.

Birkenhead.—On Monday there was a report that the steam ram lately lying in the Great Float, had slipped out in the fog on pretence of a trial trip. It turned out that it was the other ram, El Mounassir, which had been taken out of Messrs. Laird's large graving dock, and after making a single turn in the river, with the aid of tug-boats, she went into the dock again, the manœuvre having been performed, it is said, to enable another vessel under repair to enter the graving dock. During these proceedings El Toussoun remained in the Great Float, with workmen on board. On Tuesday afternoon a body of armed marines was landed from her Majesty's ship Majestic, and, backed by this force, Mr. Morgan, of the Customs, took formal possession of both rams, and ordered the workmen to leave the ship. The order for the seizures is said to have come from the Foreign Office. The gunboat Heron now lies with steam up, moored to a buoy opposite Messrs. Laird's yard, and the gunboat Goshawk still keeps watch over El Toussoun. The Prince Consort ironplated frigate has since arrived at Holyhead from Plymouth, to assist in preventing any attempt to get the rams away surreptitiously.

Burslem.—The ceremony of laying the first stone of a new public building as a memorial of the life and labours of the late Josiah Wedgwood, who was a native of this town, took place on Monday in the presence of Earl Granville, the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, the High Sheriff of the county, the Bishop of Lichfield, Viscount Ingestre, M.P., the Right Hon. R. Lowe, M.P., the Right Hon. C. B. Adderly, M.P., Sir S. Glynne, Sir J. Duke, M.P., Alderman Copeland, M.P., Mr. Ewart, M.P., Mr. Bramley Moore, M.P., Mr. Salt, M.P., Mr. Grenfell, M.P., Mr. Beresford Hope, Mr. J. Wedgwood, and a large number of gentlemen connected with the Staffordshire pottery and iron works. The ceremony of laying the stone was performed by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., Chancellor of the Exchequer. The proceedings commenced with the presentation of an address to Mr. Gladstone from the high bailiff and local officers of the town, and of another address from the working men, both of which were acknowledged by the right hon. gentleman in suitable terms. The foundation stone was then laid with the usual ceremonies, prayer having first been offered by the Bishop of Lichfield. Mr. Gladstone then read an address on the life and times of Josiah Wedgwood, and on the peculiar characteristics of his works in relation to their beauty and utility, and to their effects on the ceramic art, not only in England but in Europe at large. This address fills upwards of four columns of the daily papers. The following are extracts:—

"Of imagination, fancy, taste, of the higher cultivation in all its forms, this great nation has abundance. Of industry, skill, perseverance, mechanical contrivance, it has a yet larger stock, which overflows our narrow bounds and floods the world. The one great want is to bring these two groups of qualities harmoniously together, and this was the peculiar excellence of Wedgwood. His excellence was peculiar in such a degree as to gain his name a place above every other, so far as I know, in the history of British industry, and remarkable, and entitled to fame even in the history of the industry of the world. We make our first introduction to Wedgwood about the year 1741, as the youngest of a family of 13 children, and as put to earn his bread at 11 years of age in the trade of his father, and in the branch of a 'thrower.' Then comes the well-known attack of small-pox, the settling of the disease in the lower part of the leg, and the amputation of the limb, rendering him lame for life. It is not often that we have such palpable occasion to record our obligations to the small-pox, but in the wonderful ways of Providence that disease, which came to him as a two-fold scourge, was probably the occasion of his subsequent excellence. It prevented him from growing up to be the active, vigorous English workman, possessed of all his limbs, and knowing right well the use of them; it put him upon considering whether, as he could not be that, he might not be something else, and something greater. It sent his mind inwards, and drove him to meditate upon the laws and secrets of his art; the result was that he arrived at the perception and the grasp of them, which might perhaps have been envied, and certainly had been owned, by an Athenian potter. Relentless criticism has torn to pieces the old legend of King Numa receiving in a cavern from the nymph Egeria the laws that were to govern Rome; but no criticism can shake the record of that illness and mutilation of the boy Josiah Wedgwood, which made for him a cavern of his bedroom and an oracle of his own inquiring, searching, inventive, and fruitful mind. From those early days of suffering—weary perhaps to him as they went by, but bright surely in the retrospect lost to him and to us—a mark seems at once to have been set upon his career. But those who would dwell upon his history have to deplore that many of the materials are wanting. It is not creditable to his country or his art that the life of Wedgwood should still remain unwritten. Here is a man who, in the well-chosen words of his epitaph, 'converted a rude and inconsiderable manufacture into an elegant art, into an important branch of national commerce.' Here is a man who, beginning as it were from zero, had, unaided by the royal or national gifts which were found necessary to uphold the glories of Sèvres, Chelsea, and of Dresden, produced works truer perhaps to the inexorable laws of art than the fine fabrics that proceeded from those establishments, and scarcely less attractive to the public taste. Here is a man who found his business cooped up within a narrow valley by the want of even tolerable communications, and who, while he devoted his mind to lifting that business from meanness, and ugliness and weakness, to the highest excellence of material and form, had surplus energy to take a leading part in great engineering works like the Grand Trunk Canal, from the Mersey to the Trent, which made the raw material of his industry abundant and cheap, which supplied a vent for the manufactured article, and opened for it materially a way to the outer world. Lastly, here is a man who found his country dependent upon others for its supplies of all the finer earthenware, but who by his single strength reversed the inclination of the scale and scattered his productions all over the breadth of the continent of Europe. Commerce did for him what the kings of France did for Sèvres, and the Duke of Cumberland for Chelsea, viz., provided him with funds. And I would venture to say that the lower works of Wedgwood are as much distinguished by the fineness and accuracy of the adaptation to their uses as his higher ones by the successful exhibition of the finest art. Take, for instance, his common plates of the value of a few pence each. They fit one another closely, as the cards in a pack. At least, I for one have never seen any plates that fit like those of Wedgwood, and become one solid mass. This accuracy of form must, I apprehend, render them much more safe in carriage. Of the excellence of these plates we may take it for a proof that they were largely exported to France, if not elsewhere; that they were then printed or painted with buildings or scenes belonging to that country, and then sent out again as national manufactures. Again, take such a jug as he would have manufactured for the garret washhand table. I have seen these made apparently of the commonest material used in the trade, but instead of being built up like many more fashionable jugs of modern manufacture, in such a manner that a crane could not get his neck to bend into them, and that the water cannot be poured out of them without risk of spraining the wrist, they are constructed in a simple, capacious form of flowing curves, broad at the top, and so poised that a slight movement of the hand discharges the water. A round cheese-holder or dish generally presents in its upper part a flat space surrounded by a curved rim; but a cheeseholder of Wedgwood's will make itself known by this—that the flat is so dead a flat, and its curve so marked and bold a curve, at once furnishing the eye with a line agreeable and well defined, and affording the utmost available space for the cheese. I feel persuaded that a Wiltshire cheese, if it could speak, would declare itself infinitely more comfortable in a dish of Wedgwood's than in any other dish. Again there are certain circular inkstands by Wedgwood which are thus described in the 21st section of the catalogue: Great care has been bestowed upon the mechanical arrangement with a view to the preservation of the pen, and the economical and cleanly use of the ink. The prices are from sixpence to eight shillings, according to size and finish. I have one of them, not, however, black like those mentioned in the catalogue, but of his creamy white ware. I guess it must have been published at the price of a shilling or less. It carries a slightly raised rectilinear ornament, which agreeably relieves a form otherwise somewhat monotonous. It is so tasteful that it would not disgrace a cabinet, so plain that it would suit a counting-house. It has no pretension. All Wedgwood's works from the lowest upwards abhor pretension. Wedgwood always seems to have in view a standard of excellence indefinitely high. He never falls into extravagance or excess. I do not mean to say that all the works produced from his furnaces are equally satisfactory, but I am confident that it is easy, even from his cheapest and lower productions, to prove him to have been a man of real genius, thoroughly penetrated with the best principles of art. I have spoken of Wedgwood's cheapest, and also of his costliest, productions; let me now say a word on those which were intermediate. Of those some appear to me to be absolutely faultless in their kind, and to exhibit as happily as the remains of the best Greek art both the mode and the degree in which beauty and convenience may be made to combine in manufacture. I have a slate-coloured déjeûner of the ware which I believe is called Jasper ware. This seems to me a perfect model. The tray is a short oval, excessively light, with a surface soft as the finest flesh to the touch, having for ornament a mere scroll of white riband, very graceful in its folds, and shaded with partial transparency. The upper pieces have a ribbed surface, and a similar scroll re-appears, while for their principal ornament they are dotted with white quatrefoils. These quatrefoils are delicately adjusted in size to the varying circumferences, are executed with a rare feeling of nature, and with a precision that would scarcely do discredit to a jeweller. Of the personal character of Wedgwood in its inner sense, the world has not yet been informed; but I can never presume otherwise than well of one who in all those aspects which offer themselves to the view of the world appears to have been admirable. For our present purpose, let us consider him only as a master, which is a matter of more than common interest at a time when so many of the most eminent firms in the district have in a manner the most laudable themselves called the attention of public authority to the condition of their younger labourers, with a view of obtaining the friendly aid of legislative interference for their instruction and protection. Mr. Smiles says that a half-savage thinly populated district of 7000 persons, in 1760 partially employed and ill remunerated, was increased in the course of some 25 years to about treble in population, abundantly employed, prosperous, and comfortable. Nor was this multiplication only without improvement, for John Wesley, who had been pelted at Burslem in 1760, uses the following remarkable words: "I returned to Burslem. How is the whole face of the country changed in about 20 years, since which inhabitants have continually flowed in from every side: hence the wilderness is literally become a fruitful field. Houses, villages, towns, have sprung up, and the country is not more improved than the people." It is impossible to conceive a testimony more honourable to Wedgwood. Nor can I better conclude these remarks than by uttering the cordial hope that you, his successors, who have during late years earned so much honour for the taste and industry of the country, may profit more and more effectually by the lessons which your great forerunner has bequeathed you, and may find at least one substantial part of your reward in witnessing around you a thriving and contented, a healthy and a happy population."

Immediately on the conclusion of the address, the company adjourned to the Town Hall, where a sumptuous banquet took place under the presidency of Earl Granville.

Cambridge.—Earl Powis was on Monday elected High Steward of the University of Cambridge in room of the late Lord Lyndhurst. His lordship was elected without opposition.

Fenny Compton.—Mr. C. Plummer, formerly a servant in her Majesty's Household, was murdered in this neighbourhood on Sunday week. It appears that he was about 60 years of age, and was on a visit to his nephew, Mr. Thomas Ricketts, a farmer near this town. On the Sunday evening he was walking out in the fields with him, when two farm labourers, brothers, named Charles and Henry Beere, took offence because a terrier dog, belonging to Mr. Ricketts, ran at them. Mr. Ricketts ordered the men off the field, whereupon they attacked him with such violence that he had to run for assistance. On his return he found his uncle bleeding from horrible wounds on the head and face; caused by kicks from a heavy shoe, and he has since died of the injuries he received. Prior to his death the brothers were taken into his sick chamber, and he identified Charles Beere as the one who kicked him. This prisoner admitted that he kicked the old man, and corroborative testimony was found in two grey hairs, like those of deceased, found adhering to the toe of his hob-nailed shoe. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against Charles Beere only; but the magistrates committed both on the capital charge.

Liverpool.—At a meeting for distribution of prizes to Volunteers at Liverpool on Friday night, Mr. Laird, the member for Birkenhead, was present, and referred to his connection with the Alabama, and the two iron-plated rams now detained in the Mersey, as well as to the state of our gunnery and dockyards. On the latter subjects he said, that though we had spent upwards of 30,000,000*l.* on the navy in the last three years, we should enter upon a maritime war under the greatest disadvantages, and that an outlay of 2,500,000*l.* on the Armstrong gun had also failed to bring us value for our money. He said that the evidence given before the Commons Committee on Ordnance, of which he was a member, had shown that the old 68-pounder was still our most effective weapon at close quarters, and is superior in smashing effect to the 110-pounder Armstrong gun. If the large 300-pounder guns should be successfully manufactured, and if we determined on arming our ships with them, we must necessarily, he said, employ cupola ships only, because such artillery could not be carried on a broadside; and with such conditions before us, not an hour should have been lost in making trial of the systems proposed. He said that Captain Coles and Mr. Reed had each prepared designs for vessels to carry the new artillery; but whereas these experimental vessels ought to have been ready for sea at this moment, we should have to wait six months longer before we got them afloat. In the meantime, and while this great problem was unsolved, we had been spending millions on vessels which would be condemned as obsolete if either Mr. Reed or Captain Coles could establish his case. With regard to the dockyards he said that if such a system had prevailed in the Mersey as is to be found in all our dockyards in fitting out our ships any commercial man who knew anything of the trade of Liverpool would admit that Liverpool "would never have gone on at all." He did not however, condemn our dockyards altogether even as building yards, or desire, as others do, to see national establishments broken up; but contended that there must be a thorough change of system, and a new plan of supervision introduced before it will be possible to get the work done as it is done in every private yard in the kingdom. On the subject of the Alabama and the rams, he spoke as follows:—

"Various statements have been made about a vessel that has attained to some degree of fame. I refer to a vessel well known throughout this country as the Alabama. I am not ashamed to acknowledge that some of my family have had to do with that ship. Still some statements have been made about her which should be controverted. I should not have made any remark now but for the fact that the Government of this country have made certain statements, and have given certain legal opinions about her, and they have talked about the vessel having escaped. I see gentlemen present who are somewhat of sporting men, and well they know what I mean when I say—when hounds approach a fox cover the fox scents the hounds, and when the huntsman comes up to the cover, the fox is gone. It is nonsense to talk about the fox escaping or about the Alabama escaping. The Alabama was in dock when she was inspected by very many curious people; and in dock she took on board her coals and her stores. There was no secresy whatever observed about the ship. She went out of dock at night; and I ask you, as men of common sense, if she wanted to escape surely the night was a time when she could have escaped? But what was the fact? They were so vain-glorious about their little craft that they anchored her off the Landing-stage, and there she remained until half-past 10 to 11 the following morning, when she left for her destination. They admit that she was not fitted out as a man-of-war, and that they had no legal authority to detain that ship until a man was engaged to serve on board her as a sailor. Does any shipowner present believe, or any man connected with shipping, that the captain of a vessel supposed to be going upon any extraordinary voyage would go and tell a man who appears to have been a hired agent or spy of certain gentlemen in London? Would the captain of a ship on such an expedition go and tell a common sailor at the Sailors' Home all the ins and outs of his intentions regarding that ship? Certainly not. Now I know it is not true that that man was told anything of the sort by the captain. I have been so informed, and I believe the information to be on the best authority. But let me tell you it is not necessary, in engaging men to go to any part of the world, to tell those men where they are going; because, you know, I am an old hand myself in fitting out secret expeditions. A few years ago it was thought desirable by the Government of this country to send vessels to China and to various parts of India secretly. A Chinese war was anticipated; the Russians were expected to come down the head of the Indus and the Euphrates; and it was desirable to place faith in somebody. Her Majesty's Government were pleased to place faith in me, and I built for the British Government about a dozen vessels; but the Government said to me, 'What we want you to do, Mr. Laird, is this—we want you to build, and to arm, and to equip these vessels, and to send them out; they must be yours, and nobody must know anything about it.' Well, being a prudent sort of a shipbuilder, I said, 'I will take your order on these conditions.' I built the ships; they were armed; I engaged men; I did everything. I had to engage not only sailors, but engineers and boilermakers, ship-carpenters, and men of a variety of trades. I had to send them to various parts of the world, and I can assure you that a few shillings per month extra did all the business. They did not care where they went so long as they got a little extra pay. And, therefore, the statement regarding the captain of the Alabama having told a sailor all about the ship—whose she was, and where she was for—bears the impress of falsehood upon the very face of it. I never saw the captain of the Alabama but once, and that was after having taken the ship out, and I don't think that he was the man to make such a statement as that upon which the ship might have been stopped. Let me read you a few words from a speech of the Solicitor-General, who made another great speech the other day at Richmond. He said some months ago:—It was not till the Alabama reached the Azores that she received her stores, her captain, or her papers, and that she hoisted the Confederate flag. It is not true that she departed from the shores of this country as a ship armed for war. And then he went on to say: 'But I wish the House to understand that in those depositions there was a great mass of hearsay evidence, which, taken by itself, could not form the basis of any action. Of the six depositions transmitted on July 22, only one was good for anything at all—viz., the evidence of a person named Passmore, which was sufficient to prove the material facts. Two more were sent, corroborating Passmore, on the 24th, and were received by Earl Russell on the 26th." Passmore was the man who made the affidavit that he was told by the captain where the ship was to go. I don't believe him, and he must have got up the evidence for the occasion. Lord Palmerston, whom we all respect—said on March 27 last.—'I have myself great doubts whether, if you had seized the Alabama, we should not have been liable to considerable damages. It is generally known that she sailed from this country unarmed and not properly fitted out for war, and that she received her armament, equipment, and crew in a foreign port. Therefore, whatever suspicions we may have had—and they were all well founded, as it afterwards turned out—as to the intended destination of the vessel, her condition at that time would not have justified a seizure.' Now, here is Lord Palmerston, an old and experienced man, who says, in his opinion the Government would have been liable to considerable damages had they stopped that ship. I think, after what has been said—considering my connection with this place, and after the noise this vessel has made in the world, the meeting will excuse my having brought forward these questions. Other speeches have been made by a noble lord who does not seem to agree with Lord Palmerston. I mean Earl Russell. He made a speech the other day which has caused a great sensation all over the world, and which the Americans say is only due to the coercion they have put upon him. Earl Russell is a man who is well known and respected throughout the country by his own followers; but he is a man of whom Sidney Smith said that he had such confidence in himself that he would take command of the Channel fleet if necessary. Well, I think Earl Russell has undertaken something that he will not be able to carry through quite so easily as perhaps he might command the Channel fleet. He has undertaken to say in this country that he can do certain things, and that if he finds the law is not sufficient he can go to Parliament for an indemnity. I don't believe myself that Parliament will ever indemnify any man in the country, however powerful and however great he may be, if he is trying to transgress the law. At any rate, up to the time when the Act of Indemnity is passed, there are laws in the land which all of us are bound to obey. Laws are not made for Administrations, but for the people of this country, and the people are only bound to obey the law as it stands, and not to obey laws which may possibly come to be passed hereafter. Another eminent gentleman, Sir Roundell Palmer, had made another speech at Richmond; and I must say, having read that speech, that it is all very well for an eminent lawyer, one of the first legal authorities of the day, to make a speech in the month of March, and say that those were the views of the country, and then to make a speech in support of another client in October of opposite views; but I say it is not the duty of a man who holds the position of a statesman in this country to be placing one interpretation upon certain facts in March, and another in October.

Gloucester.—Rendcomb Manor, one of the finest estates in this county, containing upwards of 4000 acres, has been sold to Sir F. Goldsmid, Bart., Q.C., M.P. for Reading, for 160,000*l.*, by General Sir John Wright Guise, Bart. Rendcomb Park was bought of the descendants of Sir Richard Berkeley by Sir Christopher Guise, who was created a baronet by Charles II., and it has continued in the possession of the Guise family to the present time. The new owner, Sir Francis Goldsmid, is a barrister-at-law, a member of the Hebrew persuasion, and Baron de Goldsmid and de Palmeira, in Portugal.

Nottingham.—The Duke of Newcastle laid the foundation stone of a School of Art and Design in this town on the 22d inst. There was a large attendance, and his Grace dwelt at some length on the benefits to be derived from instruction in science and art generally, and especially on the advantages such an institution would afford to those connected with the peculiar manufactures of Nottingham.

Plymouth.—On Tuesday morning no small excitement was occasioned among naval circles in this town by a rumour that the promoters of the iron rams in the Mersey had threatened to send them to sea by force, and that a man of war was wanted there to intimidate them. The screw frigate Liverpool was at first mentioned as likely to be sent back, and the postponement of a court-martial upon one of her officers took place. Afterwards the new iron-plated vessel, Prince Consort, was ordered to be manned, provisioned, and stored for that destination; but ultimately this order was cancelled. In the afternoon a third order was received from London, and the Prince Consort was re-equipped, and went into the Sound in the evening, on her way to Holyhead.

Stoke by Nayland.—A fatal accident took place in the neighbourhood of this town on Tuesday. One of the pupils of Mr. Wordsworth of Gifford's Hall, Sir Hugh Nugent, Bart., 18 years of age, went out shooting with a fellow-pupil, a Spaniard. There was but one gun between them, the property of Sir Hugh, and in attempting to get over a ditch he reached the gun to his companion, holding it by the muzzle. While in the act of doing so one of the barrels of the gun went off, it is supposed from the trigger having caught in a bush, and the contents were lodged in his side, causing almost instant death. The jury at the inquest returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

Ireland.

The Representative Peerage.—The election of a representative peer for Ireland, in the room of the late Lord Downes, has terminated in the return of Lord Inchiquin.

The late Insult to the Lord-Lieutenant.—The nobility and gentry of the county Galway are hastening, at the suggestion of Lord Clancarty, the lieutenant of the county, to affix their signatures to an address to the Earl of Carlisle, expressing their surprise and deep regret at the gross mark of disrespect he recently received from the Earl of Leitrim, and stating that nothing in his administration afforded to any individual the slightest justification for conduct which, on the part of the county, they deplore and condemn. The magistrates of the Clonbur Petty Sessions have also shown their condemnation of the insult by refusing to renew the license to King, the proprietor of the Maam Hotel.

Murder in Tipperary.—A barbarous murder was committed in this county on Saturday last. A farmer named Kelly, living near the town of Borrisokane, was found lying dead in a pool of blood a little way from the high road, with his skull battered in with stones.

Railways.

Collision on the Peebles.—On Thursday afternoon a collision occurred on the Peebles Railway. Three ballast waggons got detached from the train on the Leadburn and Linton branch, now making, and ran down the main line, where they met the train from Edinburgh. A terrible shock took place. A boy, son of Mr. Tennant, of the Glen, was killed, and seven or eight passengers were injured; two or more seriously. Great damage was done to the plant. The line, which is single, is blocked. The engine-man and stoker were injured.

Accident on the North London.—On Monday afternoon an accident occurred to a train from Fenchurch Street station, which was fortunately unattended by serious consequences. When going over the viaduct at Bow Common a wheel broke off one of the carriages about the middle of the train, and it was only the break attached to the carriage that prevented it from falling. The mischief was observed by the guard and driver in time to stop the train, and the passengers escaped with only a few bruises.

Completion of the Charing-Cross Line.—Formal notice was given a few weeks since to the Railway Department of the Board of Trade that this important line would be completed by the 1st of November, and requesting that the official inspection might be made previous to the opening for public traffic; but there is still so much to be done at the London Bridge end, that it seems more likely that it will be the 1st of January before the opening can take place. Meanwhile the bridge over the Thames at Hungerford has been tested with very satisfactory results, a deflection of not more than three-eighths of an inch taking place in the first span of the Surrey side under a load equal to 700 tons. The station will have a bold semicircular roof of 170 feet span, constructed of light ironwork and glass, and will be furnished with suitable platforms for the short City traffic, and for the main line of the South-Eastern Railway. There are four lines of rails on the bridge, but these expand into seven lines within the station. The accommodation for foot passengers across the river will be provided for by means of a projecting pathway 7 feet in width on each side of the bridge, and the steamboat passengers will have the benefit, as before, of a pier at Hungerford. The Hotel, which will be over the offices in the Strand, is proceeding with rapidity, and has now reached beyond the second story. It is built of stone and white brick with terra cotta ornaments, and is from the design of Mr. Edward Barry. It will have a frontage in the Strand of about 300 feet in length, and will be set back 100 feet from the street, leaving ample room for approaches to and from the station without interfering with the accommodation for the ordinary traffic. In addition to the front facing the Strand there will be a wing on the western side of Villiers Street. The Strand front will have a tower at each end, and the roof will be in the French style, similar in many respects to that of the Grosvenor and Westminster Palace Hotels.

Sporting.

NEWMARKET HOUGHTON MEETING.

Monday.—Just before the start for the Criterion, the fog, which had prevailed all day, became so dense that Admiral Rous, after consulting with his brother stewards, postponed that race until Tuesday. Handicap Plate.—Lord Wilton's Stockinger beat Aurelian, Twilight, and 17 others. Match.—Mr. C. Alexander's f. No Name beat Black Lily. Handicap Sweeps.—Mr. W. G. Craven's Almack beat The Principal, Manrico, and 3 others. Maiden Plate.—Lord Westmoreland's Rothschild beat Lord W. Powlett's f., Mr. Taylor's c., Buckland, and 7 others. Match.—Lord Annesley's f. beat Privateer. Selling Handicap Sweeps.—Mr. W. Baker's Lady Derby beat Damascus, Country Maid, and 7 others. Sweeps.—Mr. B. J. Angell's Lord Burleigh beat Zelle, Lady Abbess, and 7 others.

Tuesday.—The attendance was enormous, and the heath was honoured by the presence of the Prince of Wales, accompanied by Prince Christian of Denmark, and the Duke of Cambridge. Fifty Pounds.—Mr. Chilton's Claxton beat Farnhurst, Jeannette, Folly, and 6 others. The Criterion Stakes.—Count F. de Lagrange's Fille de l'Air beat Prince Arthur, Evelina, Ely, and 7 others. Selling Handicap Sweeps.—Mr. R. Ten Broeck's Canzonette beat Glowworm, Topsy, Sauterelle, and Actæon. The All Aged Stakes.—Mr. W. S. Cartwright's Fairwater beat Lady Clifden, Argonaut, and Sonchamp. Sweeps.—Lord Stamford's Mahometan beat Dovedale. Fifty Pounds.—Sir F. Johnstone's Johnny Armstrong beat Croagh Patrick, Onesander, and 4 others. The Cambridgeshire Stakes.—Mr. W. Day's Catch'em Alive beat Merry Hart, Summerside, Juliet, Carnival, and 36 others. Betting—5 to 2 agst Limosina, 9 to 2 agst Catch'em Alive, 14 to 1 agst Summerside, 40 to 1 agst Juliet and Merry Hart. Won a splendid race by a head; a similar distance separated the second and third; Juliet fourth, beaten a neck; the Giraffe colt fifth, Polynesia sixth, and the next three were Borealis, Despair, and Glenorchy. Victor broke down and walked in. On returning to scale, Adams, who rode the winner, did not draw the proper weight, nor did J. Grimshaw, who rode Summerside, upon which an examination of the scales was made, and it was found some lead had been nailed to the scale adverse to the jockey, and the result was pronounced in favour of Catch'em Alive, but Lord Westmoreland, the owner of Merry Hart, subsequently lodged a protest against the decision, on the ground that Adams, after once getting out of the scales when short of weight, had no right to be re-weighed. The protest was twice investigated by the stewards of the Jockey Club, and Lord Westmoreland has bowed to their decision that Catch'em Alive was the winner. Another objection was raised in the case of the Criterion Stakes on the ground that the French filly was over age. After, however, an examination of her mouth she was declared the winner. Handicap Sweeps.—Mr. G. Bryan's Zora walked over. Handicap Sweeps.—Mr. Capel's Teddy beat Woodcraft and 8 others. The Optional Selling Stakes.—Captain Goff's c beat Mr. R. H. Nevill's c. Prescription, Lord W. Powlett's f, and 7 others. Free Handicap Sweeps.—Mr. Naylor's Fiancée beat Merry Maid and Lizzie. Sweeps.—Mr. W. Hart's Airedale beat Reindeer and 2 others.

Wednesday.—An Optional Selling Plate.—Mr. Lincoln's The Pony beat Fontenoy and Lucretia. Renewal of the Glasgow Stakes.—Lord Glasgow's b c beat Caryophyllus, Sir H. Des Vœux's c, and Mamhead. Fifty Pound Plate.—Lord Glasgow's c beat Croagh Patrick, Lady Abbess, and Reserve. Match.—Lord Coventry's Umpire beat Knowsley. Private Handicap Sweeps.—Mr. Hugh's Juliet beat Paddy O'Rourke, Cassidia, and 5 others. Private Handicap Sweep.—Marquis of Hastings' Attraction beat Soumise, Hypatia, and 4 others. Match.—Mr. Barnes' Buckfoot beat Vagabond. A Subscription Plate.—Captain Christie's Countersign beat Regina, Diomed, and 9 others. Sweeps.—Mr. W. Hart's Dolphin beat Damascus, Lord Chesterfield's b c, and 3 others. Sweeps.—Captain Christie's Lord Adolphus beat Tailor, Verdiere, Annington, and Alliance. Sweeps.—Mr. R. C. Naylor's Polonaise beat Topsy, Daniel, and 4 others. Sweeps.—Mr. W. S. Cartwright's Ely beat Beatrix and Mahometan.

Law.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—The Marylebone Murder.—Sarah Emily Mitchell, 24, an unmarried woman, who appeared in a dreadful state of mental suffering, was charged with the wilful murder of her illegitimate child, Sarah Emily Adeline Chappell. It will be remembered that the prisoner had formed a connection with Mr. Chappell, a linendraper of Liverpool, by whom she had two children. They came up to London, and after living together some time she became jealous of Mr. Chappell, who had apparently become tired of the connection, and was making arrangements for a separation about the time when the second child was born. This preyed on the mind of the mother, who had previously been in such an excited state as to suggest to her medical attendants the propriety of putting her under restraint, and in the absence of her sister she destroyed the child. The jury, after hearing the medical evidence as to the prisoner's state of mind, stopped the case, and returned a verdict of Not Guilty on the ground of insanity. Fraudulent Benefit Societies.—John Knowlden, Thomas Oxford, and John Dron were indicted for conspiracy in having as managers and officers of the Perseverance Life Assurance and Sick Fund Friendly Society, continued the business with intent to defraud the public. It appeared that they took an office in Willow Place, Newington, and began with a deposit of 20*l.* in the London Provident Savings Bank. They carried on the process of touting among small tradespeople, widows, and others, assuring them that their Society had a reserve fund of 5000*l.* to fall back upon. One of the persons insured, a man called Littlejohn, having died of consumption, the widow applied for the money, and after being put off on various pretexts was at last informed that there was no money, all that had been collected having been absorbed in the salaries of the officers. The 20*l.* deposited in the savings' bank had all been drawn out before the end of the year. The jury found all the prisoners Guilty, and they were each sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment with hard labour. Forgery.—Archibald Hamblin Lillingstone Cole, a well-dressed young man, a clerk of Messrs. Stilwell & Co., navy agents, was charged with forging and uttering an order for 603*l.*, with intent to defraud Messrs. Willis & Percival, the bankers. It appeared that in 1861 he had forged a cheque for the amount named, in the name of Messrs. Stillwell,, and went off to Paris with a "lady," upon whom, in four days' residence in that capital, he spent 200*l.* in jewellery. After he had squandered all the money, he committed some offence, for which he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and when he was released a detective officer who held a warrant against him found him at Rotterdam, and arrested him. The Jury, without any hesitation, found the prisoner Guilty, and Baron Martin sentenced him to 10 years' penal servitude.

Obituary.

GENERAL MACNEIL, colonel of the 78th Highlanders, died suddenly on Thursday the 22d inst. He had risen apparently in his usual health, and retired to his dressing-room for the purpose of shaving, but on the return of his valet he was found dead. He entered the army in 1808, and in the same year joined his regiment on the Continent, under Sir John Moore. He was in the retreat to Corunna, and subsequently took part in the Walcheren expedition. In 1813 and 1814 he served in Swedish Pomerania and in Holland, and was present at Bergen-op-Zoom. He also served in the campaign of 1815, and was present at Waterloo. He was for many years lieutenant-colonel commanding the 78th Highlanders, and accompanied that regiment to India. After he had obtained the rank of major-general, he was placed on the staff as commanding a division of the army in the Madras Presidency, where he served five years. He was appointed colonel of the 8th Foot in 1855, and was made colonel of the 78th Regiment in 1860.

MR. WELD OF LULWORTH CASTLE, whose death was announced briefly last week, was the head of one of the most distinguished Roman Catholic families in England. He was born in 1777, and was the third son of Mr. Thomas Weld, of Lulworth, (the founder of Stonyhurst College). His eldest brother, Thomas, on the death of his wife in 1815, took orders in the Church of Rome. In 1829 Pope Pius VIII. made him a cardinal—the first English cardinal since the Pontificate of Clement IX. Cardinal Weld transferred his estates to his brother, (though he himself did not die till 1837). In August, 1830, Mr. Weld received Charles X. and the exiled Royal family of France at Lulworth, which had previously been visited by James I., Charles II., James II., George III., and George IV. Charles X. and his family remained the guests of Mr. Weld for some days till their removal to Holyrood Palace. Mr. Weld was a liberal and tolerant Roman Catholic, and it was known by his tenantry that the word and the honour of "Weld of Lulworth" were pledged to abstinence from religious bigotry. Mr. Weld was also widely known for his prowess in yachting; he was always very fortunate in the construction and sailing of his vessels, and his success in the many contests in which his yachts have been engaged was proverbial.

MRS. PHILLPOTTS, wife of the Bishop of Exeter, died at Bishopstowe, Torquay, on the 22d inst., in her 82d year, after a long illness. She was the daughter of Mr. William Surtees, of Seaton Burn, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was a near relative of the late Lord Eldon. She married his lordship, then the Rev. Henry Phillpotts, a rising clergyman in the diocese of Durham, in 1804 and leaves a numerous family.

THE REV. THOMAS JAMES, M.A., died a few days since at Theddingworth Vicarage, Northamptonshire. He was hon. canon of Peterborough, rural dean, vicar of Sibbertoft and of Theddingworth, hon. corresponding secretary of the Northamptonshire Architectural Society, &c. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and graduated M.A. in 1835. His literary tastes and abilities made him known to a very large circle. He contributed several articles, such as "Northamptonshire," "Bees," "Flower Gardens," "Labourers' Cottages," &c., to the "Quarterly Review." He also edited Murray's Illustrated Edition of "Æsop's Fables," and was the editor of the "Illustrated Edition of the Book of Common Prayer," about to be issued by the same publisher. He was well known for his taste and learning in archæological matters, and many of the recent church restorations in Northamptonshire were effected under his guidance. The improvement of labourers' cottages was also one of his principal aims, and most of the model dwellings in the Midland Counties owe their origin to his ceaseless activity. He also lectured on this subject, about two years since, at the South Kensington Museum.

MR. WILLIAM CUBITT, M.P. for Andover, who was until lately an Alderman of London, and had filled the office of Lord Mayor in two successive years, died on Wednesday night at his residence, Penton Lodge, Hampshire, in his 73d year. He was born at Buxton, Norfolk, and after serving for a short time in the navy, became a partner with his elder brother, Mr. Thomas Cubitt, in the great building firm in Gray's Inn Road. In 1851 he was elected alderman for the Ward of Langbourne, having previously been elected Sheriff of London and Middlesex. He took a memorable part in originating the public subscription towards a national Memorial of the Prince Consort, and afterwards had the honour of serving on the committee nominated by the Queen to assist her in deciding on the form which the Memorial should assume. He also took an active part in originating the Lancashire Relief Fund, and during his two years' mayoralty considerably more than a quarter of a million of money flowed spontaneously into the Mansion House from time to time towards one public object or another. He was also President of St. Bartholomew's Hospital and Prime Warden of the Fishmongers' Company. He leaves four daughters, one of whom, Lady Olliffe, is the wife of the physician to the English Embassy at Paris, and two others are married to sons of the late Alderman Humphery.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Oct. 31.

Produce of all kinds is for the most part abundant. Late Plums may still be had. Of Grapes and Pine Apples the supply is also sufficient for the demand. Hamburgh Grapes from Holland fetch from 8d. to 1s. per lb. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Brown Beurré, Crassane, Duchesse d'Angoulême, and Beurré Diel Pears. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin and Cox's Orange Pippin Apples may now be obtained. Kent Cobs are good and plentiful. New St. Michael Oranges have arrived, and realise from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Asters, Marigolds, Calceolarias, Mignonette, and Roses.

HOPS.—BOROUGH MARKET, FRIDAY, Oct. 30.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report the demand good for both English and foreign Hops. Stocks of the former are very much reduced, and choice samples scarce. Prices rule very firm.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Oct. 26.

The supply of Beasts is shorter than on Monday last, and the demand is good, consequently, on the average, prices are better. The number of Sheep is also smaller, and the demand has increased; there is, therefore, an advance in prices of all descriptions. Calves are not so plentiful as of late, and realise higher rates. From Germany and Holland there are 3030 Beasts, 8690 Sheep, and 182 Calves; from Ireland, 1160 Beasts and 600 Sheep; and 2050 Beasts from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Oct. 29.

We have a larger number of Beasts on sale, but a considerable proportion of inferior quality. The choicest descriptions maintain Monday's quotations, but many inferior remain unsold. The supply of Sheep is small, the demand is also very limited; trade is slow at Monday's prices. Choice Calves are in demand at late rates. Our foreign supply consists of 590 Beasts, 1760 Sheep, and 293 Calves from Germany and Holland; and 120 Beasts from Spain. The number of Milch Cows, is 90.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Oct. 26.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and disposed of at the prices of this day se'nnight. Foreign met a slow retail sale on late terms. Fine malting Barley brings last week's quotations, secondary sorts and grinding are 1s. per qr. cheaper. Beans and Peas barely support last week's prices. The Oat trade is dull, and to effect sales it is necessary to submit to a reduction of 6d. to 1s. per qr. Flour is steady at late rates.

FRIDAY, Oct. 30.

The weather, with the exception of fog on the 27th, has been very fine until yesterday, when it was wet, and continues so. The Wheat trade during the past week has been firm without being active, holders being disinclined to realise at lower rates, and occasional purchases being still made on speculation. Grinding Barley and new Oats in many markets have suffered a further depreciation of 6d. to 1s. per qr. in value, but the prices of Beans and Peas have remained unaltered. Flour is without alteration in value. Since Friday last 25 vessels have been reported off the coast. With the small arrivals the floating trade has been steady; holders asked a slight advance for Wheat and Maize. Barley, however, declined 6d. per qr. In Paris (Oct. 29), Flour has remained steady at late rates, and the market has been a little more active than of late. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 30s. 9d. per 280 lbs. The present stock of Flour is estimated at 11,300 cwt. For Wheat there is little demand; a few transactions only have taken place at 1s. to 1s. 6d. per qr. decline, holders being generally not inclined to submit to such a reduction. The arrivals of English grain were moderate, of foreign good. The attendance at this day's market was small. The value of English Wheat was unaltered from Monday, nor do we quote any alteration in foreign. Buyers were extremely difficult to be met with, and to have forced sales it would have been necessary to take lower prices. Barley barely supported Monday's quotations. Beans and Peas were unaltered in value, and Oats were steady at late rates.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 27.—We have had an average attendance of buyers at to-day's market, and Wheat has commanded a steady consumptive inquiry at full prices. Barrel Flour is comparatively scarce, and held for 6d. advance, which buyers are not willing to pay; sacks firm. Indian Corn was taken freely by speculators at last Friday's prices, but holders now ask 6d. per qr. more for mixed American; round yellow descriptions are barely 3d. per qr. dearer. Oats dull, but Oatmeal is the turn against buyers. Beans bring fully late rates. Peas and Barley unchanged. The market closes with much firmness.

FRIDAY, Oct. 30.—The market thinly attended. Wheat sells to a fair extent, at the full rates of Tuesday. Flour slow sale, without change in value. Indian Corn: mixed American sells at 28s. 3d. to 28s. 6d. Egyptian Beans steady. Oats 1d. dearer, with a moderate sale. Oatmeal steady at late rates.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION,
CLASS IX., 2191.

PRIZE MEDAL For CONSERVATORY,
DOUBLE CHAMBER CORRUGATED and HORIZONTAL
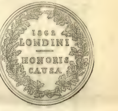
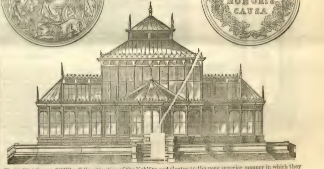
TUBULAR BOILERS.





J. TAYLOR AND SONS call the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to the very superior manner in which they erect CONSERVATORIES, VINERIES, FORCING, FRUIT, and PLANT HOUSES of every description, combining the most modern improvements with elegance of design and durability of materials and workmanship.

Our VENTILATING APPARATUS for the Roofs and Fronts of Horticultural Buildings, &c., supersedes any now in use, as being the most simple and effective in its action.

Our system of HEATING APPARATUS for Churches, Public Buildings, Mansions, Schools, Offices, Baths, Horticultural Buildings, &c., is particularly worthy of notice, we having for many years devoted especial attention to this branch. The great variety of work which has passed through our hands has gained us such experience in the mechanical details as to insure success and entire satisfaction in any undertaking entrusted to our care.

The superiority of our DOUBLE-CHAMBER CORRUGATED and HORIZONTAL TUBULAR BOILERS has caused them to be acknowledged as the best now in use, being both powerful and rapid in action.

Larger sizes of any of the above.

By an improved and new action of the handle, this Pump is so constructed that a great deal of friction is avoided; an air vessel is secured, and by introducing a brass lining into the barrel, with brass bucket and sucker, many of the objections to iron pumps are overcome. By this Pump ONE MAN WILL FORCE THE WATER in a continuous stream TO A HEIGHT OF 50 FEET. When mounted on a barrow it forms a cheap, useful, and portable Fire Engine or Garden and Field Irrigator. The simplicity of its construction enables it to be offered to the public at a less price than any other Pump of equal capabilities.

No. 42. IMPROVED LIQUID MANURE or GENERAL PORTABLE PUMP.—These Pumps are fitted with J. W. & SONS' Patent Bucket and Valve, and cannot clog in action.

PORTABLE FARM RAILWAYS.—Full particulars of a System that works well and profitably may be had on application to the Manufacturer and Patentee, Mr. J. Grant, of Linton, Kent.

Farmers, especially those who cultivate by steam, are respectfully requested to notice the amount of damage done to the soil by the carting in the autumn and winter seasons, and how far the natural inclination of the fields might be made available as a motive power for railway trucks, and how far cultivation has prepared the surface for the rapid laying of flat-bottomed rails unencumbered by cross sleepers or tedious fastenings of any kind; and also to notice what proportion of the cornfields are favourable for running the crops to the stacks of their own weight without horses.

News of the Week.

THE French Chambers were opened by the EMPEROR on Thursday in a speech of unusual length, and of more than ordinary interest both to Europe and to America. His Majesty commenced by congratulating himself on the result of the elections, "in spite of some local dissent," and said that as the members of the Opposition had all taken the same oath they had given him a guarantee of their support. He then proceeded to state that after eleven years of prosperity the empire had become so rich from an increasing revenue that the expenses of two wars at the extremities of the globe, in Mexico and in Cochin China, could be met without having recourse to loans or to extraordinary resources. The exports had increased by upwards of 9,000,000*l*., while 136,000 tons had been added to the mercantile marine of France. The harvest had been abundant, and 1000 kilometres of new lines of railway had been opened to traffic. After pointing out various matters of domestic interest as fit subjects for legislation, the EMPEROR proceeded to discuss the great questions of foreign policy to which all Europe has so long been looking with undisguised anxiety. HIS MAJESTY commenced by stating that the expeditions to Cochin China and Mexico had not been the result of any premeditated plan, but had been brought about by the force of circumstances and were not to be regretted. He justified the expedition to Cochin China on the ground that France would find advantages in following the example of other nations which had settlements in Southern Asia; and he defended the expedition to Mexico by showing that France could not develop her foreign commerce if she were to relinquish all influence in America. He said that she would be largely rewarded for her sacrifices when the destinies of that country which will owe its regeneration to her, shall have been handed over to a Prince whose intelligence and accomplishments rendered him worthy of so noble a mission. With regard to Poland, the EMPEROR admitted that something like a Russian alliance had existed with France since the close of the Crimean war, and that during the war in Italy, as well as at the time of the annexation of Nice and of Savoy, the CZAR had given him his most sincere and cordial support. Nothing, he said, but Poland could have induced him to compromise such an alliance; but he could not shut his eyes to the popular feeling of France in favour of a people who were "heirs to a right inscribed in history and in treaties." Unfortunately, however, the steps taken by England, Austria, and France, instead of putting a stop to the struggle, had only tended to embitter it; and as France could only deal with the question in concert with the other Powers, it remained to be considered whether they were reduced to the sole alternative of war or of silence. He thought that they were not, and that without having recourse to arms, and without remaining silent, one resource was open to them, which was to submit the Polish question to a European tribunal. HIS MAJESTY then proceeded to show that the treaties of 1815 were all but annihilated, and expressed his belief that a Conference of all the Great Powers would result in the establishment of an order of things based on the well-understood interests of the Sovereigns and of the peoples of Europe. Such a Conference he said would put an end to jealous rivalries and exaggerated armaments and lighten the burdens of all Europe, while a refusal to take part in it would lead to the supposition of secret projects which feared the light of day. HIS MAJESTY concluded by warning Russia that two ways were open; the one leading to progress through conciliation and peace, the other, sooner or later, conducting fatally to war by the obstinacy of maintaining an old state of things which is passing away.

From the United States we have the important news that General LEE, after withdrawing his whole army to the south side of the Rappahannock, and inducing the Federals to believe that he was in full retreat to Richmond, has suddenly recrossed to the north bank of the river, repulsing the Federal cavalry with heavy loss, and has since pressed on to Beaton Station, where he has again attacked the Federal cavalry and forced it to retreat. At the last accounts General LEE occupied Beaton, with his left resting on Beverley Ford and his right extending to Stafford Court House. These movements were conducted with such secrecy that their object is unknown, and the Northern journals appear entirely at fault in conjecturing their probable issue. General ROSENCRANS has been superseded in Tennessee and his command given to General THOMAS, while General GRANT is invested with the supreme command of the armies of the Cumberland, the Tennessee, and the Ohio. The remainder of General LONGSTREET's corps has reinforced General BRAGG at Chattanooga, and the divisions of Generals BRECKENRIDGE and HINDMAN have been withdrawn ftom the Federal front, and sent in force against the Federal left. No further movement has taken place at Charleston, but it is again asserted that General GILMORE's batteries are nearly ready to open fire. Admiral DAHLGREN is said to have been superseded in the command of the fleet before the city by Capt. TURNER, of the Ironsides. The 300,000 volunteers called for by President LINCOLN are to serve for three years, or to the end of the war; and if the number is not completed by January it will be made up by a draft. President DAVIS has dismissed all the British consuls in the South, on the ground that they had directed British subjects to throw down their arms if they were required to enter into conflict with the Federals.

Home News.

THE COURT.—The Queen and Royal family continue at Windsor. On Friday afternoon her Majesty drove out, accompanied by Princess Louisa. Princess Helena came to London, and returned in the afternoon. On Saturday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked and drove in the grounds. A party of non-commissioned officers and soldiers of the Ceylon Rifle Regiment, who have been in England some months and attached to the Coldstream Guards for musketry practice, were inspected by her Majesty previous to their return to Ceylon. On Sunday morning the Queen, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Prince Leopold, and Princess Hohenlohe attended Divine service in the private chapel. The Dean of Windsor officiated. On Monday morning the Queen drove out, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, and Prince William of Prussia. In the afternoon the Queen drove out. Lady Bloomfield arrived at the Castle on a visit. On Wednesday morning the Prince and Princess Christian of Denmark and Princess Dagmar visited her Majesty at the Castle, and took leave on their return to Denmark. In the afternoon the Queen came to London and honoured the Dowager Duchess of Hamilton and the Dowager Duchess of Sutherland with visits at their respective residences. In the evening Lord Palmerston arrived at the Castle, and had an audience of the Queen. On Thursday morning the Queen drove out. Lord Palmerston left the Castle for London. The Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary visited her Majesty. Lord Brougham had an interview with her Majesty. In the evening Princess Helena and Princess Louisa came to town, and honoured the performance at the Adelphi theatre with their presence.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES AT SANDRINGHAM.—On Thursday week the Prince of Wales and Earl Granville went out partridge shooting on the Wolferton and abingby side of the estate. In the afternoon the Princess of Wales, Princess Christian, and Princess Dagmar drove and rode to Wolferton. The Duke of St. Alban's arrived on a visit to the Prince and Princess. On Friday the Prince of Wales and the visitors went out shooting. Prince Christian returned from Oxford.

On Saturday the Prince of Wales, Prince Christian, the Duke of St. Alban's, Earl Granville, and Admiral Seymour, went out shooting. The Princess of Wales, Princess Christian, and the Princess Dagmar, walked and drove out. In the afternoon Prince Frederick of Denmark arrived from Oxford on a visit. On Sunday the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian, and the Princess Dagmar, the Duke of St. Alban's, Earl Granville and Admiral Seymour attended Divine service at Sandringham Church. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Robert W. Pearse, Incumbent of Gaywood. In the afternoon the Duke of St. Alban's and Earl Granville left Sandringham for London. On Tuesday morning the Prince and Princess Christian, Prince Frederick, and the Princess Dagmar took leave of the Prince and Princess of Wales and left for London. The Prince and Princess of Wales rode to Wolterton.

The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia having since leaving Balmoral, visited the Duke of Richmond at Gordon Castle, and the Duke of Argyll at Inverary, arrived in Edinburgh on their way South on Monday evening. They were received at the station by Prince Alfred, Prince William of Hesse, and the Lord Provost. They immediately drove to the Douglas Hotel, where apartments had been engaged for them, and shortly afterwards proceeded to Holyrood, where they dined with Prince Alfred and Prince William of Hesse. On Tuesday night the Crown Prince and Princess left Edinburgh for Sandringham, on a visit to the Prince and Princess of Wales, travelling from the Northbridge Station by the Scotch mail train. Shortly after leaving Edinburgh, the train had a narrow escape. A goods train had got off the line, and a portion of the footboard of the composite carriage containing their Royal Highnesses' attendants, was broken off in the attempt to get past. Fortunately the train was going at slackened speed, and no injury was sustained beyond a delay of about two hours. On arriving at Peterborough on Wednesday morning the Prince and Princess, with their suite, left the carriages and proceeded to the Great Northern Hotel, and after partaking of some refreshment walked into the city and inspected the cathedral and other places of interest. They then proceeded by the Great Eastern Railway to Wolferton, where they arrived at 1.25 P.M., and were met on the platform by the Prince and Princess of Wales. It is expected that their Royal Highnesses will remain at Sandringham until after the Prince of Wales's birthday.

The Prince and Princess Christian of Denmark, accompanied by the Princess Dagmar, took their departure for the Continent by a special train of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway on Wednesday afternoon. Their Royal Highnesses, on arriving at Dover, immediately crossed to Calais in a steamer specially engaged for the purpose.

The Cabinet.—A Cabinet Council is summoned for Tuesday.

The Archbishopric of Dublin.—The Irish Times of Thursday says it is enabled to state that Canon Stanley has definitively declined the Archbishopric of Dublin.

Parliamentary Movements.—The election for Windsor terminated on Wednesday in the return of Colonel Vyse, the Conservative candidate, by a majority of 51 over Captain Hayter, the numbers being 287 to 236. Mr. W. H. Humphrey, son-in-law of the late Mr. Cubitt, and Mr. Hawkshaw, the Civil Engineer, have offered themselves for Andover, the former in the Conservative, the latter in the Liberal interest. The Oxford election takes place next week. Mr. Neate, of Oriel, is the only candidate in the field.

Reinforcements for Canada and New Zealand.—The 43d Regiment, now stationed at the Curragh, and the 58th Regiment, in Dublin, are under orders to embark for Canada. The 1st Battalion 10th, the 1st Battalion 11th, and the 2d Battalion 12th Regiment, are under orders to embark for New Zealand. The 43d has already been despatched from Bengal to New Zealand in three steamers taken up by the Government for their conveyance, and the India Mail announces that the 68th from Rangoon is also to be despatched to the colony, and that the 33d, at Poona, is likely to follow.

Diplomatic Movements.—The official correspondence respecting Sir James Hudson's retirement from Turin has been published. It appears that Sir James and Earl Russell are at issue on a matter of fact. Sir James says that when he declined the offered change of position last year, he made an engagement to resign altogether as soon as he was entitled to a pension. Earl Russell, on the other hand, denies there was any engagement in the matter. He states that he offered Sir James Hudson promotion last year, which was declined and there was, so far as he was concerned, an end of the matter.

Foreign.

France.—The French Chambers were opened on Thursday by the Emperor, who delivered the following speech:—

"Messieurs les Sénateurs and Députés,—The annual meeting of the great bodies of the State is always a happy occasion which draws together men devoted to the public welfare, and allows the truth to be shown to the country. The freedom of our mutual communications calms anxieties and fortifies my resolutions. Be then, welcome. The Legislative Corps has been re-assembled for the third time since the foundation of the empire, and for the third time, in spite of some local differences, I have only to congratulate myself on the result of the elections. You have all taken the same oath to me; it assures me of your co-operation. Our duty is to attend promptly and well to the affairs of the country, while remaining faithful to the constitution, which has given us 11 years of prosperity, and which you have sworn to maintain. The statement of the internal situation will show you that, despite the forced stagnation of labour in certain branches, progress has not been slackened. Our industry has advantageously contended against foreign competition, and before incontestable facts, the fears occasioned by the Treaty of Commerce with England are dissipated. Our exports in the first eight months of the year 1863, compared with those of the corresponding months of 1862, have increased by 233,000,000f. During the same period the movement of maritime navigation exceeded the amount of the corresponding period by 175,000 tons, [illegible] of which are under the French flag. The abundant harvest of this year is a blessing of Providence which must secure the subsistence of the population at the lowest rate. It establishes also the prosperity of agriculture. The public works have been pursued with activity. About [illegible] new kilometres of railway have been opened up to the commerce of our ports. Our rivers, our canals, our roads have continued to improve. The session having taken place sooner than usual, the report of the Minister of Finance has not been published; it will be shortly. You will see in it that if our hopes are not completely realised, the revenues have followed an ascending scale, and that without extraordinary resources we have met the expenses occasioned by the war in Mexico and Cochin China. I may mention several reforms deemed opportune; amongst others the decree relative to the liberty of baking; one which renders the maritime inscription less onerous to the population of the coast; the act which modifies the law of conditions, and that which suppresses the exclusive privileges of theatres. I have also caused to be prepared a law destined to augment the freedom of the general and communal councils, and to remedy the excess of centralisation; in fact to simplify administrative formalities, and to soften the legislation applicable to the classes worthy of all our solicitude. There will be there a progress with which you will delight to associate yourselves. You will also have to occupy yourselves with the sugar question, which requires at length to be settled by a more stable legislation. The project submitted to the Council of State tends to grant to home products the facility of exportation which the sugars of other countries there enjoy. A law upon registration will abolish the double decimes, and will replace it by a juster apportionment. In Algeria, in spite of the anomaly which subjects some to the same populations to the civil power, and others to the military power, the Arabs have well understood that the French rule was reparative and equitable, without Europeans having less confidence in the protection of the Government. Our ancient customs have some barriers disappointed for their transactions; [illegible] have not been favourable to the development of commerce. The formal establishment of a public institution will serve, I hope, to ameliorate the condition of things. In the midst of these material cares nothing of what concerns religion, the mind, and morality has been neglected. Religious and charitable works, the arts, the sciences, and public instruction have received numerous encouragements. Since 1848 the academic population have increased one-fourth. At the present time nearly five millions of children—of whom a third receive a free education—are received in the primary schools; but our efforts should not to be relaxed while 600,000 more are deprived of instruction. The higher studies have gained fresh life in the secondary schools, where the special instruction is being re-organised. Such, gentlemen, is the résumé of that which we have already done, and which we wish further to do. Certainly the prosperity of our country would take a more rapid flight if political anxieties did not disturb it, but in the life of nations unexpected and inevitable events occur, which should be viewed without fear and supported without weakness. Of this number are the American war, the necessary occupation of Mexico and Cochin China, and the insurrection of Poland. Distant expeditions, the object of so many criticisms, have not been the execution of a premeditated plan; the force of things has brought them about, and yet, nevertheless, they are not to be regretted. How, in fact, can we develop our external commerce if, on the one side, we renounce all influence in America, and if, on the other, in presence of the vast territories occupied by the Spaniards and Dutch, France remained alone without possessions in the Asiatic seas? We have conquered in Cochin China a position which, without binding us to the local government, will permit us to employ the immense resources of those countries, and to civilise them by commerce. In Mexico, after an unexpected resistance, surmounted by the courage of our soldiers and sailors, we have seen the populations receive us as liberators. Our efforts will not have been in vain, and we shall be largely recompensed for our sacrifices, when the destinies of this country, which will owe us its regeneration, shall have been given over to a prince whose intelligence and accomplishments render him worthy of so noble a mission. Have faith, then, in our enterprises across the seas. Undertaken to avenge our honour, they will end by the triumph of our interests; and if prejudiced minds divine not the fertility which is contained in the germs laid down for the future, do not allow to be disparaged the glory acquired, so to speak, at the two extremities of the world, at Pekin as at Mexico. The Polish question requires more development. When the Polish insurrection burst out, the governments of Russia and France were on the best terms. Since the peace, the great European questions had found them agreed, and I do not hesitate to declare that during the Italian war, as at the time of the annexation of the province of Nice and Savoy, the Emperor lent me the sincerest and most cordial assistance. This good agreement dictated consideration, and I must therefore have believed the Polish question very popular in France not to hesitate to compromise one of the first alliances of the Continent, and to raise the voice in favour of a nation rebellious in the eyes of Russia, but to ours the inheritor of a right inscribed in history, and in the treaties. Nevertheless, that question affects the gravest European interests. It could not be treated separately by France. An offence to our honour, or a menace against our frontiers, alone imposes upon us the duty of acting without previous concert. It became, therefore, necessary, as at the time of the events in the East and in Syria, to come to an understanding with the Powers which had to express themselves upon reasons and rights similar to ours. The Polish insurrection, the duration of which increased in it a national character, awakened sympathies everywhere, and the end of diplomacy was to draw to that cause the utmost possible amount of adhesions, in order to press on Russia all the weight of the opinion of Europe. This concurrence of wishes, almost unanimous, appeared to us the fittest method of bringing persuasion to operate upon the cabinet of St. Petersburg. Unfortunately, our disinterested counsels have been interpreted as an intimidation, and the steps of England, of Austria, and of France, in place of arresting the struggle have only envenomed it. Excesses are committed upon both sides, equally to be deplored in the name of humanity. What remains, therefore, to be done? Are we reduced to the only alternative of war or silence? No. Without resorting to arms, and without being silenced, one resource is open to us. This is, to submit the Polish cause to a European tribunal. Russia has already declared that conferences in which all the other questions which agitate Europe should be debated would in no degree wound her dignity. Let us take note of this declaration. May it serve to extinguish once for all the ferments of discord ready to burst forth upon all sides, and from the discomfort of Europe labouring in all directions under the elements of dissolution, may a new era of order and peace spring forth. Is not the time come to reconstruct upon fresh bases the edifice undermined by time and destroyed piecemeal by revolutions? Is it not urgent to recognise by new conventions that which has been irrevocably accomplished, and to carry out by common agreement what the peace of the world requires? The treaties of 1815 have ceased to exist. The force of events has overthrown, or tends to overthrow them, almost everywhere. They have been broken in Greece, in Belgium, in France, in Italy, as upon the Danube. Germany is agitating to alter them; England has generously modified them by the cession of the Ionian Islands; and Russia treads them under foot at Warsaw. In the midst of this successive alteration of the fundamental European pact, ardent passions become over-excited, and [illegible] interests demand solution in the South as well as in the North. What, then, can be more legitimate and more sensible than to convoke the Powers of Europe to a Congress in which self-love and resistance would disappear in face of a supreme arbitrage? What can be more in conformity with the ideas of the age, with the wishes of the greatest number, than to address ourselves to the conscience, to the reason of statesmen in all countries, and to say, 'Have not the prejudices and rancour which divide us already lasted long enough? Shall the jealous rivalry of the great Powers for ever hinder the progress of civilisation? Shall we always keep up mutual distrust by exorbitant armaments? Are we to exhaust our most precious resources indefinitely in a vain ostentation of our forces? Are we to preserve for ever a state of things which is neither peace with its security nor war with its chances of success?' Let us no longer give a fictitious importance to the subversive minds of extreme parties by opposing narrow calculations to the legitimate aspirations of peoples. Rather let us have the courage to substitute a stable and regular state of things for one that is deranged and insecure, even though the effort cost us some sacrifices. Let us unite without preconceived systems, without exclusive ambitions, animated by the sole thought of establishing an order of things founded henceforward on the well-understood interests of sovereigns and peoples. This appeal, I would fain believe, will be listened to by all. A refusal would leave room to suspect the existence of secret projects which will not bear the light of day. But even should the proposition not be unanimously agreed to, it would have the immense advantage of having shown Europe the source of the danger and the means of safety. Two ways are open—the one leads to progress by conciliation and peace, the other leads fatally sooner or later to war by the obstinate desire to retain the old state of things which is crumbling away. You know now, gentlemen, what language I propose to hold towards Europe. Approved by your sanction and the public assent, it cannot fail to be heard, since I speak in the name of France."

The Presse of Thursday evening, in an article on this speech signed by M. de Girardin, wishes that the appeal of the Emperor may be understood in Europe to open at last a new era of peace and liberty. The Gazette de France thinks that the speech tends to the alternative of a Congress, reorganising almost Europe, or to war. The Pays applauds the speech, and says that, "if the Emperor has spoken of war, it is not as a threat, but to impress upon Sovereigns and nations the necessity of anticipating war by recommending peace." The Constitutionnel, in an article signed by M. Limayrac, says that the whole of France will join in the magnificent and patriotic language of the Emperor. "Europe will understand that this appeal was made by a great dignified and generous policy—proud, without wishing to impose itself upon others, national, without the spirit of conquest, the friend of order and of progress." The Nation considers the speech to show that the common action of the three Powers is at an end, and also does not believe that Europe will accept a Congress. La France says that "the Emperor has condemned with equal firmness the madness which endeavours to carry him away and the system of egotism and decay which has overthrown other régimes, and which his name rejects." The Emperor presided at a Ministerial Council on Wednesday, which was prolonged until about 5 o'clock. On Monday his Majesty received the Annamite Ambassadors, and on Tuesday entertained the members of the Mexican deputation at dinner at St. Cloud. The Empress arrived in Paris on Friday evening, and was met by the Emperor at the station. The rumour that Count Walewski will replace the Duc de Gramont as Ambassador at Vienna is denied. At one of the late Cabinet Councils at St. Cloud the distribution of parts took place among the Ministers who are authorised to speak in the Chamber in the name of the Government. M. Rouher, as Minister of State, will defend the foreign policy, particularly the Italian and Polish policy; M. Vuitry undertakes financial questions; M. Forcade de la Roquette, Customs; and MM. Parieu and Rouland, domestic affairs. On M. Chaix d'Est Ange devolves the task of defending the Mexican expedition, and the conduct of the Government in the last elections. It is asserted that the tax on carriages will be abolished, and will not be inserted in the Budget for 1865. General Bedeau, who was formerly Governor-General of Algeria, and commandant of Paris at the revolution of 1848, died last week at Nantes. The Mexican Consuls in Paris, Bordeaux, and Havre having been compelled to cease their functions, the affairs of these Consulates have been temporarily placed in charge of the Consuls of Guatemala. The Confederate steamer Georgia has arrived at Cherbourg to revictual and take in coal. The Federal corvette Kearsage having made a show of keeping steam up to watch the movements of the Florida, at Brest, has been ordered by the authorities to leave French waters. It is stated that the French Government has informed Mr. Dayton, the United States Minister in Paris, that the "autorisation" for the construction of certain vessels of war now proved to be building in France for the Confederates, and for certain cannon and munitions for their armament, has been withdrawn, and that the parties engaged in the business have been warned of the danger of [illegible] their work. The statue of Napoleon I. in the costume of a Roman Emperor, was on Wednesday raised to the summit of the column in the Place Vendôme. There was no ceremony. The Times says that the baptism of Prince Napoleon's son is at this moment a great stumbling block to the church. The little Prince was half-baptised immediately after his birth, but it is almost without precedent that the full ceremony of baptism should be postponed longer than six months. The infant is now more than a year old, and the reason given for the delay is that Prince Napoleon will have no other godfather for his son than the King of Italy, who is excommunicated. As the Pope makes a great point of holding to the excommunication in this case, no bishop in France can be found to fly openly in the face of the Church, and Prince Napoleon, with equal firmness, declares that unless Victor Emmanuel holds his infant over the font he shall not be baptised at all. It is said that the same difficulty is likely to arise in the case of the young Prince of Portugal. A discovery of some historical importance has just been made in Paris. The bones of Robespierre, St. Just, and Lebas were found by some masons who were laying the foundation of a house at the corner of the Rue de Rocher, in the Batignolles. It was there the remains of these men, who performed so remarkable a part in the first Revolution, were deposited, the churchyard of the Madeleine being too full at the time of their execution to receive any more bodies. Public balls were held for many years at the place where the skeletons were discovered. A Paris letter gives the following account of the steps taken by the Empress during her recent visit to Cadiz in behalf of the French troops who touched at that port on their way to Mexico:—

"Three weeks ago the steam transport Sarthe sailed from Cherbourg for Vera Cruz with 1100 men on board. There was [illegible] accommodation for the men, [illegible] on the [illegible] and [illegible] their sleeping quarters. [illegible] was a [illegible]. The [illegible] and had to put into Cadiz to [illegible]. The soldiers suffered [illegible] board being unable to receive all the [illegible]. Fortunately for these poor fellows, the Empress arrived at Cadiz before the Sarthe's repairs were completed, and determined to go on board. Her Majesty was [illegible] shocked at what she saw there. The men on the gun deck especially were [illegible] by their voyage—in fact, the whole scene brought to the traditional horrors of the 'middle passage' so vividly before her Majesty, that she immediately gave orders to the captain to have half the men landed. The captain objected that he was unfortunately under the orders of the Ministry of Marine, and [illegible]. The Empress thereupon sent a telegram to the Emperor, [illegible] the telegram [illegible] on board, as the Sarthe was a great deal too small to carry so large a number. In pursuance of this kindly intervention the Dryade has been sent out to Cadiz, and will take on board the men the Sarthe is unable to accommodate properly. In addition the Empress gave the officers in command of the troops [illegible], with orders that it should be expended in giving them at least one good dinner before they sailed. One may imagine with what cheers her Majesty was greeted on leaving the vessel to return on board her yacht."

The Géant balloon in its late aërial journey performed a total distance of 370 leagues (925 miles) in 16 hours, being at the rate of 56¾ miles an hour. M. Louis Godard and M. St. Félix have published the following additional details relative to their unfortunate excursion:—

"After passing Lisle the balloon got into a current which carried it towards the marshes of Holland, where M. Godard proposed to descend [illegible] in the morning, but the proposal was overruled, and he then declared that he would not be responsible for the consequences. The balloon continued its course eastward at a short distance from the Zuyder Zee, sometimes so high as [illegible] metres, at others scarcely [illegible] metres from the ground, and crossed the Hanoverian frontier soon after six o'clock. When the sun rose it dried the netting, and produced a dilatation of the gas, which raised the balloon to the height of [illegible] metres. At eight the wind veered to the west, and drove the balloon in a straight line towards the German Ocean. It was then necessary to descend at all hazards, but the operation had become difficult and dangerous owing to the violence of the wind, which, according to M. Godard's estimate, was carrying the balloon at the rate of [illegible] leagues an hour! The anchors first caught against a tree, which was pulled up by the roots, and dragged till stopped by a house, when the anchor broke. The balloon having lost a considerable quantity of gas through the safety valve was unable to rise, but was forced along by the wind, the car meanwhile striking heavily on the ground at intervals. M. Saint Félix was thrown under the car by one of those shocks, and was much hurt, and M. Montgolfier would have been thrown out, but was saved by M. Godard. Shortly after, MM. Thirion and d'Arnould leaped out, and only received some slight contusions. M. Yon also got out safely, but a terrible shock threw out MM. Nadar, Louis Godard, and Montgolfier. In spite of the efforts of the gentlemen, Mdme. Nadar remained to the last, and falling under the car, more than 20 minutes elapsed before she could be extricated. The balloon and car arrived at Hanover in a most dilapidated state, and have been shown at a low price for the benefit of the poor. The Minister of the Interior at Hanover sent a gentleman to the place where the descent occurred, with instructions to value the damage done, so that M. Nadar might not have to suffer from extravagant claims for indemnity. The King and Queen of Hanover went on Friday to examine the broken car of the Géant, and afterwards visited the wounded persons."

Spain.—The opening of the Spanish Cortes took place on Wednesday. The Queen's speech states that friendly relations continue with foreign nations, and that the project of constitutional reform is definitively resolved upon. The position of Senator will in future be hereditary. The speech announces that no diminution will be made in the Budget. Her Majesty deplores the insurrection which has broken out at San Domingo, and hopes for the assistance of the Spanish nation in its repression.

Portugal.—The King and Queen intend visiting Oporto in November. The Italian residents in Lisbon are raising subscriptions for the erection of a monument to commemorate the marriage of Dom Luiz and the Princess Mary of Savoy. The Queen has taken carriage exercise on several occasions. The King has distributed the prizes at the Polytechnic Institution, on which occasion his Majesty made an impressive speech to the members. The Royal family visited the opera in state on the 30th ult. The city was partially illuminated. The subscription in Lisbon for the loan amounts to 2,800,000*l.* sterling, and in Oporto to 500,000*l.* sterling, consequently applicants can only receive a small percentage of the amount required.

Sweden.—The Official Gazette, in a leading article upon the Dano-German conflict, says that it is now by no means the fault of Denmark if peace should be disturbed.

Denmark.—At the sitting of the Rigsraad on Monday, the fundamental law was discussed. The President of the Council was opposed to all the proposed amendments. The debates were calm, and the amendments were rejected by 40 votes against 14.

Frankfort.—The Federal Diet has called upon Prussia to send a military commissioner to concert with those of Hanover and Saxony in reference to the Federal execution in Holstein.

Prussia.—A Royal decree of Sunday summons both Houses of the Prussian Parliament to meet on the 9th inst., in accordance with Article 51 of the Constitution. The election of deputies has terminated. Among those elected by a large majority are Count John Dzialynski, M. Ladislas Bentkowski, M. Alexander Guttry, and M. Ladislas Niegolewski, all four accused of high treason for having aided the Polish insurrection against Russia. Count Dzialynski and M. Guttry are abroad, M. Bentkowski is a prisoner in the hands of the Austrian authorities, and M. Niegolewski is a prisoner in the hands of the Prussians at Berlin; M. Henry Szuman, another deputy elect, is also in gaol.

Austria.—The Conference of Ministers at Nuremberg closed on Friday. The Ministers who took part in the meeting left on Saturday morning, and are said to be satisfied with the result. The Austrian reply to Prussia on the German reform question was despatched on Friday, accompanied by a memorandum completely refuting Count von Bismark's arguments. The preliminary proposals of Prussia are formally rejected. An increase of 6,000,000 florins has taken place in the bullion of the Bank of Austria, owing partly to the payment of instalments in arrear. In the sitting of the Reichsrath on Tuesday the Finance Committee recommended a loan of 60,000,000fl. to cover the deficit; 20 millions to be devoted to relieving the distress in Hungary, and 20 to the redemption of the floating debt. At the sitting of Thursday the Hungarian Chancellery was represented by two commissioners on the Ministerial bench during the debate on the Committee's recommendation in regard to the distress in Hungary. Some of the speakers questioned the competence of the Reichsrath to grant the loan. Others pleaded warmly for Hungary. The debate was to be continued yesterday. It is believed in Vienna that the acceptance of the Mexican Throne by the Archduke Maximilian no longer admits of any doubt, and that his Imperial Highness will embark for Mexico at the commencement of February in the Imperial steam frigate Elizabeth, in which the Archduke performed his last voyage to the Brazils.

Hesse Cassel.—On Saturday, the day fixed for the close of the Parliamentary Session, a Message from the Elector was to have been read to the members, according to custom, expressing the Elector's sanction to all the laws voted by the Diet during the Session. The members of the Diet were, however, kept waiting for five hours, because the Government Commissioner had received no instructions from the Elector, who was at the theatre, and had refused to sanction the Message proposed to him by the Ministry. It is said that the Ministers sent in their resignations in consequence to the theatre. At length, at 10 p.m., the Elector read the Message, in which he requested some unimportant modifications, which were agreed to by the Ministers. The Diet was then closed without the usual speech in which the Elector assures the Diet of his grace and favour.

Italy.—Letters from Naples of the 31st ult. state that the inauguration of the Foggia railway is fixed for to-morrow, the 8th inst. The King will leave the same evening for Avellino and Mola, and will return to Naples on the 9th. Two hundred carriages, with public functionaries and Neapolitan nobles, will go out as far as Mola to meet his Majesty. The review of the fleet will take place on the 10th; 25 vessels of war will be present in the bay. Great preparations are making at Naples for the reception of the King, who will be accompanied by the Ministers of the Interior, Foreign Affairs, Justice, and Marine. On his return his Majesty will remain a few days in Tuscany. The Minister of War has ordered the line of the Volturno to be placed in a state of defence, and the provisioning of the fortress of Gaëta. The Pope has conferred the Grand Cordon of the Order of Pius IX. on Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, the French ambassador.

Turkey.—The Imperial Bank has concluded the payment of the dividend upon the Old Consolidés. The rumours of a further foreign loan are unfounded. The forts on the Bosphorus and Dardanelles are being armed with heavy rifled cannon. The Porte has agreed to the police regulations established by the European Commission of the Danube.

Russia.—An Imperial ukase dated from Livadia the 1st (13th) inst. assigns pensions to the widows and orphans of officials assassinated in Poland. It is stated on reliable authority that the Grand Duke Constantine will be relieved from his functions as Governor of Poland, and will travel abroad. General Berg is to be definitively appointed his successor.

Poland.—The importation of furs, shoes, boots, and leather straps into Poland has been prohibited. General Trepow, the chief of the Gendarmes, was slightly wounded in the neck with an axe in the Senator Street at Warsaw on Monday. The assassin threw down his axe and took to flight, but was arrested and severely wounded by the General, who struck him on the head with the axe. The Russians continue to make numerous arrests at Warsaw, both by day and night. During the night the prisoners are taken to the citadel. During the day the soldiers arrest and search the passengers in the streets; and all women who wear mourning are conducted to the barracks. Forty-one ladies were arrested in the city on Monday night, and even young ladies of 15 years of age have been arrested and taken to the citadel. Two convoys, with 550 prisoners, have already left the citadel on their way to Siberia. The exasperation of the population is extreme. The Polish Town Captain of Warsaw has issued a proclamation advising ladies to cease wearing mourning to avoid the brutalities of the Russian soldiery. He has also issued a proclamation, declaring the object of the Russians in arresting so many influential citizens to be the extortion of an address of loyalty to the Czar. Judge Kuczynski was assassinated at Lemberg last week. The assassin plunged a hunting knife into his back, which pierced the heart. The National Government has disavowed all participation in this crime. The Russians were defeated by the insurgents under Bosak on the 28th October, between Chmiebrik and Kielce. Wierzbicki had an engagement with the Russians on the 26th at Goscieranow, which terminated to his advantage. Many engagements have taken place in the district of Opoczno, palatinate of Radom. Czachowski, having intrenched himself in the mountains of St. Croix, defended his position on Monday until his corps had diminished to 18 men. He then retreated, and effected a junction with Bosak and Chmienski, in the mountains of St. Kryz, in the palatinate of Cracow. Rochebrun and Komorowski have had a successful engagement with the Russians in the palatinate of Lublin. Two new insurgent detachments have appeared in the Lublin districts, led by Seinkiwicz, and Aladar. Kruck has the command in chief. Numerous engagements have taken place in Lithuania, Plock, and Sandomir. The troops of Mouravieff have marched from the government of Augustowo into that of Plock. A fresh body of insurgents has entered Poland from Galicia. Another insurgent corps, numbering, it is said, 600 infantry and 230 cavalry, advanced on Sunday into Volhynia, but having been pressed by the Russians, laid down their arms on Tuesday in the district of Zolkiew in Galicia. 400 men, with arms and munitions and upwards of 100 horses, surrendered to the Austrians. The insurgents burnt on Saturday the long railway bridge near Petrikau, and the railway communication between Skierniewice and Warsaw is interrupted.

Ionian Islands.—It is asserted that the treaty respecting the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece will be signed in London in a few days. The Ionian Parliament was prorogued on Saturday for six months. The majority of the members have protested against any violation of Parliamentary privileges, and declared any act illegal during the Parliamentary recess which may be prejudicial to the interests and rights of the Ionian Islands.

Greece.—The King of Greece arrived at the Piræus at 9 a.m., on October 30. He was enthusiastically received on landing at the port, and afterwards at Athens. His Majesty attended a Te Deum at the Cathedral, at which the Diplomatic Body was present. After his arrival the King issued a manifesto, of which the following is a summary:—

"I bring neither ability to govern nor practised intelligence, but sincere love for the people. I believe in the future identity of our destinies. I shall endeavour to love Greek customs, and shall respect your manners and language. I shall strictly observe the Constitution, and shall surround myself with the most experienced men of the country without remembering old political divisions, and shall make Greece the model State of the East."

Athens is reported to be quiet, and the people well disposed.

India.—Lord Elgin left Simla on the 26th Sept., on his tour through the N.W. provinces, the Punjab and Cashmere. Accounts from all parts of India are very encouraging as to the crop of cotton this season, which will be nearly double that of last year. The success of the Bengalee native in the Civil Service examination has created great sensation in native circles. It is stated that the expedition against the Sitanees on the Punjab frontiers occupies the whole attention of Sir Hugh Rose. The expedition will be 5000 strong; and consist of the 51st, 71st, and 101st regiment, a mountain train, and some Punjab corps, and will be commanded by Brigadier Chamberlain. The 71st Highlanders at Nowshera have been ordered up to the frontier, where the enemy is stated to be making a threatening demonstration. Affairs in Affghanistan have taken a favourable turn. The Ameer Shere Alle Khan arrived at Cabool on the 9th September, and marched into the city in great state. His elder step-brother, Auzim Khan, who was in arms against him, has given in his adherence to him, but Ufzul Khan, the eldest of his step-brothers, still holds out. Flights of locusts have made their appearance in the Jubbulpore, Chindwarrah, and Hoshungabad districts of the Central Provinces, and were pursuing their flight in the direction of the Bombay Presidency. India seems likely to be visited by the Confederate steamers, the Alabama having been spoken between Ganjam and Colombo by a merchant ship. The Federal steamer Vanderbilt is, however, on the Alabama's track.

UNITED STATES.—Accounts from Virginia were received on Monday, stating that General Lee had recrossed the Rappahannock, after having entirely destroyed the railroad from Manassas, which could only be repaired at the rate of one mile per day; that General Meade, after being pushed by Hill's and Ewell's corps to the front of the defences of Washington, was again advancing; and that his cavalry had reached Warrentown Junction without meeting the Confederates. Three reports were current of General Lee's present movements, one being that he was sending his army from Culpepper along the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad to crush Burnside; the second, that he was about to cross the Potomac, and enter Pennsylvania; and the third that he wished to prevent Burnside's movement upon Lynchburg. On the 24th, however, while the New York journals were announcing that Lee was in full retreat on Richmond with the Federals in pursuit, the Confederate infantry returned to the north of the Rappahannock in force, and drove back Gregg's cavalry with heavy loss. After a slight engagement with two Federal infantry brigades, the Confederates then passed forward to Beaton Station, where they again attacked the Federal cavalry, but with what result is not known. General Lee now occupies a line with his left resting near Beverley Ford, crossing the railroad near Beaton Station, and extending towards Stafford Court-house. The object of these movements is unknown, all his plans being, as usual, shrouded in complete mystery. General Rosencrans has been superseded by General Thomas. General Grant has been appointed to command the armies of the Ohio, the Cumberland, and Kentucky, and all the operations of Thomas and Burnside will now be conducted under Grant's supervision. The whole press have now turned against Rosencrans, and are publishing numerous injurious statements concerning him. The Southern journals report that 14,000 of Burnside's cavalry were advancing into Western Virginia for a raid on the East Tennessee and Virginia railroad. They drove the Confederates from Bible Ridge to Greencastle, with the loss of 300 men, and were advancing towards Lynchburg, where there are large Confederate supplies. General Rosencrans reports that General Crook has been successful in three engagements with Wheeler's cavalry, driving them 15 miles, and capturing 4 guns, 1000 arms, and 240 prisoners. A large Confederate force under Buckner is reported to be moving into Kentucky, with the intention of reaching the Ohio River opposite Gallipolis. The Federal loss at the battle of Chickamauga is officially stated to have been 16,000 men killed, wounded and prisoners, and 36 guns. The remainder of General Longstreet's corps has reinforced General Bragg, and President Jefferson Davis has reviewed General Bragg's army. His presence is attributed to difficulties between Bragg and some of his officers. Charleston despatches of the 23d announce that no new movements had yet taken place, but General Gilmore's batteries were nearly ready to open fire on the city. It is reported from Washington that Admiral Dahlgren has been superseded in the command of the fleet of Charleston by Captain Turner, of the Ironsides. It is reported that Banks's army has landed at the mouth of the Rio Grande, and is marching on Brownsville. President Davis has dismissed all the British Consuls from the South, on the ground that they assume the power of determining whether British subjects who are regularly enlisted soldiers of the Confederacy are properly bound to its service; and arrogate the right to interfere directly with the execution of Confederate laws, and to advise soldiers of the Confederacy to throw down their arms in the face of the enemy. The Southern press comments favourably upon the action of the Confederate Government in this matter, and the Richmond Enquirer predicts the speedy advent of a British Minister at Richmond. The Southern journals are dissatisfied with Earl Russell's speech at Blairgowrie, and exhibit firmer confidence in friendly interference on the part of France. President Lincoln has called for 300,000 volunteers, who are to be enlisted for the term of three years, or for the war. If the number is not raised by January next a draft for the deficiency will be made. The Governor of New York has responded to the President's call in a proclamation urging all to assist, with all their power, to strengthen the army by volunteering, and stating that the military operations of the Government are threatened with serious disaster for want of an adequate military force. The New York Supreme Court has refused the motion to remove the action against Mr. Seward for false imprisonment to the Federal Courts, and has denied President Lincoln's power to authorise arbitrary arrests. At a Democratic mass meeting held in New York, resolutions have been passed declaring that the Democracy will never consent to the destruction of the Union. There were minority cries for peace, but the majority favoured the prosecution of the war. French and English interference was repudiated. A declaration was made that no Emperor should ever be crowned in Mexico. The following speech was delivered by the Hon. H. Winter Davis, of Baltimore, at a Union mass meeting in Philadelphia:—

"The attitude we held in the eyes of Europe when the war broke out was known to all. As to the attitude we shall hold when the rebellion is crushed out, he would only say that there was a long account to settle with two great nations of Europe. He had never said a word on that subject to anybody in that house before; but he knew what he thought, and he guessed what the audience thought. The perfidy of England and France would fester and rankle to the day of account. He used to be opposed to foreign war; but he had learnt something in two years. The sin of the Alabama and the invasion of Mexico had awakened the country. Napoleon would be expelled from this continent, and the Bahamas would not be allowed to remain a nest of pirates. And he gloried in the day when black regiments would march to the halls of the Montezumas, where the men of New York and Pennsylvania marched in days gone by. And if Admiral Dupont should live, he hoped yet to see his bombshells bursting over the dome of St. Paul's, and the ruins of London Bridge tumbling into the stream below."

MEXICO.—Intelligence from Mexico to the 27th September states that the condition of affairs was favourable, that numerous adhesions to the French intervention were being given in, and that the organization of the rural militia was being developed. Great disorders existed among the adherents of Juarez, the majority of the Governors disavowing his authority. Marshal Forey has addressed a letter to the Emperor describing the present state of affairs, and making some observations upon the stipulation of the Archduke Maximilian that he will only definitively accept the crown upon the adhesion of the majority of the Mexican States. This adhesion, Marshal Forey says, may, perhaps, be considered already accomplished, the populations of all places from which the adherents of Juarez are absent having spontaneously recognised the French intervention. The Marshal embarked at Vera Cruz for New York on the 5th October, intrusted, it is said, with a diplomatic mission.

BANK RATE OF DISCOUNT.—At a special Court on Monday morning, the Directors of the Bank of England resolved to raise their rate of discount from 4 per cent., at which it had stood since May 21, to 5 per cent. At the ordinary weekly meeting on Thursday the Directors again advanced the rate from 5 to 6 per cent.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE PRINCE CONSORT MEMORIAL FUND.—A meeting of the committee appointed at the Mansion House in Jan. 1862, to raise a Memorial to the Prince Consort, was held on Friday, the Lord Mayor in the chair, to receive a communication from Sir C. Phipps, stating her Majesty's wishes in regard to the disposal of the fund. A report was read from a sub-committee stating that the sum raised, and now in their hands for the purposes of the Memorial, amounted to upwards of 54,000*l.*, a large portion of which had been raised in small sums from the middle and working classes. Sir C. Phipps's letter stated that it was the Queen's desire that all monies so raised should be handed over to trustees whom she had appointed for that purpose. It was unanimously resolved that, in compliance with the Queen's pleasure, the subscriptions should be paid to the trustees appointed by her Majesty, viz., Lord Torrington, Sir Alexander Spearman, and Sir C. Phipps. The late Mr. Cubitt, M.P., if he had lived, would have been the fourth trustee.

THE LORD MAYOR ELECT.—On Monday, being the first day of term, Alderman Lawrence, the Lord Mayor Elect, was presented to the Lord Chancellor at his private residence, by the Recorder, when his lordship signified her Majesty's cordial assent to the choice the citizens had made.

GREAT STORM.—On Friday afternoon the metropolis and its neighbourhood was visited by a destructive storm of wind and rain, verifying the prediction of Admiral Fitzroy, who had sent warnings to the various outports that a hurricane might be expected. Its full fury appears to have been felt in the southern suburbs. The large engine-shed at New Cross, the depot of the London and Brighton Railway Company, was completely blown down, smashing in its fall four or five engines that were standing there ready for work, killing one man on the spot, and seriously injuring several others. Some houses in the Old Kent Road and at Mile End were also unroofed, and the wires of the London District Telegraph, extending from Bartholomew Lane, Bank, to the Old Jewry, were blown down. The trees in all the parks were much damaged, several barges and other vessels were upset in the river, and the up-traffic of the steamboats on the ebb tide was considerably impeded by the violence of the storm. On Sunday night the gale again broke out in the metropolis with renewed violence, and a great deal of damage was done in the eastern and south-western suburbs. The accounts from the provinces show that the storm was felt equally in all parts of the country, and along the whole coast from Cornwall to Caithness. The local papers report numerous shipwrecks, but the loss of life has been greatly diminished by the life boats, which are now stationed all round the island. The gales proved most disastrous to the fleet of steamships employed in the cattle trade between the foreign ports of the North of Europe and London, especially off the Dutch and Danish coast, whence many wrecks are reported.

Serious Accident to the Prince Consort Iron-clad.—The Prince Consort new iron-plated vessel which the Government despatched from Plymouth to Birkenhead, to keep watch over the steam rams built by Mr. Laird, put into Kingston on Friday morning greatly disabled by the gale in the Channel, and nearly filled with water. It appears that she had sprung a leak while labouring in the heavy sea, and that but for the exertions of her officers and crew it is said she would have sunk in the Channel. All her boats, guns, and cabin furniture were thrown into confusion. Several of the crew were seriously injured, and one had his leg broken. Soon after anchoring she parted her cable, and was obliged to drop a second anchor, by which she now rides, about a mile and a half from the East Pier. When she sighted Howth lights the men had been nearly 24 hours at work at the pumps without food, and were so exhausted that it was necessary to send assistance from the Ajax. The water at one time during the storm was within a few inches of the boilers, and if the fires had been put out the vessel must have been inevitably lost. From the weight of her armour she would not rise to the waves during the gale, but shipped one sea after another, and the crew were standing on the decks up to their knees in water. The steam pumps on Saturday reduced the water to the proper level, and all danger was at an end. On Wednesday three Admiralty officers arrived from England and made a careful survey of the ship, and on Thursday she left Kingston for Plymouth, where she will be placed in dry dock to be repaired. Her Majesty the Queen, who takes a peculiar interest in the vessel as bearing the name of the Prince Consort, caused a special telegram to be forwarded on Saturday to the captain, officers, and crew, congratulating and thanking them, one and all, for the saving of this splendid vessel, and highly approving their conduct while in peril from the hurricane experienced in the Irish Channel.

The Thames Embankment.—A beginning has at length been made in the great work of embanking the north side of the Thames. The first of the great caissons within which the sea wall is to be made between Westminster and Waterloo Bridges, was shipped on Monday morning in pieces from the factory at Deptford, in several barges, and carried up to the neighbourhood of the railway bridge at Charing Cross, where it is to be sunk, so that the actual work of the embankment will forthwith be commenced.

The Main Drainage.—At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works the engineer submitted a report on the progress of the main drainage, which is advancing with the greatest vigour and activity on both sides of the Thames. At the north side the upper level is completed to Barking Creek, and the middle will be finished in the course of the present or early in the next year. The lower is only delayed until the commencement of the Thames embankment enables it to be constructed beneath the new roadway. On the south side the upper level, commencing at the Plough Inn, Clapham, running down Acre Lane, along the Brixton Road, through Peckham, and on to Deptford, is entirely completed, and, so far, has answered the most sanguine expectations. The middle level has been just commenced at Kennington Oval, from which, as the main centre, two sewers will be constructed simultaneously, one through Camberwell New Road to Peckham, where it will meet and be amalgamated with the high level, which goes on to Deptford; while the western will proceed to Putney, so as to take in all the immediate drains which run into the Thames in that direction.

The Drainage at Bethnal Green.—An adjourned inquiry was held on Monday in Butler Street, Bethnal Green, respecting the death of Amelia Julietta Ware, aged 12 years, who was alleged to have died from neglected scarlet fever, arising from the bad drainage of the house where the parents resided in George Street, Green Street. The case excited unusual interest in consequence of the great mortality in the neighbourhood, and of three children having died in a fortnight from fever in the same family. Medical evidence was adduced to show that the child died of scarlet fever, caused by the want of cleanliness and the filthy habits of the parents. The drains had been examined and found in good order and free from effluvia. The Coroner said that the evidence was very satisfactory, inasmuch as the cause of the mortality had been ascertained. The jury unanimously concurred, and returned a verdict "that deceased died from scarlet fever brought on by the want of care and neglect of the parents, and not from bad drainage, as alleged."

The Great Eastern.—A special general meeting of the proprietors of the Great Ship Company was held on Monday at the London Tavern, when a lengthy report with reference to the employment of the vessel on long voyages, was read and adopted. Resolutions reducing the qualification of directors from 1000 to 500 shares, and recommending new directors to be elected at the next meeting, were also agreed to.

Diocess of London.—The Bishop of London, and the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, have agreed on an exchange of patronage, under which the following livings in the east of London will shortly pass into the gift of the Bishop:—The rectories of St. Dunstan, Stepney; St. George's-in-the-East; St. John's, Wapping; and St. Mary, Stratford, Bow; and the perpetual curacies of St. Philip, Stepney; St. Peter's, Stepney; St. Thomas, Stepney; Holy Trinity, Stepney; and Christ Church, St. George's-in-the-East. In exchange for these nine benefices the College will obtain the patronage of the vicarages of East Ham, Essex, and Northolt, Middlesex.

The City Traffic.—The regulations for the circulation of the traffic through the streets have not yet received the sanction of the Home Secretary; but the Aldermen are acting upon their right to enforce them, so far as the cabs and omnibuses are concerned. At Guildhall on Monday Alderman Wilson expressed his gratification at the sensible diminution in the obstruction, and said that a still greater improvement was required. He understood that, as every omnibus driver and conductor contributed 6d. each to a common fund to meet these cases, they made a laugh and a joke of the fines; but he wished them to clearly understand that for the future the fine for the first offence would be 5*s.*, the second 10*s.*, the third 20*s.*, and upon conviction for a fourth offence the magistrates would impound the license with a view to its entire suspension. As to the touting cabmen, the nuisance was so great all round the Bank and Royal Exchange, that in future all cabs setting down in the City would be required to repair direct to a cab stand, and any driver turning round to the impediment of the traffic without a fare would be summoned for causing obstruction, and treated accordingly.

The Raising of Holborn Valley.—The Improvement Committee of the Court of Common Council recently advertised for designs, plans, and estimates for raising Holborn valley, and offered premiums of 250*l.* and 150*l.* respectively for the two most approved designs; on the understanding that the corporation shall not be bound to employ either of the persons whose designs may be approved. No less than 80 designs have been sent in in accordance with this notice, including, as usually happens, several which are quite impracticable. The committee, after discussing the merits of the various plans, reported yesterday in favour of those which proposed a complete viaduct or high-level roadway from Holborn to Skinner Street. There were only three plans of this kind, viz., those submitted by Mr. F. Marrable, Mr. T. C. Corby, and Mr. Richard Bell. The Common Council unanimously agreed to the report, and authorised the committee to give the necessary notices to the owners of the houses affected by the plans.

Bank of England Forgeries.—Since the conviction of the three men, Griffiths, Boucher, and Burnett, for stealing Bank of England note-paper from the mills of Messrs. Portal, not a single forged bank-note has been put into circulation, and there is reason to believe that the whole of the stolen paper has been recovered. Griffiths, who ostensibly kept a small farm near Birmingham, was really a skilful engraver, and executed all the plates from which the forged notes were struck off. Since his conviction a number of these plates, found buried in the earth in different parts of his farm, have been destroyed.

New Pier at Bankside.—A new and commodious pier, constructed by the Conservators of the River Thames, in compliance with a requisition from a large body of traders and inhabitants of the Southwark side of the river, between London Bridge and Blackfriars Road, was opened on Monday for the landing and embarkation of steamboat passengers. The new pier communicates with Emerson Street, Southwark, and is nearly opposite St. Paul's Pier, Queenhithe. It will open up a communication long required between the north and south sides of the Thames, and supply the deficiency of accommodation caused by the removal of the pier at Southwark Bridge. It is understood that steps will be taken for extending similar pier accommodation to other points on the Surrey side.

Eclipses.—There will be an annular eclipse of the sun on Wednesday, the 11th inst., invisible at Greenwich. On Wednesday, the 25th inst., there will be a partial eclipse of the moon, partly visible at Greenwich. It will begin at 8.50 A.M.

Epping Forest.—It was stated a few days since that the Lord Mayor, being desirous of maintaining the rights of the citizens to visit Epping or Waltham Forest for the purpose of recreation, has intimated to Colonel Palmer as verderer of the forest his intention, previous to the expiration of his year of office, to visit the forest with some of the aldermen and common council, to exercise their annual privilege of hunting; and that the forest officers would attend on his lordship and the aldermen, and show them sport. It appears that there is no truth in the statement, which has been contradicted on authority.

Lancashire Relief Fund.—At a meeting of the Mansion House Committee on Friday, Alderman Lawrence, the Lord Mayor elect, consented to act as president of the fund for the ensuing year, and the present Lord Mayor consented to continue on the committee and to act as treasurer in the room of the late Mr. Cubitt. The committee voted grants to the amount of 2130*l.*

Loss of the Pactolus.—The Board of Trade inquiry into the circumstances attending the loss of this steamer was brought to a conclusion on Saturday. The judgment of the court was, that the certificate of the master, Mr. Edward Johnson, should be suspended for nine months.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the number of deaths registered in London in the week that ended Saturday, October 31, was 1252. The average number in the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1224. The present return is therefore 28 above the average. During the week the births of 962 boys and 873 girls, in all 1835 children, were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1882.

Provincial.

Aberavon.—The adjourned inquest on the men who were killed by the explosion at Morfa Colliery was resumed on Friday, when several men who were working in the pit at the time were examined, but they could throw no light on the cause of the explosion. They said that there had been no escape of gas previously, and it was their unanimous opinion that the pit was one of the best ventilated they had ever worked in. The inquest was again adjourned.

Ashbourne.—On Saturday week Mr. James Clifford, of Broughton House, Shardlow, was charged before the magistrates of this town with stealing in 1804 a leaf of the parish register of the parish of Longford, Derbyshire, containing an entry of the baptism of William, son of Mary Patlow, of Bentley, dated the 8th November, 1727. It was stated for the prosecution that Mr. Clifford in 1804 went to Longford, accompanied by a man named Thomas Sutton, and that they then stole the leaf. They afterwards went to London, and the prisoner and the Suttons of Shardlow then became possessed of the property of William Patlow, amounting to 60,000*l.*, to which they were not entitled, they not being the rightful heirs. Various witnesses were examined in support of the charge, and a written certificate, signed by Thomas Sutton before his death, confessing that the leaf was stolen in his presence, was produced. The defence denied the charge in the most positive manner, and characterized the proceedings as an attempt to extort money. The chairman of the bench said the magistrates, after hearing the evidence, could not help believing that a leaf was extracted from the Longford register, and that Mr. Clifford was the person who did extract it. They therefore committed him for trial. Bail was granted, Mr. Clifford in 500*l.*, and two sureties at 250*l.* each.

Bath.—On Wednesday week several men who had just left the New Inn, Welton, near this city, threw some pea haulms at the door of a cottage belonging to a woman called Hannah Roberts, whom they were in the habit of annoying in this manner. Roberts went out once or twice to ask them to desist, and they ran away. On their return the last time she rushed out with a reaping hook, threatening to murder them. Mr. G. Coles, farmer, turned towards her, and she struck him in the breast with the hook, inflicting a severe wound, but the point of the hook came in contact with a bone, which prevented its penetrating deeply. She then pursued a labouring man, named Jeremiah Haines, and, overtaking him, she struck him in the side with the hook, which penetrated the liver, and after he fell she continued to hack him about in a most savage manner. When she left it was found that the unfortunate man's right ear was cut off, the jugular vein severed, his wrists gashed in several places, three of the fingers of the right hand amputated, and his left hand cut in two. An effort was made to remove him to the New Inn, but before he could reach it he expired. The deceased was a widower, 40 years of age, and has left one child. Mr. Coles lies in a precarious state, though hopes are entertained of his recovery. Roberts was taken into custody and the jury at the inquest on returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against her.

Birkenhead.—The El Toussoun was towed out of the Birkenhead float on Sunday afternoon, and anchored near her Majesty's ship Majestic. El Monassir, which is watched by two gunboats, will be towed out of the Messrs. Laird's dock on the 9th, the tide not answering before that date.

Bury.—In February last the body of a woman was found in the Bolton Canal, in the neighbourhood of Pendleton. It did not appear to have been in the water many hours, but as there was no evidence forthcoming at the inquest either as to the identification or the manner in which she got into the water, an open verdict of Found Drowned was returned. The body was interred in the cemetery, and the clothes taken to the workhouse. On the evening before the body was found a policeman called Luke Charles left this town in company with his wife for the purpose of visiting his wife's sister, who resided in Pendleton. They left Bury about dusk, and he returned the same night without his wife. Since then numerous inquiries had been made of him about her, and to some he said she had gone to Ireland, and to others that she had gone to other places. The wife's sister residing in Pendleton became uneasy about her sister's absence, and hearing of the discovery of the body in the canal, inspected her clothes, when she at once identified them as belonging to the prisoner's wife. The matter was then taken up by the magistrates, who ascertained that the prisoner had formed relations with another woman, and had consequently a strong motive for taking away his wife's life. He has accordingly been committed for trial at the assizes.

BURY ST. EDMUND'S.—At the recent Quarter Sessions for West Suffolk, Charles Bird, shoemaker, was charged with having stolen a gold watch and chain, a silver watch and chain, and certain moneys, the property of Frances Childerstone, at Mildenhall. Mrs. Childerstone, the prosecutrix, is the widow of Mr. Jonathan Childerstone, who died at the close of last year, and was buried early in January. They had an only son, to whom they were both much attached. This young man having died before his parents, they resolved that whichever of them should die first should have placed in his or her coffin a watch and chain, 60*l.*, and other articles which had belonged to him. This agreement Mrs. Childerstone faithfully carried out on the death of her husband, who with the money and valuables was placed in three coffins, including a leaden one, in a vault in the Mildenhall Cemetery. On the 28th July last an apprentice of Mr. King, a stonemason, found that the vault had been disturbed, and on a further examination it was ascertained that it had been broken into on the side nearest the road. Mr. King called the churchwardens and other persons to the spot, and then, with the boy, got in and examined the vault. It was then found that the lids of all three coffins had been broken or cut open, and all the money, watches, and chains stolen. The prisoner mentioned the circumstance to one or two persons, and this having come to the knowledge of Mr. King he had some conversation with the prisoner, who admitted that he was one of the persons who got into the vault, and that he and a man named Graham had been persuaded to join in the robbery by Docking, the sexton, who had taken the watches and jewellery to London to sell them, and had not divided the money fairly. The prisoner pleaded "Guilty," and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour. Warrants have been issued for the apprehension of the other men.

CARMARTHEN.—Mr. W. Williams, M.P. for Lambeth, has offered, through the Rev. Dr. Nicholas, a donation of 1000*l.* towards obtaining an adequate fund for establishing High Schools and a University for the Principality. A committee is speedily to be convened in London to deliberate upon initiatory measures.

DEVIZES.—The Highway Act of 1861 has been adopted in Wiltshire, the present petty sessional division being taken as the basis for the districts.

DURHAM.—For some weeks past there has been a strike among the colliers in this county, the men demanding an advance in wages, which, upon the present prices, would amount to 20,000*l.* a year. The masters refused to accede to this demand, and determined to bring new hands into the collieries, refusing to allow the leaders of the union to remain on the works. They accordingly gave them notice to quit at the close of last week. The weather on Thursday and Friday however was so bad that the masters abstained from carrying out their plan for evicting the families of the workmen, and this consideration on one side has led to a more moderate state of feeling on the other, so that there is now a prospect of the strike coming to an end. It has been agreed to refer the dispute to arbitration, and it is hoped that the work in the mines will speedily be resumed.

GUILDFORD.—The mayor and magistrates of this borough, after having been in communication with the Home Secretary, completed their arrangements last week for the prevention of the riotous scenes which have annually been enacted within the limits of their jurisdiction on the 5th of November. A large number of special constables were sworn in to preserve the peace, Sir G. Grey sent down a force of 50 dragoons and 150 men of the 37th regiment, and the two corps of the local rifle volunteers were ordered to be in readiness to preserve the peace. The mayor on Monday issued notices stating that no bonfires or fireworks would be allowed, and that all persons appearing masked in the streets or otherwise disguised would subject themselves to be taken into custody and punished by imprisonment. He also recommended all respectable persons to remain in-doors. These precautions seem to have taken the rioters by surprise, and up to 8 o'clock on Thursday evening no disturbance had taken place in the town. There was, however, a good deal of excitement, and some roughs paraded the streets, but the known vicinity of the troops and special constables checked any disposition to violence. Most of the respectable inhabitants remained in-doors, and some of the townsmen who are "marked" as victims on the first possible opportunity barricaded their houses to preserve their windows from destruction.

HEMEL HEMPSTEAD.—On Saturday a fire broke out in Gorhambury House, the seat of the Earl of Verulam. The flames spread with such rapidity that it was feared the whole house would have been destroyed, and many of the paintings and valuables were removed. The fire however was confined to the domestic offices, and the main building was preserved. It is supposed to have been caused by an overheated flue.

LIVERPOOL.—On Saturday last the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher left this port for America in the Cunard steamship Asia. He was accompanied on board the steamer by the chairman of the Emancipation Society and other gentlemen connected with the Federal cause. In accordance with his express desire there was no "demonstration of sympathy," although there was a large number of people assembled to see him off.

MARGATE.—The packet ship Amazon, of nearly 2000 tons register, which left Gravesend on Saturday last for New York, with passengers and a general cargo, has been destroyed by fire. When off the North Foreland, on Tuesday night, she was discovered to be on fire; and although every effort was made by the officers, crew, and passengers to extinguish the flames, it was found to be impossible, and the master, seeing that the destruction of his ship was inevitable, got all the passengers and crew into the boats and then abandoned her. At 8 o'clock on Wednesday morning the ship was still burning fiercely, and was drifting towards Broadstairs. A number of boats were round her, but it was impossible to get near the ship owing to the great heat. Nothing was saved from the ship, the passengers and crew losing everything they possessed except the clothes they had on. They were landed at Margate on Thursday morning.

NORWICH.—Mr. W. F. Windham is again about to become a coach proprietor. In May he sold off all his stud, and he has now begun afresh by purchasing 12 other horses. On Saturday, at the Shire Hall, a groom and some other parties were charged with robbing him of gold chains, a revolver, &c., and were committed for trial.

PETERBOROUGH.—A case heard at the County Court in this city last week disclosed the startling fact, which has hitherto not been made public, that the special train by which the Prince of Wales travelled from Halifax to London on the 6th August narrowly escaped the fate of the Lynn excursion train. At the Helpstone crossing, where both the Midland and Great Northern lines intersect the road, an attempt was made to drive a bullock across the Great Northern line. The gates are only a single pair, and when open to the road are also open to the line, so that there is no protection for anything passing. In the present instance the bullock was rather wild, and though two or three servants stood on one side of the crossing to prevent its going down the line, and the gateman himself stood on the other side to prevent its going up the line, the bullock gave the gateman the slip, and ran along the metals on the up line. Almost at this instant the royal express train dashed past, striking the animal behind, and throwing it off the line, so that any further accident was avoided. An action being brought against the company for the value of the bullock, the judge ruled that the company were simply bound to provide a passage across their line, and were not responsible for what may occur through a bullock being wild or badly driven.

PLYMOUTH.—The new armour-plated ship Royal Oak, one of the Channel squadron, was placed in Keyham Docks a few days since for the examination of her bottom. On the water leaving the dock a remarkable appearance presented itself, which created no small consternation among the authorities of the dockyard. The armour plates adjoining and in contact with the sheathing of Muntz's metal were found to be eaten away by galvanic action, presenting a series of corroded holes running into each other, from half an inch to five-eighths of an inch deep. Some of the plates contained no less than 188 of these holes, whilst none had less than 40. Several detached holes were of an oval form, as though gouged out with a steel tool of all sizes, from that of the bowl of a salt spoon to that of a gravy spoon, and of equal depth, and some of the heads of the bolts had become recessed to the depth, size, and appearance of the bowl of a sauce ladle. Numbers of the holes had run one into the other to the extent of 5 or 6 feet, five-eighths of an inch deep and upwards, altogether presenting one of the most remarkable appearances ever witnessed. This ship has only been about eight months in the water, and was commissioned last April. What will be done with her has not been yet decided. These holes and corrosion appear to have occurred wherever the red lead or under-coating had been rubbed or washed off. The Lords of the Admiralty have now ordered the removal of Muntz's metal from the bottom of the ship.

SOUTHAMPTON.—Mr. Henry Summers, captain of the Lady of the Lake steamer, running between this town and the Isle of Wight, has been brought up on a warrant before the county magistrates on a charge of manslaughter. The steamer was on her passage to Cowes a few days since, when she ran into a boat in which a fisherman named Fielder was engaged in fishing. There was no look out on board, and though the poor fellow kept above water for about ten minutes, the boat which was lowered from the steamer was found to have no oars, and the man sank in the sight of the crew and passengers. The body has not yet been recovered, although several boats have been daily engaged in dragging for it since the accident. The unfortunate man has left a widow and nine children. The captain has been committed for trial on the charge of Manslaughter, being meantime liberated on bail, himself in 100*l.*, and two sureties in 50*l.* each.

STOKESLEY.—A murder has just been committed in the North Riding of Yorkshire. Mr. Bradshaw Graham, a farmer, living at Newham Hall, and Mr. William Johnson, another farmer, living at Hemlington, were in this town on Monday week. They were returning soon after dark on foot, when they were met at the village of Newby by Johnson's man, with a horse for his master. Johnson wanted his companion to mount, and he would ride behind, but the latter refused. Johnson then got on the horse, and again urged his companion to do the same, but he refused, when Johnson said it was because he was too proud, Graham being in a better position than Johnson. The men then began to quarrel, both being excited by liquor. Ultimately Johnson said if the other gave him any more "chaff" he would wring his neck. Graham made a defiant reply, when Johnson got off his horse, and began to square with Graham, who hit him on the side of the head with a stick. They both then closed together, and fell on the ground and struggled. While in this position Johnson called to his man to come and help him. The man went and lifted him up, when he again fell, and this occurred two or three times. Johnson never spoke again, and must have died immediately. On taking him home in a cart obtained from a neighbouring farmhouse, a surgeon found he had been stabbed just over the heart with a short instrument, half or three-quarters of an inch wide. Graham was at once taken into custody. The jury at the inquest have since returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner, who has been committed for trial on the charge.

SWAFFHAM.—At an early hour on Sunday week, Thomas Eves, an under-gamekeeper in the service of Mr. Andrew Fountain, of Narford Hall, was shot by a poacher, a youth named James Savage, belonging to this town, who is said to be only about 18 years of age. It appears that Eves, while out watching, heard the report of a gun. He then saw the prisoner go over the fence and lift two partridges which had been shot. Waiting until the man returned to the road, the keeper went up to him and demanded the birds, which the poacher, without the slightest hesitation, delivered over to him. Eves then asked the offender his name, which he gave as Burton, representing himself to be a son of George Burton, a cow-keeper for Mr. Colman, a farmer in the parish. The keeper was walking away with the partridges, when the poacher, turning suddenly round, struck Eves a terrific blow on the arm with the gun which had been so recently fired. The sudden and unexpected assault brought the keeper to the ground, and when he recovered his consciousness and was in the act of rising, his cowardly assailant quickly snatched the loaded gun which the keeper had dropped, and deliberately discharged its contents at the head of Eves, who again fell to the earth, where he lay bleeding and insensible. The prisoner then made off, carrying his own gun with him, leaving the wounded keeper, as he no doubt thought, dead. After some time, Eves so far recovered as to get to his feet again, and was met by a farmer, who assisted him into his gig and drove him home. A surgeon who was sent for pronounced him to be in imminent danger, and the prisoner having been in the meantime apprehended, the depositions of the keeper were taken in his presence. The keeper is still alive, and hopes are entertained of his recovery.

THE LATE INSULT TO THE LORD LIEUTENANT.—The Marquis of Clanricarde last week transmitted to the Earl of Carlisle at Castle Howard the address from the lieutenant and magistrates of Galway, expressing their deep regret at the insult offered to him at the Maam Hotel by order of Lord Leitrim. The address was signed by 7 peers, 20 deputy-lieutenants, and by, in all, 98 magistrates. The Lord Lieutenant has replied to the address as follows:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,—I cannot fail to feel deeply touched and gratified by the terms of the address which you have been pleased to transmit to me. Any want of hospitality was certainly the last contingency to which I could expect to be exposed upon the soil of Ireland. Nor could I doubt the spirit of loyalty which pervades the genial and generous county of Galway. I have only to regret that I thought myself bound in my representative capacity to notice the occurrence to which you refer, more seriously than might otherwise have been necessary. I feel glad to have this opportunity of stating that some accounts I have seen of the event in question scarcely do justice to the persons who were assembled at the hotel. I could discover on their part no demonstration of any feeling but of respect, and I will add, of regret."

THE PRINCE CONSORT MEMORIAL.—The special committee for the erection of a testimonial to the Prince Consort in Dublin met on Friday, the Lord Chancellor in the chair. The proceedings in reference to the opening of Stephen's Green having proved abortive, the committee determined to proceed at once with the erection of the Memorial, and adjourned to Monday to select an artist for its execution.

ARRIVAL OF A FEDERAL CRUISER.—The Federal war steamer Kearsage, which has been compelled by the French authorities to leave Brest, arrived at Cork on Tuesday, and was coaling during the whole night. On Wednesday Admiral Jones notified that she must leave the harbour within 24 hours, but her commander is said to have refused. It is said that she is watching blockade runners at Cork.

The Catholic Prelates on Irish Church Missions.—A meeting of St. Bridget's Orphanage was held last week, Dr. Cullen in the chair, at which several speeches were delivered on the Irish missions and their results. Dr. Murray, Professor of Maynooth College, moved a resolution denouncing the un-Chirstian conduct of that section of the English people who, while so many millions of their own countrymen were sunk in immorality and degradation, had taken advantage of Ireland's unparalleled distress, to send over their gold to bribe destitute orphan children from the faith of their fathers. In supporting this resolution, he said, that hardly a week had passed since an English gentleman, who had been for several years in Ireland, stated at a public meeting in Manchester that he met everywhere here respectable Protestant ministers who felt ashamed and degraded that their religion sanctioned such a cheat and imposition as are the Irish Church Missions. Nearly the whole of the money which supported this system, came from England. He found, on looking over the late reports, that of the 30,000*l.* or 40,000*l.* subscribed to this society, not 5000*l.* came from Ireland. Dr. Cullen said that the Roman Catholics were increasing and the Protestants diminishing in Ireland. In 1732, the Catholics in Dublin were calculated at 40,000 and the Protestants at 80,000—that is, two Protestants to one Catholic. At present all the Protestants and Presbyterians in Dublin put together counted little more than 50,000, while there were 196,000 Catholics in the city. By the census taken in 1732 there were three Protestants to one Catholic in the province of Ulster, and at present there were 20,000 more Catholics than Protestants and Presbyterians in the whole province.

The Tipperary Murder.—An inquest has been held on the body of the farmer Kelly, but no clue tending to trace the murderers has been discovered. The murdered man recently filled the office of bailiff over some lands in the neighbourhood, and it is thought that in this capacity he may have incurred the ill will of some of his neighbours.

Accident to a Mail Steamer.—The Munster mail steamer, in her passage across the Channel on Wednesday night, broke her main shaft, and was towed into Dublin at 8 o'clock on Thursday morning by the Duke of Cambridge. The passengers are all safe.

Scotland.

Social Science Association.—A meeting of the general committee was held a few days since at Edinburgh to receive the final reports of the secretary and treasurer. From the treasurer's statement it appeared that there was a balance of upwards of 1500*l.* in favour of the Association, and a balance of more than 100*l.* in favour of the local fund.

Railways.

Collision on the Great Eastern.—On Monday night a serious collision took place near the Brick Lane goods station. The engine of the goods train had been moved out of the station on the up line just as a passenger train from Loughton and Woodford was coming up to enter the Bishopsgate Station. Though running at a slow rate the collision was severe; both engines were destroyed, and the driver of the train and some of the passengers were severely injured.

Law.

Court of Exchequer: The Alexandra.—The case of this vessel, which was seized at Liverpool, on suspicion of being intended for a Confederate cruiser, came under the consideration of the Court on Tuesday. The Attorney-General applied for a new trial, but a curious difficulty had occurred. At the close of the first trial the Lord Chief Baron, who tried the case, told the late Attorney-General that he would sign any bill of exceptions Sir W. Atherton might lay before him, but when the actual exceptions were tendered for his signature, he declined, on the ground that they ascribed to him an exposition of the law which he did not hold and did not lay down to the jury. It also appeared that there was no rule that would allow of a new trial in Exchequer cases, but that the judges had the power to make a new rule, and were disposed to exercise their authority in the matter. The question was again brought before the Court on Thursday in the hope that some arrangement could be made, as all parties were anxious that the law of the case should be further investigated. After a long discussion the Court granted the Attorney-General a rule to apply for a new trial. In so doing the Court laid down the positions that they would take the Chief Baron's own version of the law he laid down in his charge to the jury, and that if they finally agreed to refuse a new trial there would be no appeal from the decision except on some point of law. With these restrictions the Attorney-General was left at liberty to ask for the new trial, on the ground that the verdict in the former case was against the evidence, and that the Chief Baron in his charge misdirected, or imperfectly directed, the jury on the points of law. [Meanwhile it is mentioned that the Venezuelan Government have made an offer for the vessel, and that Messrs. Baring have guaranteed the transaction to be bonâ fide, but the Government have declined to sanction the transaction.]

Court of Queen's Bench: Ex parte Woolff.—An application was made on Monday for a criminal information against the chief of the City detective police, which, when tried, will throw a curious light on the proceedings of detective officers. It will be recollected that a German named Dietrichstein, some time ago, perpetrated a clever fraud by the purchase of shares to the extent of 10,000*l.* late on a Saturday night, for which he gave a cheque. The shares were converted into money, and the possessor escaped to the Continent before it was discovered that the cheque was valueless. The police authorities suspected that Mr. Woolff knew something of Dietrichstein and his doings, and appointed men to watch his house and to follow him about everywhere night and day, both in England and on the Continent. For this annoyance Mr. Woolff has now applied for a criminal information. The Court granted the application.

Obituary.

The Dowager Lady Stanley of Alderley died on the 1st inst. at Holmwood, in her 93d year. She was the eldest daughter of the 1st Earl of Sheffield, and was the mother of the Postmaster-General, the Hon. W. Owen Stanley, and the Hon. Mrs. Scott, Hon. Mrs. Way, the Hon. Mrs. Hare, and two unmarried daughters. Her ladyship was in remainder to the barony of Sheffield.

Lieut.-General Johnson, a distinguished Peninsular officer, died at Wytham-on-the-Hill, in the county of Lincoln, on the 26th ult., in his 87th year. He entered the army in 1793, and served in the campaign of 1808 and 1809, in the Peninsula, being present in the battles of Roleia, Vimiera, and Corunna, for which he was rewarded with the war medal with three clasps. He became Major-General in 1830; and Lieut.-General in 1841.

Admiral George Frederick Rich died at 80, Eaton Place, on the 1st inst., in his 76th year. He was son of the late Admiral Sir Thomas Rich, and brother of the present Rear Admiral Charles Rich. He entered the navy in 1795, and had seen a great deal of service.

Mr. James Bunstone Bunning, the architect to the Corporation of the City of London, died on the 2d inst., at his residence in Gloucester Terrace, Regent's Park, after a lingering illness. He held the office of city architect for 20 years, during which he erected several important public buildings, at a cost of about 750,000*l.*, including among others the Freemen's Orphan School, Billingsgate Market, the Coal Exchange, the New Cattle Market, the City Prison at Holloway, and the Lunatic Asylum—all works of magnitude and public utility. He also rendered great services to the corporation in matters concerning their landed property. He recently tendered the resignation of his office on account of failing health, but was unanimously requested to continue to hold the appointment until arrangements could be made for the due execution of the department. Mr. Bunning was upwards of 60 years of age, and was held in high esteem in his profession, as well as in private life. The manner in which he carried out the embellishments of the City in honour of the entry of the Princess Alexandra was the theme of general admiration at the time, especially the decoration of Temple Bar and London Bridge, and the triumphal arch at the entrance to the city. He also designed the enormous galleries which encircled three sides of St. Paul's Cathedral on that occasion, and this he did in so effective a manner that not a single accident occurred, so far as his department was concerned, to endanger life or limb among the thousands of people who congregated there to witness the pageant.

Wills.—The will of Sir Cresswell Cresswell, Judge of the Probate and Divorce Court, has been sworn under 35,000*l.*; Mr. Stewart Marjoribanks, of Bushey Grove, Herts, 100,000*l.*; Alderman Humpnery, 180,000*l.*; Mr. Thomas Powell, of the Gaer, 200,000*l.*

Markets.

HOPS.—Borough Market, Friday, Nov. 6.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report a firm and steady market for all descriptions of both English and foreign. Choice samples are scarce, and command rather higher rates.

COVENT GARDEN, Nov. 7.

Produce of all kinds is for the most part abundant, but trade is still dull. Of Grapes and Pine Apples the supply is sufficient for the demand. Hamburgh Grapes are realiisng from 8d. to 1s. per pound. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Brown Beurré, Crassane, Duchesse d'Angoulême, and Beurré Diel Pears. Some good samples of Ribston Pippin and Cox's Orange Pippin Apples may now be obtained. Kent Cobs are good and plentiful. New St. Michael Oranges have arrived, and realise from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Asters, Marigolds, Calceolarias, Mignonette, and Roses.

BRITISH WOOLS.—London, Nov. 5.

We have to report a continuation of demand at full prices, which, however, are not above the rates paid the farmers, who have been able to realise as much at their own homes as has been made after paying the expenses of carriage, commission, interest, and loss of weight, amounting to say ½d. a pound, being a loss to nearly that extent by consigning to London.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Nov. 2.

The number of Beasts is considerably smaller than on Monday last, consequently choicest kinds are readily disposed of, and on the average prices are better than on Thursday. The supply of Sheep is not so large as of late; trade is not very brisk, but prices have advanced about 2d per 8 lbs. Calves are selling about as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 920 Beasts, 1840 Sheep, and 150 Calves; from Ireland, 1450 Beasts; and 2650 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Thursday, Nov. 5.

The supply of Beasts is about the same as on Thursday last. Trade is dull, owing to unfavourable weather, yet prices generally remain as on Monday. We have a few more Sheep, and the demand is limited. Monday's quotations are with difficulty realised. The supply of Calves is very short, there being no foreign arrivals; there is, however, scarcely a quotable advance in price. Our foreign supply consists of 620 Beasts and 2120 Sheep; Milch Cows, 80.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Nov. 2.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was very small, and met with a ready sale at the prices of this day se'nnight. Foreign was in retail demand only at our quotations. Best qualities of Malting Barley sell at late rates, but other sorts are 1s. per qr cheaper. Beans and Peas are unaltered in value. The Oat trade was steady at last week's quotations. The top price for town-made Flour was reduced 3s. per sack, for barrels there was rather more inquiry.

Friday, Nov. 6.

The show of English Wheat here to-day, coastwise and by land carriage, was very moderate; but the general quality of the samples was fine. For most kinds there was a fair, but by no means active inquiry, at prices equal to Monday, and at which a good clearance was effected. There was a good supply of foreign Wheat; selected qualities were in fair request at full quotations: otherwise the trade ruled heavy on former terms. Floating cargoes of Wheat were steady in price. Other descriptions of produce afloat were very inactive. Malting Barley moved off freely at full currencies, but grinding and distilling sorts were the turn cheaper. New malt was very firm in price; old parcels, however, were much neglected. The supplies of Oats having fallen off, the Oat trade was steady; no change took place in prices compared with Monday. Beans were a dull inquiry at about previous currencies. The sale for Peas was in a sluggish state, at the late decline in value. Most kinds of Flour were tolerably firm. The supply of American was on the increase. The top price of town-made was 40s. per 280 lbs. Canary seed was steady at 56s. to 60s. per qr.; other seeds, as well as cakes, moved off slowly on former terms.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 3.—We have had a very good attendance of both town and country millers and dealers at to-day's market, and Wheat has met a steady consumptive inquiry at the full prices of Friday last. Flour has rather a better sale, and good superfine must be quoted 6d. per barrel dearer; French is offered freely at late rates. Indian Corn would be taken readily at Friday's quotations, but there are no sellers under fully 3d. per qr. advance. Oats and Oatmeal are held firmly at the recent improvement. Beans, Peas, and Barley remain without alteration. Market closes firm.

CHARLES NOBLE requests WILLIAM HALLIDAY (late in his employ) to forward his PRESENT ADDRESS. Sunningdale Nursery, Bagshot.

A GENTLEMAN, who possesses a beautiful Landed Property in Turkey, and has no time to devote to it himself, would like to meet with a FARMER or MARKET GARDENER, with some small means, who would undertake the personal superintendence and cultivation of the same. The Land is extremely rich, and has a rivulet running through it. It would be suitable for Cereal Crops, Grazing, the Planting of Mulberry Trees, and also the Cultivation of Cotton. It is situated a few miles from the sea, and is very close to a Capital Town. The Estate is about 450 acres in extent. As the main object of the owner is to increase the value of the property, very liberal terms or arrangements would be made.

Apply by Letter only in the first instance, to A. B. C., care of Messrs. John Draper, Stationers, &c., 5, Little Tower Street, E.C.

REQUIRED, as OVERSEERS on Sugar Estates in the Island of Trinidad, several Young Men of the ages of 20 to 25 years. Young Men who have been educated at any of the Agricultural Colleges, or Sons of Farmers who have a good knowledge of Practical Farming and the care of Stock, will be preferred.—For all particulars apply to Messrs. WM. BURNLEY HUME & Co., 8, Finch Lane, Cornhill.

WANTED, in one of the first London Nursery and Seed Establishments, an energetic YOUNG MAN, of thorough business habits, competent to undertake a large Correspondence and the general direction of an office. One who could also act as Salesman if required would be preferred. A competent person will meet with ample encouragement.—References as to character, ability, &c., must bear strict investigation, and application in own handwriting, stating terms, to be made to B. D., Gardeners' Chronicle Office, 41, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.

WANTED, as In-door FOREMAN, PROPAGATOR, and PLANTSMAN, a persevering, sober, steady person, of business habits, and from 35 to 45 years of age. Collection of Stove and Greenhouse not large, but must be well grown both for early and late blooming. Propagation of Rhododendrons, Conifers, Camellias, Roses, &c., extensively carried on both for trade and private purposes. None other than such as can command first-class testimonials for the above qualifications will be treated with.—Address, with references, wages required, without house, &c., to Messrs. CLARKE, Seedsmen, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

WANTED, a YOUNG MAN, to assist in the outdoor department of a Nursery. One who is well acquainted with Fruits, Roses, and Conifers, has had experience in a good Nursery, and can give good reference as to ability and moral character.—Application, stating age, wages, &c., to be made in own handwriting only, to SUTTON & SONS, Royal Berks Seed Establishment, Reading.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY, a good MARKET GARDENER and WIFE, without incumbrance.—The Gardener must be well up to his work, and have a good reference. The Wife will be required to understand Poultry and Cows; a per centage will be given her on what she produces. House, Firing, Vegetables, and Milk, with a liberal Salary.—Apply to WILLIAM EPPS, JUN., Nursery, Seed, and Fruit Establishment, Hastings.

Seed Trade.

WANTED, as SHOPMAN, an intelligent MAN for the Shop, in a Wholesale and Retail Establishment. Must be a first class hand.—Address applications, R. M., No. 473, Post Office, Glasgow.

Under Gardener or Foreman in a Gentleman's Place.

WANTED, a respectable middle-aged married Man, without family, to act as UNDER GARDENER; must understand the Management of Greenhouse and Stove Plants, also Forcing Grapes and Melons, and Gardening generally. To a deserving steady man the situation would be found a comfortable one.—Address WM. WOOD & SON, Nurseries, Maresfield, Uckfield, Sussex.

WANTED, a GROOM and a KITCHEN GARDENER.—The Rector of Wickham, Hampshire, is in want of a Groom, who would be willing to make himself generally useful. Also of a good Kitchen Gardener, who could undertake the Management of Cows. No one need apply who cannot give good references.

DAIRY-MAID.—Wanted, a Person to take charge of a small Dairy, four cows, look after Poultry, make Bread and Butter. If she can Cook a little so much the better.—Address, stating age, wages required, and length of service in last place, to E., Gardeners' Chronicle Office, W.C.

Part 6 is now published and may be had of the Author, 8, Crescent, Cripplegate, London, E.C.
The above work will be complete in 10 Parts, and will contain such a selection of accurate illustrations as will convey to the public generally a correct idea of the wonderful variety and great beauty of Orchidaceous flowers.
Numerous applications have been received urging the great desirability of continuing this serial for the use of amateurs. The author therefore announces that it will be continued with 3 Plates per Part, each Part to be issued at shorter intervals until some few more good old varieties have been illustrated, and then to restrict the plates to those new introductions as are both new and desirable.

LIVERPOOL and LONDON FIRE and LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.
At the Annual Meeting of the Proprietors in this Company, held on Thursday, February 25, 1863, JAMES ASPINALL TOBIN, Esq., in the Chair, the Report of the Directors for the year 1862 was read. It showed:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| That the Fire Premiums of the year were .. | £436,065 | 0 | 0 |
| Against those in 1861, which were .. .. | 360,131 | 0 | 0 |
| Giving an increase in 1862 of .. .. .. | £75,934 | 0 | 0 |
| That the new Life business comprised the issue of 785 Policies, insuring .. .. .. .. | 467,334 | 0 | 0 |
| On which the Annual Premiums were .. .. | 13,935 | 7 | 11 |
| That there was added to the Life Reserve .. | 79,277 | 11 | 4 |
| That the balance of Undivided Profit was increased | 25,725 | 9 | 7 |
| That the Invested Funds of the Company amounted to .. .. .. .. .. | 1,417,808 | 8 | 4 |

In reference to the very large increase of 76,000*l*. in the Fire premiums of the year, it was remarked in the Report, "The Premiums paid to a Company are the measure of that Company's business of all kinds; the Directors therefore prefer that test of progress to any the duty collected may afford, as that applies to only a part of a Company's business, and a large share of that part may be, and often is, re-insured with other offices. In this view the yearly addition to the Fire Premiums of the Liverpool and London Company must be very gratifying to the proprietors.

News of the Week.

THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH has addressed an autograph letter to all the sovereigns and free cities of Europe, inviting them to send representatives to a Congress to be held at Paris for the purpose of considering the points in which the Treaty of Vienna has been infringed, and of adopting such measures with respect to present complications as may best secure the general peace. HIS MAJESTY, in this letter, says that it impossible not to admit that the treaties of Vienna upon almost all points are destroyed, modified, misunderstood, or menaced, leading to duties without rule, rights without title, and pretensions without restraint. The danger is so much the more formidable, because the improvements brought about by civilisation, which has bound nations together by the identity of material interests, would render war still more destructive. Called as he has been to the throne by Providence and the will of the French people, but trained in the school of adversity, he is, he says, perhaps less bound than any other to ignore the rights of Sovereigns and the legitimate aspirations of peoples. He is therefore ready, without any preconceived system, to bring to an International Council the spirit of moderation and justice, the usual portion of those who have endured so many various trials. In taking the initiative in such an overture, the Emperor says that he does not yield to an impulse of vanity; but as he is the Sovereign to whom ambitious projects are most attributed, he has it at heart to prove by this frank and loyal step that his sole object is to arrive without a shock at the pacification of Europe. If this proposition be favourably received, he prays that Paris may be accepted as the place of meeting. Europe, he says, would, perhaps, see some advantage in the capital from which the signal for subversion has so often been given becoming the seat of Conferences destined to lay the basis of a general pacification. This letter was received by the Queen on Monday morning, and three Cabinet Councils have been held this week to consider the answer to be given on the part of the British Government. It is understood that Her Majesty's Ministers have resolved to give their assent to the proposed Congress on the condition that they are distinctly informed beforehand of the nature of the questions to be introduced, and are satisfied that their discussion is likely to be followed by advantageous results.

The Prussian Chambers were opened on Monday by the King in person. His Majesty expressed his earnest desire for a settlement of the differences between the Government and the Chamber, but at the same time declared that he would consent to no Budget which did not insure the maintenance of the new organisation of the army. The Bill regulating the period of military service had, however, been modified. His Majesty stated that the revenue was in a satisfactory condition, and announced several new Bills, the most important of which related to the press laws and to a new Criminal Code. His Majesty said that if the Federal execution in Holstein should require the assistance of Prussia, estimates would be laid before the Chambers, and that the negotiations on the German Reform question would also be submitted to them. The King concluded by observing that they lived in an agitated time, and perhaps stood on the brink of a more animated future. He therefore asked them the more urgently to come to an understanding with the Government on the solution of home questions. In the sitting of the Upper House on Tuesday the Address in answer to the King's Speech was agreed to by a small majority; and in the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Thursday, Herr Von Grabow, the Liberal candidate, was elected President of the Chamber by a majority of 224 to 37 over Herr Von der Heydt, the nominee of the Ministers.

The Emperor of Russia has relieved the Grand Duke Constantine of his functions as Commander-in-Chief of Poland, at his own request, on the ground that the continual increase of the insurrection is incompatible with the institutions which had been decreed by the Emperor for that country. The Grand Duke has since left for Vienna on his way to Baden Baden, where he will take up his residence for the winter.

From the United States we learn that a despatch from General Thomas has been received at Washington, announcing that General Hooker was attacked by the Confederates at Chattanooga at midnight of the 28th ult. The battle lasted until 4 o'clock on the following morning, when the Confederates were driven from the field, and compelled to abandon their position on Look-out Mountain. General Lee is said to have sent large reinforcements to co-operate with General Bragg in isolating Burnside and driving him out of East Tennessee. The bulk of General Lee's army is on the south side of the Rappahannock, but he holds all the fords of the river and is fortifying the approaches to the north bank. General Meade has been reinforced from Washington, and is said to be making preparations to resume active operations. The bombardment of Fort Sumter was resumed by General Gilmore on the 26th ult., and was still in progress on the 30th, but no more shells had been thrown into Charleston. The Republicans have carried the state elections in New York and Massachusetts by large majorities.

Home News.

The Court.—The Queen and Royal family continue at Windsor Castle. On Saturday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena and Princess Hohenlohe, visited the Queen Marie Amelie at Claremont. On Saturday morning the Crown Prince of Prussia left for Windsor. In the evening Prince Frederick of Denmark arrived at Sandringham on a visit. On Sunday morning the Princeand Princess of Wales, the Crown Princess of Prussia, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, attended Sandringham Church. The Rev. G. B. Moxon officiated. On Monday morning the Prince of Wales and the Royal visitors went out shooting. In the afternoon, in honour of his Royal Highness's birthday, the children of the Sandringham, Wolferton, and Dersingham schools, sang a piece or two in front of the Hall, and were afterwards provided with dinner. The cottagers and workpeople on the estate also had a dinner in honour of the day. In the evening the Prince and Princess had an evening party to which the clergy and the principal inhabitants of the district were invited. On Wednesday morning the Crown Princess of Prussia, Prince Frederick of Denmark, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, left Sandringham for Wolferton Station. The Prince and Princess of Wales accompanied them to Wolferton, whence the Crown Princess proceeded to Windsor, and Prince Frederick of Denmark to Oxford. In the afternoon the Prince of Wales went out shooting. The Princess drove out. On Thursday morning the Prince of Wales paid a visit to the Castle Rising Estate, and spent the day shooting with Lord Alfred Hervey and other noblemen invited to meet his Royal Highness. Mr. Odo Russell left Sandringham for London.

The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia.—On Saturday morning the Crown Prince of Prussia left Sandringham for Windsor, to take leave of the Queen previous to his departure for Berlin to attend the opening of the Prussian Chambers. His Royal Highness left Windsor in the evening for Dover, travelling from London by the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, and embarked for Calais immediately on his arrival at Dover. The Princess remained at Sandringham for the Prince of Wales's birthday, and left on Wednesday morning for Windsor on a visit to the Queen.

Prince Alfred.—On Friday afternoon Prince Alfred, accompanied by Prince William of Hesse, left Edinburgh for Winton Castle, the seat of Lady Ruthven. In the evening a dinner and ball were given in honour of their visit, and on Saturday morning their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Morton, and other visitors, shot over the preserves. In the evening they returned to Holyrood.

The Cabinet.—A Cabinet Council was held on Tuesday, at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Wednesday and another on Thursday. Another Council is summoned for Monday.

The Archbishopric of Dublin has been conferred on Dr. Trench, the Dean of Westminster.

The Deanery of Westminster.—The Rev. Canon Stanley, Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Oxford, Canon of Christ Church, Honorary Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of London, will succeed Dr. Trench as Dean of Westminster.

The Army.—The Colonelcy of the 78th Regiment, vacant by the death of General Macneill, has been conferred on Lieut.-Gen. Sir Patrick Grant; and the Colonelcy of the 10th Regiment, vacated by this promotion, has been conferred on Major-General Bell.

Official Appointment.—Mr. Phinn, Q.C., has been reappointed Counsel to the Admiralty and Judge-Advocate of the Fleet, vacant by the appointment of Mr. Collier to the Solicitor Generalship.

The Polish Question.—The Gazette of Friday contained the following despatch addressed by Earl Russell to her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburg:—

"Foreign Office, Oct. 20.

"My Lord,—Baron Brunnow has communicated to me a despatch from Prince Gortschakoff, dated August 26 (September 7), in reply to my despatch to your Excellency, No. 178, of the 11th ult., of which you were instructed to give a copy to his Excellency. Her Majesty's Government have no wish to prolong the correspondence on the subject of Poland for the mere purpose of controversy. Her Majesty's Government receive with satisfaction the assurance that the Emperor of Russia continues to be animated with intentions of benevolence towards Poland, and of conciliation in respect to all foreign Powers. Her Majesty's Government acknowledge that the relations of Russia towards European Powers are regulated by public law. But the Emperor of Russia has special obligations in regard to Poland. Her Majesty's Government have in the despatch of the 11th August, and preceding despatches, shown that, in regard to this peculiar question, the rights of Poland are contained in the same instrument which constitutes the Emperor of Russia King of Poland. Your Excellency is instructed to give a copy of this despatch to Prince Gortschakoff. I am, &c., "Russell."

The Mersey Ironclads.—It was announced on Monday that in accordance with instructions from the Government the steam rams El Toussin and El Monnassir have been valued by professional and official surveyors. El Toussin was valued at 106,000*l*., and the unfinished El Monnassir at 80,000*l*. The builders' measurement of each vessel is 1800 tons. Messrs. Laird refused to disclose the contract price. It is stated that the British Government wish to purchase the vessels from the French owners, Messrs. Brevey.

The Court-Martial on Colonel Crawley.—Tuesday next, the 17th inst., has been fixed as the day for opening the court-martial upon Lieut.-Colonel Crawley at Aldershott.

Foreign.

France.—The Moniteur publishes the text of a Letter addressed to the Sovereigns of Europe by the Emperor of the French, proposing a general Congress to settle the affairs of Europe. The following is the translation:—

"Most High and Most Illustrious Sovereigns, Princes, and Free Towns which constitute the High German Confederation:—In presence of the events which every day arise and become urgent, I deem it indispensable to express myself without reserve to the Sovereigns to whom the destiny of nations is confided. Whenever severe shocks have shaken the bases and displaced the limits of States, solemn transactions have taken place to arrange the new elements, and to consecrate by revision the accomplished transformations. Such was the object of the Treaty of Westphalia in the 17th century, and of the negotiations at Vienna in 1815. It is on this latter foundation that now reposes the political edifice of Europe; and yet, as you are aware, it is crumbling away on all sides. If the situation of the different countries be attentively considered, it is impossible not to admit that the Treaties of Vienna upon almost all points are destroyed, modified, misunderstood, or menaced. Hence, duties without rule, rights without title, and pretensions without restraint. The danger is so much the more formidable because the improvements brought about by civilisation, which has bound nations together by the identity of material interests, would render war still more destructive. This is a subject for serious reflection; let us not wait before deciding on our course for sudden and irresistible events to disturb our judgment and carry us away despite ourselves in opposite directions. I therefore propose to you to regulate the present and secure the future in a Congress. Called to the throne by Providence and the will of the French people, but trained in the school of adversity, I am perhaps bound less than any other to ignore the rights of the Sovereigns and the legitimate aspirations of nations. Therefore I am ready, without any preconceived system, to bring to an International Council the spirit of moderation and justice, the usual portion of those who have endured so many various trials. If I take the initiative in such an overture, I do not yield to an impulse of vanity; but as I am the Sovereign to whom ambitious projects are most attributed, I have it at heart to prove by this frank and loyal step that my sole object is to arrive without a shock at the pacification of Europe. If this proposition be favourably received, I pray you to accept Paris as the place of meeting. In case the Princes, allies and friends of France, should think proper to heighten by their presence the authority of the deliberations, I shall be proud to offer them my cordial hospitality. Europe would see, perhaps, some advantage in the capital from which the signal for subversion has so often been given becoming the seat of the conferences destined to lay the bases of a general pacification. I take advantage of this opportunity to renew to you the assurance of my sincere attachment and of the lively interest which I take in the prosperity of the States of the Confederation. Whereupon, most high and illustrious Sovereign Princes, and Free States which constitute the most exalted German Confederation, I pray God to have you in His holy keeping. Written at Paris on the 4th of November in the year of grace 1863. "Napoleon."

"Countersigned, Drouyn de Lhuys."

This letter is said to have been addressed to 15 Governments. It is rumoured that Prussia has expressed her adhesion, and that Austria is favourable to the proposal. The Constitutionnel, Pays, France, and Patrie applaud "the lofty ideas and generous aspirations" expressed in the Emperor's letter, and most of the other Paris papers commend it as pacific and conciliatory. The Senate and Corps Législatif met on Friday to receive a communication from the Government to the Corps Législatif. In the sitting of the Corps Législatif M. de Morny commented upon the address of the Emperor. He said:—

Nobody appreciated this admirable and liberal speech more than himself, because he had been brought up to admire English society, where individual and absolute liberty inspires the people with a feeling of dignity and independence, where liberty of association develops personal initiative, where the most extended political liberty is moderated by a religious respect for the law, and by sound public judgment. England, however, has taken years to realise these benefits. Revolutions in France have never been turned to the advantage of durable liberty. Freedom can only be established peacefully by a good understanding between a liberal Sovereign and an Assembly of moderate views. He would endeavour to maintain this good understanding. M. de Morny, in conclusion, said that he had seen with satisfaction that popular suffrage had elected former Parliamentary celebrities. Their adhesion was a homage rendered to the present form of government. He esteemed them too much to doubt the loyalty of their intentions.

At this sitting M. Thiers took his seat on the extreme left, and M. Berryer on the right centre. The other members of the Opposition seated themselves around the place which M. Thiers has made the centre of the new constitutional Opposition. A public sitting took place on Saturday to verify the elections of the members. An account of the situation of the Empire has been distributed among the Senators and Deputies. The following is an abstract of the more important passages:—

"With regard to foreign affairs, the account sketches the events which led to the Polish insurrection, which the Russo-Prussian convention transformed into an international and European question. It details the negotiations that have taken place between the other Powers and Russia upon the subject, and says:—'We cannot believe that the union of the Cabinets in affairs so worthy of solicitude should remain sterile. Let us not in any case attempt to impose our solution upon Powers interested as directly, and even more so than ourselves, in the regulation of the pending difficulties. It is not in accordance either with our obligations or our rights in a question essentially European to go alone to meet a responsibility which all ought to partake.' The statement then expresses a hope that a reconciliation may take place between Denmark and Germany, and says that 'the Emperor's Government has seen with satisfaction that in Italy calm has succeeded to the agitation caused by the Roman question. The public mind, however, does not appear disposed to promote material concessions. In the particular position created by events the greatest service which the Emperor's Government could render to the Italians was to remain inaccessible to the various passions which were agitating around it. The Emperor is aware that he has contributed as much as lies in his power to prepare for the future. These postponements of the solution have not been without advantage for the Peninsula. The Roman Government has endeavoured to realise several of the reforms claimed in the administration of the States of the Church. We have reason to hope that that task will be pursued. The Italian Government has done its best to organise the new kingdom, to develope its resources, to constitute the military force of Italy, to suppress brigandage with our loyal concurrence, and to discourage the impatience to which it was resolved not to yield. We are justified in believing that these happy influences will contribute to dissipate prejudices and produce a state of matters more favourable to a better understanding between the different political parties." Relative to Greece, it says that the Emperor congratulates himself upon seeing the crisis in that country so happily solved, as the development of this crisis might have brought about serious complications in the East. Greece may, if wise, date her regeneration from this period. We shall the more approve this, as Greece will have at her head a Sovereign belonging to a country bound to France by old and cordial traditions. The Government of the Emperor maintains with the Sultan the most friendly relations. On no point of the East has peace been seriously disturbed. Under the guidance of the enlightened Prince who has succeeded Said Pasha, the prosperity of Egypt can only increase by the protection which we hope will continue to be granted to everything contributing to develope the resources of the country, by calling in the concurrence and activity of Europeans.' The statement then treats of the disunion between the Prince of the Danubian Principalities and the National Assembly of Wallachia and Moldavia, and says that if it should become necessary for Europe to again interfere to modify the constitution of the United Principalities, the Emperor's Government is disposed to come to an understanding with the Porte and the other Powers who have guaranteed the present state of things in these Principalities, in order to facilitate such reforms as may be acknowledged necessary. As regards Montenegro, the Emperor's Government has received assurances from the Porte that the necessary instructions would be given for the demolition of the block-houses. The Emperor has advised the Government of the Sultan and the Prince of Servia to accept a conciliatory policy. 'In all these questions,' continues the statement, 'the Government has endeavoured to maintain a concert with the other Powers in order to insure peace in the East by respect for international stipulations.' The Government regrets that the attempt to effect a reconciliation between the North and South in America has been void of result. As regards Mexico, the Government is happy to see that the Archduke Maximilian has asked that the whole nation should ratify the wishes expressed by the Notables. 'We expect that in a very near future the new Mexican Government will offer guarantees which were wanting under preceding Governments. Important questions remain to be settled, because the military issue of our expedition is only preparing the ground for ulterior negotiations. With regard to Madagascar, the statement says:—'We await a more clearly defined and better known state of things to enable us to take our resolution according to circumstances.' Respecting Japan, the statement points out the favourable attitude of the Central Government against the hostilities of the feudal Princes, and continues:—'The Government of the Emperor will not depart without well established necessity from the spirit of conciliation.' The financial condition of the empire will be communicated to the Chambers in the statement preceding the Budget."

The Emperor and Empress, with the Prince Imperial, left on Sunday for Compiègne, where they will remain a month. During their Majesties' stay three sets of guests will be entertained at the château. The first set arrived there on the 10th inst. Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne has arrived in Paris, and will shortly proceed to London. The Bank of France has raised its rate of discount to 7 per cent.

BELGIUM.—The Chambers were opened on Tuesday by the King in person. The following is an abstract of his Majesty's speech:—

"The King acknowledged the testimonies of affection and devotion which he had received from the country, with the marks of confidence and sympathy of foreign Governments. His Majesty spoke of the benefits entailed upon commercial relations by the abolition of the Scheldt dues, alluded to the progress of agriculture, enumerated various Bills which would be laid before the Chamber, and stated that the financial position of the country was satisfactory. His Majesty concluded by dwelling on the success of the Belgian school at the London International Exhibition, the progress of the fine arts, of public education, and popular instruction."

The King had intended, on leaving Como, to visit his son-in-law, the Archduke Maximilian, and the Archduchess Charlotte, at Miramar. It appears, however, that his Majesty's health rendered it advisable for him to return to Brussels by the shortest route, without going to Miramar.

PRUSSIA.—The Prussian Chambers were opened on Monday by the King in person. The following is an abstract of the speech from the Throne:—

"His Majesty expressed an earnest wish for a termination to the rise of differences between the Government and the Chamber. He announced a Bill which would regulate the rights of the Government in case of the Budget not being legally settled, and declared that, without endangering the most important interests, he could only assent to such a Budget as should insure the maintenance of the new organisation of the army. The Bill regulating the period of military service had been modified. The revenue of 1862 had produced a surplus, as would probably be the case with the revenue of 1863. The Budgets for 1863 and 1864 should be laid before the Chambers. The apparent deficit in the latter would be removed by the ground and building tax of 1865. The balance-sheets for 1859, 1860, and 1861 would be submitted to the Chambers, as well as a Bill establishing the expenditure and receipts of 1862. Bills would also be brought forward for the construction of new railways, with regard to the legal position of associations, additional regulations to the press laws of the 1st of June last, and to a new Criminal Code. The Government was still endeavouring to secure the continuance of the Zollverein, while maintaining the commercial treaty with France, and especially to regulate its relations to Austria. Should Federal execution in Holstein require the application of extraordinary means from Prussia, estimates would be laid before the Chamber. The negotiations with respect to the German reform question would be submitted to the Diet. His Majesty concluded by saying—We live in an agitated time, perhaps stand upon the brink of a more agitated future. I ask you, therefore, the more urgently to bring about an understanding upon the solution of home questions with earnest will."

In the sitting of the Upper House on Tuesday the Address to the King was agreed to by a small majority. Among the members who voted for it was the Minister of Justice. The Minister of the Interior communicated to the House the Royal ordinance on the press of the 1st of July last, and a Bill making some modifications in the same. The Ministers said that this ordinance was issued by the King because there was at that time an immediate want of a press law; but the ordinance was only applicable to a temporary state of things, and was not suited to remain as a permanent law. The intention of the Government was to allow it to remain in force until there should be permanent legislation on the press. In the Chamber of Deputies on Thursday, 268 members being present, Herr von Grabow was elected President by 224 votes against 37 votes for M. von der Heydt. MM. Unruh and Bockum-Dolffs were chosen Vice-Presidents. Herr von Grabow in his speech said—

"His post was a difficult one in the gloomy situation of the country. The strong desire expressed by the Royal House for a solution of pending differences would be fulfilled if the sworn Constitution of the country were constantly interpreted and acted upon only in its obvious spirit. Faith towards the rights of the Crown would not then be distinguishable from fidelity to the rights of the people, external dangers would be conquered in defiance of death, and Prussia's mission in the German Fatherland would be assured."

The Crown Prince, who arrived from England on purpose to attend the opening of the Chambers, left Berlin on Wednesday, on his return to Windsor.

AUSTRIA.—The Duke de Gramont on Saturday delivered to Count Rechberg the copy of an autograph letter from the Emperor of the French to the Emperor of Austria, inviting the latter to a Congress of Sovereigns at Paris. Prince Metternich has since been authorised to declare to the Emperor Napoleon that Austria is ready to co-operate in an European Congress, on a basis yet to be determined, for strengthening the public European right, with special regard to accomplished facts. The Vienna journals advocate a close alliance with England and Prussia. Almost all of them consider the speech of the Emperor Napoleon calculated to create uneasiness. The official Wiener Zeitung says:

"We cannot refrain from remarking that the Treaties of Vienna have not ceased to exist because, according to international stipulations, they have been partially modified, or because their observance upon isolated points has been shaken. The fact is that Austria has always honestly fulfilled the treaties. Even her endeavours to bring about German reform have been based upon European treaty rights, and were specially directed to appease the agitation of Germany. Austria can perfectly acquiesce in the main idea of the Speech—viz., a mutual agreement between the Powers to remove the eventualities of war."

In the sitting of the Reichsrath on Saturday a credit of 69 millions was unanimously granted to the Government without debate. The Vienna press considers this to be a demonstration against the French Emperor's speech. The Union Bank is in a state of dissolution. The grantees were unable to come to an understanding with persons wishing to purchase the privilege, occasioning the English and Austrian directors to withdraw from the undertaking. The Memorandum addressed by Austria to Prussia on the question of Federal reform was officially published on Wednesday. In this document Austria expresses a hope that Prussia may be induced by her loyal sentiments towards the Confederacy to accept the propositions already agreed to by 24 German Governments. It says that such acceptance on the part of Prussia would not fail to terminate the hesitation of the other Governments which have not yet given in their adhesion. An official denial has been given to the rumour current in Vienna that the number of the regiments of the Line is to be increased from 80 to 100.

THE ADRIATIC.—The Austrian Lloyd's steamer Europa has been wrecked near Linarea, on the voyage to Cyprus. The specie and mails on board were saved.

ITALY.—The opening of the Foggia Railway took place on Tuesday. The King, who was accompanied by General Della Marmora, the Ministers, the diplomatic body, and many gentlemen connected with the railway, arrived at Foggia at 7 o'clock on the previous evening. Telegrams from the different towns through which the Royal train passed state that His Majesty was enthusiastically received by the people all along the route. The passage of the King was one continued triumph. The railway stations were splendidly illuminated. The Bishops of Pescara and Foggia celebrated religious ceremonies on the occasion. A review of the garrison and 8000 of the National Guard of the province subsequently took place amidst the enthusiasm of the inhabitants. The King afterwards left for Naples. His Majesty reached Avellino in the evening. The people assembled in crowds along the route, giving proof, by the loudness of their acclamations, of their devoted sympathy with the King and the unity of Italy. The town gave his Majesty a magnificent reception. On Wednesday morning the civil and ecclesiastical authorities of the province of Terra Laboro went to meet the King at Infino. His Majesty arrived at Naples at midday, and was received by the Royal Princes, the Syndic, and the other authorities. He drove through the principal streets, which were densely crowded, and was enthusiastically cheered by the people. The working men's societies followed the procession. The streets were decorated with flags and lined by the National Guard of the whole provinces of Naples and Caserta. The garrison were under arms. The King reached the Palace amid loud shouts of "Long live the King of Italy." The Liberal press unanimously applaud the Emperor Napoleon's speech at the opening of the French Chambers. The Minister of War has ordered the line of the Volturno to be placed in a state of defence, and the provisioning of the fortress of Gaëta. The Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne presented his letters of recall to the Pope on Thursday, and left Rome on Saturday. The Pope has conferred on the Prince the Grand Cordon of the Order of Pius IX. Ten waggons, laden with stones, while passing the bridge over the Tiber, on Saturday, fell into the river, owing to neglect to close the barriers. No person was hurt, and the communication has not been interrupted. An uniform rate of two bajocchi is henceforth to be charged upon letters within the Papal dominions. The National Committee has published a pamphlet containing fresh documents relating to the trial of Chevalier Fausti.

GREECE.—Intelligence from Athens to the 6th inst. announces that, at the request of the King, M. Bulgaris had formed a new Cabinet, composed as follows:—Minister of the Interior and President of the Council, M. Bulgaris; Minister of Finance, M. Drosos; Minister of Justice, M. Diamantopulos; Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. Belyami; Minister of Public Worship, M. Petzalis; Minister for War, M. Smolentz. The King assumes the title of George I., King of the Hellenes.

RUSSIA.—The Journal de St. Pétersbourg publishes an Imperial rescript to the Grand Duke Constantine. It states that the Grand Duke being convinced, by the continual increase of the insurrection in Poland, of the incompatibility between the condition of affairs in that country and the feeling of goodwill for its pacification which induced the Emperor to intrust him with the carrying into operation the institutions which had been decreed, the Emperor consents to relieve the Grand Duke of his functions as Lieutenant and Commander-in-Chief in Poland, and trusts that after the re-establishment of order he will resume his task. The Grand Duke Constantine is expected to arrive at Vienna on the 18th inst. on his way to Baden-Baden, where he will take up his residence for the winter.

POLAND.—The Dziennik, the Russian official journal of Warsaw, has published the speech of the Emperor Napoleon. By order of General Berg the ladies and young girls imprisoned in the citadel, with 60 of the chief inhabitants of Warsaw, have been transported without sentence. Their place of banishment was unknown. 300 other prisoners left the citadel on Wednesday, condemned to transportation. The women of the poorer class not having been able to conform to the regulations respecting apparel, had been arrested and beaten with rods. By order of Prince Wittgenstein, Corfini and Borkowski were hanged last week at Wloclawk. A body of troops from the garrison of Kalisch has since been despatched in haste to Wloclawk, to the relief of Prince Wittgenstein, who is surrounded by the insurgents. The National Government has published a proclamation encouraging the Poles to persevere, and confirming the order for ladies to discontinue wearing mourning. The Poles, under the command of Wilkowski, gained a great success over the Russians on the 30th ult. in the palatinate of Lublin. The rest of Czachowski's band was completely destroyed on the 6th inst. in the Government of Radom. Czachowski was captured, and has since died of his wounds at Radom. Preparations have been made all along the line of railway in Galicia, and also on the line to Brody, for the provisioning and billeting of troops.

CIRCASSIA.—Six Russian officers have been shot as spies by the Circassians.

TURKEY.—All the arrears of the army prior to March last have been settled by individual serghis, payable to the soldier at the expiration of his term of service. Since March all have been paid in cash. The new taxes are about to be applied to Constantinople, which city has hitherto been exempt.

INDIA.—A telegraph despatch from Bombay of Oct. 29th states that there has been a great storm on the western coast of India and in the Bay of Bengal. The ship Wings of the Wind has been totally wrecked at Cochin.

JAPAN.—Advices from Japan state that nothing important had occurred since the bombardment of Kagosima. Matters continue quiet at Yokohama and Nagasaki. Advices from the Swiss Embassy at Yokohama, announce that the Ambassadors have received a first official visit from one of the chief officers of the Tycoon. The Ambassadors believe that America and Russia are pursuing an ambiguous policy, and exciting the Japanese to resist the other Powers.

CHINA.—Despatches from Shanghai of Sept. 28 state that affairs are quiet, and that the Anglo-Chinese contingent is preparing to attack Chapoo.

NEW ZEALAND.—The accounts received at Melbourne from the seat of war in New Zealand to the 25th Sept. state that the position of the Maoris was less favourable.

UNITED STATES.—Accounts from Chattanooga of the 27th ult. state that a detachment of Federal troops crossed the Tennessee at Brown's Ferry, drove the Confederates from the ridge on the south side of the river and opened communication with Bridgeport; and that on the same day a larger force crossed the river and dislodged the Confederates from their position on Lookout Mountain. General Hooker subsequently moved his troops from Bridgeport to Brown's Ferry, where he was attacked by the Confederates at midnight on the 29th ult. Severe fighting ensued, lasting two hours, and with less vehemence until 4 o'clock. At 7 o'clock General Hooker reported that the troops had repulsed the Confederate attack, and driven them from every position they assumed. The Federals now occupy the south bank of the river from Bridgeport to Chattanooga, thereby rendering comparatively easy their means of obtaining supplies. Previous to these successes the troops had been on half rations, and the horses and other animals were dying of hunger, all supplies having to be carried on camels over the clay roads, which the rain had rendered impassable for other means of conveyance. 15,000 Confederate cavalry are in the neighbourhood of Decatur, Courtland, and Tuscumbia, south of the Tennessee river, prepared to operate on General Grant's line of communications. The bulk of General Lee's army is on the south side of the Rappahannock, of which he holds all the fords. General Lee maintains, however, a strong picket line on the north side, and is fortifying the approaches to the north bank of the river. On the 27th ult. his infantry drove Buford's cavalry from Bealton. General Meade subsequently moved his head-quarters from Warrenton. During this movement the Confederates drove in the pickets of Meade's sixth corps, and afterwards retired. General Meade has since obtained information concerning Lee's strength, which would enable him shortly to take active measures. All the troops in Washington are reinforcing Meade, their place being supplied by invalid troops. Reinforcements from General Lee are said to be marching down by way of Lynchburg and Bristol, Virginia, to co-operate with General Bragg in driving General Burnside out of East Tennessee, and turning the flank of General Thomas's army, so as to compel him to abandon Chattanooga. It is said that many of Lee's troops marched barefooted from Bristol to Culpepper. General Burnside's forces have retreated from London, Tennessee, to the heights commanding the town. Telegrams from Charleston of the 30th state that the Federals opened fire from Batteries Gregg and Wagner and two Monitors on the 26th, and bombarded Forts Sumter and Johnstone until dusk. The Confederates returned the fire vigorously, in which Fort Moultrie joined; 260 shots were thrown by the Federals; but no damage was done to the Confederate batteries. From sundown on the 28th to sundown on the 29th, 1200 shots from 15-inch mortars and 300lb. Parrott guns were thrown against Fort Sumter. On the evening of the 30th, the Federals opened upon the north-east angle of Fort Sumter from Forts Greig and Wagner and two other batteries on Cumming's Point. Three Monitors were also engaged. The Confederate casualties were seven wounded. The south-east face of Fort Sumter was much damaged by the bombardment. No more shells have been thrown into Charleston. The bombardment of the city is not expected. The Confederates are constructing more torpedoes. Letters from New Orleans state that General Banks and his staff returned to that city from the field of operations in Louisiana on the 13th. Another expedition has sailed from New Orleans to some point on the Texan coast. General Butler has superseded General Foster in the command of the department of Virginia and North Carolina. France has notified to the Federal Government that an effective blockade is established at all ports along the Mexican coast not occupied by the French, and which still acknowledge the authority of Juarez. President Lincoln has officially received Senor Romero as the representative of Juarez at Washington. In his speech, the President said that he now, as he ever had, sincerely desired that Mexico might always enjoy the blessings of foreign and domestic peace, with perfect security, prosperity, independence, and freedom. The Federal debt on the 1st of September is estimated at 1,228,000,000 dollars. The War Department has notified to the Governor of New York that 180,000 volunteers must be raised in New York State before January to avoid the draught. The New York supervisors have appropriated 2,000,000 dols. for volunteers. The Republicans have gained the elections in New York state. Their majority is estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000. In New York city the democrats have lost 10,000 votes since last year. The Republican Ticket has been elected in Massachusetts by a majority of 40,000. At a meeting in support of the Republican Ticket at the Cooper Institute, the Hon. Lewis Baker, of Maine, made a speech, in which he said that the people of Maine were determined that every wife should become a widow, and every child an orphan, before they would permit the Southern States to leave the Republic. He also said the people all knew how quick Great Britain had been to recognise the South as a belligerent Power; but he thanked God the proclamation of emancipation had caused that Power to hold back in her career of wrong, and to give aid only surreptitiously. They were keeping a ledger account of her latter services to the rebellion, and the day would come when they should ask her to settle. It is reported that great frauds have been discovered in the returns of the recent elections in Ohio. Highland county alone gave to Mr. Brough, the Republican candidate, 502 votes more than its whole population. The officers of the Russian fleet have returned from a public excursion to Niagara. Great popular demonstrations of welcome were exhibited along their route. In a speech delivered to the New Jersey municipality, Admiral Lisovski said he was sure that the Emperor of Russia sympathised with the North in the present unjust rebellion, and hoped, and believed, as he himself did, that the North would be successful. He should shortly take as many of his fleet as possible to Washington to winter there. Grand preparations are making for the Russian ball. At a democratic mass meeting held at New York the Poles were lustily cheered, and vigorous groans given for the Russians. President Davis reviewed the troops at Mobile on the 24th ult. He has made a speech at Alabama urging volunteers to occupy the outposts, thus enabling the soldiers to reinforce General Bragg. By this means he was confident Rosencrans would be crushed to the dust. His defeat would practically end the war. Self-reliance and energy were only the duty of the South, for no European aid could now be expected. The Richmond Examiner regards the seizure of the Confederate rams as the most unfriendly act yet committed by England toward the South. The Richmond Whig denounces it as an act of hostility, not neutrality. The Richmond Despatch thinks that the South has felt the full extent of President Lincoln's power, and that he can never do as much harm as he has previously done. "If," it says, "he has failed hitherto, he can never succeed with the assistance of England, which, under Earl Russell's auspices, seems to have come forth as the enemy of the South." There are reported to be 11,000 Federal prisoners in Richmond. The Southern papers assert that the Federal Government refuses to make any further exchange of prisoners.

MEXICO.—Advices from the city of Mexico, telegraphed from San Francisco, report that a conspiracy against the French Government had been discovered. A large number of persons implicated had been either shot, imprisoned, or sent to Martinique. General Bazaine was preparing, with a column of the expeditionary corps, to march on the 20th October to attack Juarez's army, which was concentrated between Queretaro and the San Juan river.

SAN DOMINGO.—Porto Plata was burnt by the Dominicans on the 4th of October. The town was entirely destroyed, excepting the warehouses of Messrs. Ginebra Brothers. All the merchants left were ruined. The fort was held by 1400 Spanish troops, under Brigadier Rivera, who was anxiously awaiting orders from the Spanish Government, and expecting reinforcements from Havannah and Porto Rico. The Spanish were unable to fetch water for the troops from Rio San Marco, in consequence of the losses experienced from attacks of the enemy. They, however, obtained water from Samana, but with difficulty. The sanitary state of the Spanish army was very unsatisfactory. It was stated that General Vargas was pushing his way to the capital of San Domingo, held by the insurgents. General Santana remained in the same position, unable to proceed, and waiting for troops and ammunition from the Government. The insurgents were gaining ground, and it was generally thought that the Spaniards would be compelled to abandon the country. Porto Rico and Havannah were left almost without troops, and it was feared the blacks would rise there also.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

BIRTHDAY OF THE PRINCE OF WALES.—The 22d birthday of the Prince of Wales was celebrated on Monday in the metropolis in the usual manner. The bells of many of the principal parish churches were rung, the Royal standard was displayed at the Tower, the Custom House, Somerset House, the Post Office, and other public buildings, and the vessels on the river exhibited flags of all nations. Salutes were also fired from the guns in the park. In the evening the general loyalty found vent in banquets and in illuminations, which almost assumed a general aspect.

LORD MAYOR'S DAY.—On Monday, being the 9th of November, Alderman Lawrence, the new Lord Mayor, went in state from Guildhall to Westminster, to be formally presented to the Barons of the Exchequer, in accordance with ancient custom. He was escorted by Alderman Rose, the retiring chief magistrate, the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, the members of the Court of Aldermen, and the principal officers of the Corporation, all in their civic robes. The day was remarkable for its brilliancy, and the pageant, as usual, attracted great numbers of people along its whole route. After being marshalled in front of Guildhall, the cavalcade started at 12 o'clock, a detachment of the 12th Lancers forming the military escort. The state carriage of the Lord Mayor, drawn by six horses, the gay equipages of the retiring chief magistrate and the two Sheriffs, with the men in armour, were the most conspicuous objects in the pageant. The band of the London Rifle Brigade, preceded by trumpeters, led the way, followed by watermen bearing the banners of the principal civic companies, and by the carriages of the Master, Wardens, and Court of Assistants of the Company of Carpenters, to which the Lord Mayor belongs. The rest of the cortège was chiefly made up of the bands of the Grenadier Guards, the 1st Life Guards mounted, the City Artillery Company, the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire, the 3d Tower Hamlets Volunteer Brigade, and the Irish Rifle Volunteers. The Lord Mayor was attended by his chaplain, and by the sword and mace bearers of the Corporation. The route of the pageant on leaving Guildhall was by way of Gresham Street, Coleman Street, London Wall, Moorgate Street, Princes Street, King William Street, Cannon Street, St. Paul's Churchyard, Fleet Street, and the Strand to Westminster. The bells of some of the city churches rang joyous peals at intervals during the day, and here and there in the principal streets through which the procession passed banners were displayed in honour of the occasion. Cannon Street in particular, a great part of which is situate in the Ward of Bread Street, (of which the Lord Mayor is the Alderman), was decorated in this way, and in other respects the inhabitants of the Ward—which has not before been represented by a Lord Mayor in the Court of Aldermen for more than half a century—manifested great joy. On arriving at Westminster Hall the Common Serjeant presented the Lord Mayor to the Barons of the Exchequer with the usual complimentary speech, and concluded by referring to the services of the late Lord Mayor at the reception and marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and said that he had now retired after all he had done and sacrificed in the public service not, indeed, as was universally expected, with the peculiar honours which it is the prerogative of the Crown alone to bestow, but with a reward greater than that of titles and dignities—with the approval of his conscience and the applause of his fellow-citizens. The Lord Chief Baron complimented the Lord Mayor on his election, and congratulated Alderman Rose on retiring with the good will and applause of his fellow-citizens. His lordship expressed his regret to hear for the first time the language of disappointment. He was, he said, certain that Her Majesty and those who advised her were fully sensible of all the merit that belongs to those who discharged functions of great responsibility in the city of London, and that they would desire to comply with any claims to consideration that might be made on the footing of ancient custom. He was fully aware at the same time that the administration of the affairs of a great country must to a certain extent be fettered by precedent. He believed that all his learned brethren around him would, as lawyers, feel themselves bound to respect a precedent, even if they did not follow it; but he was certain that whatever was liberal on the part of the Government, and whatever was wise in the dispensation of honours, would be justly adhered to with respect to the recent munificent demonstration of loyalty on the part of the City of London. Mr. Walton, the Queen's Remembrancer, then administered the customary oath to the Lord Mayor, who then returned in procession to the City. In the evening the usual banquet took place in Guildhall, and was attended by several members of the Cabinet. In returning thanks for the Navy, the Duke of Somerset took occasion to express the thanks of the Admiralty to those corporations and towns which had extended their hospitality and kind feeling towards the Channel squadron during its late visit to the ports and harbours of the country. Earl De Grey and Ripon, in responding for the Army and the Volunteers, said that more than three-fifths of our army in time of peace are employed on foreign service, and that at the present moment more than two out of every three regiments are employed out of this country, and in many cases in bad and unhealthy climates. The toast of her Majesty's Ministers was responded to by Lord Palmerston, who was received with loud and protracted cheering. In the course of his speech his lordship made the following remarks on foreign politics:—

"There have been occasions when it was the lot of those who had to explain the state of affairs to congratulate you on the tranquil condition of the civilised world. I am afraid I cannot do that in the present instance; for, although I trust there is nothing in our horizon which can grow into a cloud of war, yet we see on all sides—in the far West and in the distant East—struggles going on of the most lamentable character, and scenes enacted which make us shudder for humanity, and excite our deep compassion for the countries in which they are occurring. In the far West we see a nation of the same race, the same language, the same religion, the same manners and literature as ourselves, split into two, slaughtering each others by hundreds of thousands, and carrying on a contest the result of which it is impossible to foresee, and the end of which now, after more than two years' duration, he would be a bold man indeed who ventured to predict. Lamenting that state of things, the Government of this country have felt it their duty not to yield either to the entreaties or the objurgations of the one party or the other. Blandishments on the one side and threats on the other have equally been fruitless to affect our course. We have felt it our duty to abstain from taking any part in that deplorable conflict. If indeed we had thought it had been in our power to put an end to it by friendly intervention, no efforts would have been wanting to accomplish so holy an object. But we felt that our interference would have been vain, and we deemed it our duty—and in that I am sure we but followed the wishes of the country—to maintain a strict and impartial neutrality. In the East also scenes of a lamentable character are taking place. We there see on the one side a barbarous system of deliberate extermination carried out, and on the other side revenge venting itself in acts of murder and assassination. We endeavoured to enlist the feelings and opinions of civilised Europe in a joint remonstrance against that which we thought was unjust. Those remonstrances have failed. We have done our duty; and we can only hope that those who have the conduct of affairs in the Russian empire may at length cease to pursue that course which has drawn upon them the condemnation of Europe, and that peace may be restored upon terms of equity and justice in that unfortunate country. Well, though abroad things look ill, and much misery and calamity are sustained, this country forms a happy exception to that which seems to be the prevailing condition of nations. We have been blessed by Providence with an abundant harvest; we have been preserved by the conduct of the Government and the sense of the country from the misfortunes of war; our population are contented and loyal, and they feel that for a long course of years the Legislature has been occupied in remedying grievances, in removing defects from our laws, in sweeping away those obstructions which the less enlightened policy of former times had placed in the way of the productive industry of the nation. By all these means, I am happy to say, I believe that the commercial and material prosperity of the country has reached a point which it never attained at any former period. Those who know the course of the commerce of the world will tell you that year by year this great city of London is growing more and more to be the centre of all the commercial transactions of other States, that bills are drawn upon London to pay debts all over the world, that commodities destined for other countries are sent in deposit here—a tribute paid by the people of other nations to the industry, good management, integrity, and high honour of our own commercial community."

THE RECENT MAYORALTY.—A correspondence has recently taken place between Alderman Rose, the retiring Lord Mayor, and Lord Palmerston, on the circumstance that no mark of honour had been conferred by the Crown on the chief magistrate or the sheriffs in consideration of the conspicuous part which the corporation had taken on the occasion of the Royal marriage. For some time past great dissatisfaction has been felt among the members of the corporation, and by many of the citizens, at what appeared to be a slight upon the corporation, having regard to the munificent example of loyalty and devotion which they set on an occasion of great national rejoicing, at a cost of nearly 60,000*l*. The Prime Minister is understood to have replied in effect that neither on the coming of age nor the marriage of the Queen were any honours bestowed on the then Lord Mayor or sheriffs; that as a rule her Majesty only confers dignities when she visits the City in person on state occasions; that on an exception to this rule, namely, the opening of the Coal Exchange, when titles were conferred, the Queen was only prevented being present by a sudden indisposition, and that she was in effect represented at the ceremony by the attendance of the Prince Consort. Her Majesty also, in an exceptional way, bestowed honours on the Lord Mayor and sheriffs on the auspicious visit to the City of the Emperor and Empress of the French, but that was only on the ground of its great international interest at the time. Again, it is said that if titles were to be conferred on the visit to the City of any member of the Royal house besides the reigning Sovereign, the result would be to restrain that freedom of intercourse which was desirable between the younger members and the citizens. For those reasons Lord Palmerston, while bearing emphatic testimony to the gratification experienced by the Royal family by the magnificent reception given to the Prince and Princess of Wales, is said, with many expressions of regret, to have declined to advise her Majesty to confer any special mark of favour on the chief magistrate of London or the sheriffs.

ROYAL ACADEMY.—The authorities of the Royal Academy have made known that they cannot at present, for want of space, admit more female students than those already in the schools.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.—At the last Court of Common Council a deputation from Camberwell, Newington, Rotherhithe, Bermondsey, and all the parishes in Southwark, presented a memorial, praying that the Court would assist them in opposing the removal of St. Thomas's Hospital to the proposed site at Stangate. The representatives of the Council at the Metropolitan Board of Works also spoke against the adoption of this site, on the ground of the unhealthiness of the bank of a tidal river, and its distance from the centre of the population who have hitherto benefited by the hospital. The memorial was unanimously referred to the General Purposes Committee, with power to take what steps they see fit in the matter.

MURDER IN A CAB AND SUICIDE OF THE MURDERER.—On Saturday night a shocking crime was committed in a cab in the public streets. Between 8 and 9 o'clock a man called a cab at the Great Eastern Railway station and got into it with a woman and two girls, telling the driver to drive through the City to the Royal Oak. In Bishopsgate Street the man stopped the cab at a public-house, and told the driver to get him some ale. The driver complied, and the ale was drunk by the persons in the cab—the man draining out the last drops of the pot upon the pavement before he returned it to the publican. The driver then proceeded on his journey, but in Holborn he was again stopped, when the man got out of the cab, paid the driver 4*s*. for his fare, gave him 6*d*. extra for himself on the ground of his civility, and told him to take the lady carefully to her destination. On arriving at the Royal Oak and opening the door of the cab the driver was horrified to find the woman and the two children dead. He at once gave information to the police, and the bodies were taken to the infirmary, where the surgeon in attendance expressed a strong opinion that they had been poisoned by prussic acid. Further examination confirmed this impression, and at the opening of the inquest on Monday it was clearly established by the medical evidence that the victims had been poisoned with prussic acid, mixed either with the beer obtained at the public house, or with some cakes, the remains of which were found with their clothes in the cab. The cork of a small phial was lying on the floor of the cab, but there was no bottle. A box of ointment bearing the name of a chemist at Camberwell was also found in the cab, and at once suggested the idea that the parties had lived in that neighbourhood. The Government immediately offered a reward of 100*l*. for the apprehension of the murderer, and active measures were taken by the detective officers to trace him on the Surrey side of the river. Their inquiries led on Tuesday to his discovery; but he took poison as soon as he heard the police knock at his door, and died from its effects at the Camberwell Green Police station shortly after his apprehension. It appears that in consequence of a description published on Monday morning of the three murdered persons, as well as of the man who rode in the cab with them, the suspicions of a letter carrier named Prescott were aroused as to a person named Hunt, residing at Camberwell. He knew that Hunt's family led a most unhappy life, and that he had threatened to "do" for his wife and children. He had seen Hunt go in and out of his house on Sunday, but had seen nothing of his wife and children. On Monday evening, therefore, he went to the police-station near Camberwell Green and told the inspector on duty what he thought of the matter. Acting on this information Inspectors Meloy and Smith proceeded, about 20 minutes to 10 on Monday night, to the house indicated by Prescott, which is situated in Wellington Road, Coldharbour Lane, Camberwell. They knocked at the door. All was quiet, and no light was to be seen in the house. No answer being returned to their summons they knocked again and again, but without obtaining any reply. While thus engaged, Inspector Dann arrived at the spot, having received similar information from another source. The knocking was again repeated, when Inspector Meloy fancied he heard something moving in the house. They then commenced a vigorous kicking at the door, which after some delay was opened on the chain. A man in his shirt then asked the inspectors who they were and what they wanted, when Inspector Smith said they belonged to the police, and demanded admittance. The chain was then withdrawn, and they entered the house. The man then said, "Wait a minute, wait a minute; I'll get a light;" and made a rush towards the stairs. They prevented his reaching them, Inspector Smith replying, "Never mind, we've got a light." They then all went up into a bedroom on the first-floor, when the man commenced retching, a circumstance which aroused the suspicion of the inspectors, and induced Meloy to question him as to whether he had not taken poison, to which he replied, "No, I have not; my heart is affected." He then asked them what they wanted, and Inspector Smith asked him if his wife and family were at home. He said, "No, they are all in the country; they have gone to Southampton." When asked the date of their departure he replied that they went away on Friday night last. Inspector Meloy said, "Have you not made a mistake; was it not on Saturday night?" The man replied, "No; I am positive that it was on Friday night." At intervals during this conversation the man retched violently.

He was then asked as to his family, and he said he had two children, both girls, one eight and the other four years of age. Inspector Smith asked him to describe the children, which he did, and his description tallied exactly with that of the children found in the cab. He also stated the age of his wife to be 27. Inspector Dann said to him, "Have you read the account of the murder in the papers?" To which he replied, "I have read the account of the murder;" and immediately added rather sharply, "But you don't suppose it's my family, do you?" Inspector Meloy asked the man how his wife and family were dressed, to which he replied by asking how the deceased were dressed. On being told they were dressed in black, he said, "They cannot be mine, for mine were all lightly dressed," and added, "She has gone on a visit to her uncle, Mr. Campbell, who lives at 29, Harmwood Street, Southampton." Inspector Dann then requested him to go with them to the police-station to hear the description of the deceased woman and children read. He expressed his willingness to do so, and then asked Inspector Meloy if he would take charge of 40*l.* in Bank of England notes, a request which he declined to comply with. He then accompanied them to the station, and on the way said, "My wife and myself have lived very unhappily, and she was always very jealous, and oh! she led me a dreadful life, always accusing me wrongfully, and talking to that extent that I have frequently been obliged to leave my bed and walk the streets. The children have told me something which has aroused my suspicions of her. They went out one day, and when they returned they said they had met a gentleman who had taken them all in a cab, and that he was kind, like me, and looked like me, only that he had a moustache. I did not like this." When offering the bank-notes to the Inspector, he said, "I want you to take charge of these to give to my wife and children if they are alive." He afterwards said, "She used to drink, and her bottles were always about the house; what I drank this evening was part of what she left behind in a bottle." Inspector Meloy asked him if he knew what it was that he had drunk, and he replied, "I have no doubt that it was gin." During this conversation and on the way to the station the man continued to retch and vomit so violently that on arriving, Mr. Puckle, surgeon, of Coldharbour Lane, was immediately sent for. He at once said that the man had taken poison, and after much resistance, succeeded in forcing a strong emetic down his throat. Mr. Massey, of Camberwell Green, shortly after arrived, and Dr. Maule Sutton, a physician, late of the Queen's Hospital, Birmingham, who was passing, also rendered his assistance. Previous to the arrival of the medical men, the prisoner, being weak from excessive vomiting, sat down while the description of the deceased woman and children was read over to him, on hearing which he exclaimed several times, "That is them," as the inspector proceeded in reading the account. He was then asked if his wife had a sore foot, and he said "Yes." Meloy then asked "Does she use ointment?" to which he replied "Yes, I have applied it to the sore myself." The vomiting continuing to increase, he said he thought he was dying, and asked to be allowed to lie down. This was complied with, and the medical gentlemen then questioned him as to what he had taken. He replied, "I think it was something in the glass which was not spirits." He afterwards continued, "I know what my wife died of now; it's prussic acid, and it was in the house. I might have taken aconite—I think I did." After this he continued retching for the space of nearly an hour, when he again referred to his wife, and said that her uncle had given them 50*l.*, which enabled him to live without drawing his salary, and he had not touched it for the last 18 months. Just previous to his death he seemed to sleep, and suddenly awoke, when he said, "I have had the most beautiful dreams. I want to write. I am dying, and before I die I want to write." Writing materials having been supplied, he was just able to write as follows, but he could not sign the note:—"Mr. John McCulloch,—Pay to my wife the money due to me, viz., 120*l.*, due the 17th of September last, and the remainder due to me." He then said, "My employer owes me 18 months' salary. We have had a good many rows about that, and I wish to leave it to my children if they are alive." Shortly after this he died. The body was removed about half-past 12 to the house of deceased, when it was ascertained that his name was Hunt, and that for some time past he had held the situation of traveller to Messrs. Butler & McCulloch, seedsmen, herbalists, and druggists, Covent Garden. The body was then again examined by Dr. Sutton as to the cause of death, but he could find no signs of prussic acid. The expression of the countenance was calm, although he had died from exhaustion brought on from excessive retching, and struggled violently just before his death. On searching the body they found his linen marked "S. H. Hunt." He was well dressed in a suit of mourning. The body was taken to the house in Wellington Road, to await the coroner's inquest. After his death he was identified by the cabman Parker as the man whom he had driven from the Great Eastern Railway to Furnival's Inn. Another cabman, named Peirce, also identified him as the man whom he had driven from Camberwell to Shoreditch station. It seems that on Saturday evening about 7 o'clock the second cabman was on his stand at Camberwell Green when he was hailed by a woman in black and two little girls. She told him to drive to Shoreditch station, and to take the check-string in his hand, as she would have to stop him on the road. When they had proceeded about 200 or 300 yards down Camberwell Road a man, who afterwards turned out to be the deceased, hailed him, but the cabman said he was engaged. The man, however, said he had friends in the cab whom he wanted to join. In his capacity of traveller for Messrs. Butler & McCulloch, Hunt seems to have obtained a knowledge of herbs and chemistry; and he had a few drugs and chemicals in his house. The neighbours say that he and his wife, who was the daughter of a cab-driver named Blake, were constantly quarrelling, and that at times they appeared to be very wretched. Her sister states that about a month ago Hunt made an unsuccessful attempt to poison his wife, and latterly used to beat her severely, and the sister ascribes the wound on the unfortunate woman's foot to a blow from a poker, given to her by Hunt. He had been heard on more than one occasion to say he would "do for his wife and children one of these days," and some persons who sympathised with them remonstrated with Hunt on their account. The house, though small, was somewhat poorly furnished, bearing every mark of a household going to ruin. On being searched by the police, a small bottle of tincture of aconite, one of the most deadly poisons known, was found. It was also ascertained that when roused by the police, Hunt was in bed reading "Tom Brown at Oxford," and that he must have swallowed the aconite as soon as he heard the knocking at the door, for the bottle, containing a couple of drops of the poison, was found in a cupboard in his bed-room. It was at first considered curious that though Parker, the cabman, stated to the police and at the inquest that the man he drove from Shoreditch station had a moustache, several people in the neighbourhood agreed in stating that for the last two years Hunt had gone with his upper lip shaven; but it has now been ascertained that he bought the false moustache at a hairdresser's in the Strand, on Thursday week, no doubt in order to disguise himself. At one time he kept a bookseller's and stationer's shop at the corner of Warner Road, Camberwell New Road, but did not succeed in business. It is also said that he was formerly in business as a chemist and druggist on his own account. He had been in the employment of Messrs. Butler and McCulloch for about three years. His usual business was to make a round of calls early in the day and arrive in Covent Garden in the afternoon, when he attended to customers in the shop, or did whatever was required there. On Friday last he asked for leave of absence for Saturday, "as he was going into the country to Margate." On Monday afternoon he appeared at the shop at his usual time, and without exhibiting any change in his appearance or manner. In the course of the afternoon Mr. Youngman, Mr. McCulloch's foreman, asked him if he had read the particulars of the horrible affair in a cab. To this he made no reply, and he conducted himself in a surly way towards persons who came into the shop during the rest of the afternoon; but in the evening he sat with Mr. McCulloch in the counting-house, and appeared to be in high spirits. He was laughing and joking more freely than he usually did when in a similar frame of mind. He parted with Mr. McCulloch on Monday evening as late as 7 o'clock, not the slightest suspicion being entertained by any one in whose company he had been that he was the murderer. He had lately told Mr. McCulloch in a confidential sort of way several times that his wife was a great trouble to him, but he seemed very fond of his children. Messrs. Butler and McCulloch have given an unqualified denial to the statement contained in the letter written by Hunt before his death, and to the assertions made by him concerning them. The story he told to the police about Mrs. Hunt having an uncle at Southampton named Campbell, who had given her 50*l.* was also a pure fabrication from beginning to end, the unfortunate woman's friends being all poor hardworking people, living in London. It appears also that the wife and children were deceived by the pretended journey, the idea of which seems to have been suddenly conceived and carried out. A cheesemonger in the neighbourhood states that on Saturday afternoon the eldest girl called at his shop for a small quantity of butter, saying they did not require more, as they were all going into the country. The poor child seemed delighted at the prospect of the trip, and bade good-bye to a little acquaintance who happened to be in the shop at the time. The post-mortem examination of the body was made on Thursday, when the appearances presented by the different organs indicated poisoning by aconite. The inquest was opened yesterday, when the jury by a majority of 13 to 2 returned a verdict of Felo de se. The Coroner then issued his warrant for the interment of the body between the hours of 9 and 12 o'clock last night in the Tooting Cemetery, without funeral rites.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended on Saturday, November 7, were 1270. The average number of deaths in the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1270. The present return is therefore exactly the same as the average result obtained by calculation. During the week the births of 1011 boys and 952 girls, in all 1963 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1879.

ALDERSHOT.—At an early hour on Friday morning one of the stables of the Military Train was discovered to be on fire. The sentinels round the building, as well as the guard near the spot, rushed in to save the horses, but the heat was so intense, and the flames made such rapid progress in a building constructed of timber and straw, that out of 88 valuable horses only 12 were rescued, 76 being consumed in their stalls. There was also much destruction of saddles and harness, and the total loss of property is estimated at between 4000*l.* and 5000*l.* From the direction the wind was blowing several adjoining stables escaped the destruction which would otherwise have been inevitable. The fire is supposed to have been caused by a stable-lamp igniting the thatch of the building.

AYLSHAM.—A few days ago Dr. Ager, the head of the collegiate school in this town, was apprehended on a charge of having set fire to his house and school. The magistrates, after hearing the evidence at great length, decided that there was no foundation for the charge. Dr. Ager was immediately set at liberty.

MANCHESTER.—At the meeting of the Central Committee on Monday, Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported that on the 31st ult. there was a decrease of 1552 in the number of persons receiving relief in 27 unions in the cotton districts, as compared with the previous week, making a total decrease of 144,026 since the 6th of December. Mr. Commissioner Rawlinson stated that about 40 places in the district had either adopted the Local Government Act, 1858, or the Public Works Act, 1863, since Christmas, and that many other places were taking the preliminary steps towards the adoption of the Acts, so that before long, with few exceptions, the whole of the district affected by the distress would come voluntarily under their operations. The financial report stated that 668*l.* had been received during the week, and that the balance in hand was 260,875*l.*

PLYMOUTH.—The West India Mail Company's steamship Solent, which left Southampton on Tuesday with 70 passengers for Madeira and the West Indies, incurred such heavy weather in the Channel during the night that, being heavily laden, she could not make more than four knots an hour, and therefore put into the Sound on Wednesday afternoon, but will proceed when the weather moderates. A heavy storm from the westward prevailed in the harbour all Wednesday.

ROCHDALE.—The following letter from Mr. Cobden, on the conduct of the British authorities in Japan, has been received by Mr. Ashworth, mayor of this borough:—

"Midhurst, November 4, 1863.—My dear Sir,—Circumstances will prevent me from paying my accustomed visit to Rochdale previous to the 9th inst., and I fear I shall therefore not have the satisfaction of attending a public meeting under your presidency as mayor. I regret this both on personal and public grounds. I should have taken the opportunity of calling the attention of my constituents to the last news from the East. I have been reading carefully the official correspondence, just published, respecting our recent proceedings in Japan. It is a horrible narrative, which I find difficult to treat with calmness. It appears that a despatch was sent by Earl Russell, instructing the British representatives in that country to demand redress from Prince Satsuma, one of its feudal chiefs or daimios, for the murder of Mr. Richardson, and, in default of which, discretion was given to our naval commander, either to 'seize or detain' the prince's steam vessels, or shell his residence, or blockade his port. Thereupon, according to his own despatch, the British admiral proceeded forthwith to burn the prince's steamers, and set fire to the town of Kagosima, when, to quote his language, 'the conflagration thus created continued with unabated ardour up to the time of the departure of the squadron, 48 hours subsequently to the first attack,' which, he proceeds to say, 'affords reasonable ground for believing that the entire town of Kagosima is now a mass of ruins;' and he expresses his 'trust that her Majesty's Government will be pleased to approve' his deeds. It is stated, I know not how truly, that Kagosima is a city of more than 150,000 inhabitants. In an interesting account of Japan, which appeared in the 'Revue des Deux Mondes' of the 15th October, from the pen of M. Adolphe Lindau, a recent traveller in that country, this place is described as 'L'un des plus considérables entrepôts du commerce de l'île de Kiou-siou.' Now, let me ask you to consider for a moment what is really implied by the destruction, with incendiary shells without previous warning, of a city of even 100,000 inhabitants. There are always in such towns hundreds of infants at their mother's breasts, thousands of children under five years of age, hospitals with their sick, and numbers of aged and infirm, tottering on the brink of the grave; there too must be women over whom the pangs of maternity are impending, and there will be found homes filled with mourning for the dead which are awaiting the rites of sepulture. Such is the normal condition of every large city, whether in Asia or Europe. Now picture this great commercial entrepôt, with all its contents, reduced in 48 hours to a heap of ashes; try to realise in imagination the fate of its population; and then ask yourself what great crime they had committed to bring on themselves this havoc and destruction. To our shame and confusion the answer must be that this is the way in which Englishmen under the command of Admiral Kuper and Colonel Neale, administer justice for the murder of an individual 100 miles away—of which crime the inhabitants of Kagosima were as guiltless of all knowledge and complicity as your own neighbours in Rochdale. It is precisely as though an enemy should lay Bristol in ashes because an individual had been murdered on the highway between London and Brentford. And the chief actors in this outrage on humanity, instead of expressing one word of regret or emotion, coolly lay claim to the approbation of their Government. There has been much criticism in this country on the manner in which the civil war has been conducted by the Americans. We have been prompt to condemn a people, over whom we have no control, for acts for which we are in nowise responsible. I remember the indignation with which the Prime Minister denounced General Butler's proclamation in which he threatened to consign to the calaboose those women who should insult his soldiers in the streets of New Orleans. Will he and his colleagues now make themselves and the country accomplices after the fact in these atrocities of their own agents, who, in contemptuous disregard of the instructions of their Government, have brought this heavy disgrace upon the country? I trust not. But, at all events, let us not forget that our moral power in the world is at stake; that if, as a people, we condone such crimes as these, when perpetrated in our name by those for whom, under heaven, we are alone responsible, we shall only invite the scorn of mankind by assuming to sit in judgment, as moral censors, upon the delinquencies of other nations.—Believe me, &c., R. COBDEN."

THE NEW ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN.—The appointment of Dr. Trench, Dean of Westminster, to the Archbishopric of Dublin, with the Chancellorship of the Order of St. Patrick, is commented on with satisfaction by most of the Dublin papers. Although an Englishman by education and settlement, Dr. Trench is an Irishman by birth and extraction, and his appointment has met with general favour in Ireland.

THE PRINCE CONSORT IRON-CLAD.—The anchor and chain lost by the Prince Consort when she entered the Man-of-War Roads at Kingston were discovered on Friday by the pinnace of the Ajax. The "dragging" for them had been going on for the whole week, and as soon as their position was ascertained a diver was sent down to attach a hawser to them. The chain and anchor are valued at about 800*l*.

THE GALWAY ROUTE.—The Atlantic Royal mail steamer Anglia, from Liverpool to Boston, went on the Black Rock in Galway Bay at 5 A.M. on Tuesday. She was, however, got off at high water; but was too much damaged to proceed on her voyage. Her Liverpool passengers have since been landed, and the mails sent back to Dublin.

THE FEDERAL CRUISER KEARSAGE.—Admiral Jones, the commander-in-chief at Cork, having been informed that this vessel was shipping men for the Federal navy, ostensibly as stokers, peremptorily ordered her last week to leave the harbour within 24 hours. She left accordingly on Friday evening. It is said that there was no truth in the statement that the commander refused to leave the harbour. On the contrary, she sailed in dirty weather, a proof that he felt compelled to obey the Admiral's injunction. It is said that the Kearsage has been watching blockade runners at Cork.

THE FREE KIRK ON "GOOD WORDS."—At a meeting of the Free Presbytery of Strathbogie, held at Huntly on Tuesday week, the Rev. Mr. M'Gilvray, of Keith, moved the transmission of an overture to the General Assembly as follows:—"Whereas, it is matter of notoriety that a periodical entitled 'Good Words' is extensively circulated, and whereas there is reason to believe that the circulation of this periodical is calculated to do injury, it is humbly overtured by the Presbytery of Strathbogie to the ensuing General Assembly to take the subject into consideration, and deal with it as they in their wisdom shall deem fit." Mr. M'Gilvray supported this overture in a speech of great length, objecting in toto to a great number of articles and poetical pieces, among others to "Rhoda and the Whistle," a poem inscribed to Lord Ardmillan. He detailed the plot of this poem, and contended that it was calculated to accomplish no good, but to be productive of much evil. He next referred to another poem, entitled "Soul Gardening," by Dora Greenwell, with "an engraving," he said, "representing a female lying prostrate on the ground upon the cross—an engraving which would be the right one in the right place had it appeared in the pages of a Popish monthly, but surely out of place in a periodical conducted by professing Christians." An article on "Sisterhoods," by J. M. Ludlow, was also condemned, as well as an article by the Rev. Charles Kingsley, on "The Monks and the Heathen;" but the severest castigation was reserved for "Plain Thoughts on the Christian Sabbath," by the Rev. A. W. Thorold, M.A. Mr. M'Gilvray thought that if the editor of "Good Words" could not prevent the admission of such articles into his magazine he ought to retire from the editorship. Mr. Moffat, of Cairnie, condemned the negative theology taught in the magazine (with which he believed Dr. M'Leod to be peculiarly chargeable), as well as the leanings towards Popery manifested in its religious articles, with the exception of those by Dr. Guthrie and others. Several other members concurred in condemning the magazine as dangerous in its teaching and loose in its religious opinions; and the Presbytery, by a majority of 6 to 4, resolved to transmit the overture, one minister declining to vote.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—Fryer v. Kinnersley.—This was an action tried before Mr. Justice Keating at Westminster, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff—damages 10*l*. Mr. Serjeant Shee now moved for a rule to set aside the verdict, or for a nonsuit, pursuant to leave reserved. The action was brought by the plaintiff, who had been in defendant's service as gardener, to recover damages for a libel. Defendant had taken the plaintiff into his service on the recommendation of Mr. Eyles, the Secretary of the Horticultural Society. The plaintiff did not suit, and was under notice to leave defendant's service, and while this notice was pending defendant wrote to Mr. Eyles a letter describing the plaintiff's conduct as having been violent and outrageous. That letter was not accurately set forth in the declaration, and as set forth it imputed to the plaintiff an intention to do the defendant some serious injury. The learned counsel contended the letter was privileged, the defendant being a fellow of the Society, and the secretary having been applied to for the plaintiff's character.—Rule nisi granted.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.—The Alexandra.—The Solicitor-General on Tuesday proposed to the Court that the case of the Alexandra should be taken on Tuesday next, and continued from day to day till it is finished. The Chief Baron took the opportunity to repeat that he repudiated the exposition of the law put into his mouth by the bill of exceptions from the first day he heard it. The Solicitor-General, who was not in the first case, replied that the difficulty would be avoided by having an altogether new trial. The Court granted the application.

Obituary.

THE COUNTESS OF LEVEN AND MELVILLE died on the 6th inst., at Melville House, Fifeshire. She was the daughter of Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., of Succoth, and married, in 1824, the 10th Earl of Leven and Melville, by whom, who died last year, she leaves a family of four daughters. Her eldest and last surviving son, Viscount Balgonie, died in 1857, from illness occasioned by his service in the Grenadier Guards in the Crimea.

LORD CHESHAM died on Tuesday night at the family residence in Grosvenor Square, after an illness of a few weeks. He came to town in order to have the best medical advice about a month ago, and was thought to be going on favourably until a few days before his death. His lordship, Charles Compton Cavendish, was the youngest son of the third Earl of Burlington, second son of the fourth Duke of Devonshire, by Lady Elizabeth Compton, daughter of the seventh Earl of Northampton. He was born in 1793, and was consequently in his 71st year. He married, in 1814, Lady Catherine Susan Gordon, eldest daughter of the ninth Marquis of Huntly, by whom he leaves issue the Hon. William George Cavendish, M.P. for Buckinghamshire, born in 1815, and married to the daughter of the Right Hon. W. Sebright Lascelles and Lady Caroline Lascelles; Susan, married to Lord Dacre; and Harriet, married to the Earl of Strafford. The deceased peer was for many years a member of the House of Commons, having sat in that assembly from 1820 till his elevation to the House of Lords in 1858. He represented Newtown, Hants, in 1820 and 1826; was returned for Yarmouth in 1831, and in 1832 was elected for East Sussex, which he represented up to 1847, when he was returned for Bucks, and continued one of its representatives, in conjunction with Mr. Du Pre and Mr. Disraeli, until he was created a peer.

REAR ADMIRAL PULLING died at Plymouth on the 2d inst., in his 76th year. He entered the navy in 1803, and was present in Sir Robert Calder's action; and in the expedition to Walcheren, while serving in the Atalanta, 18, in 1811, on the North American station, he was engaged in frequent skirmishes with gun boats and armed parties on shore; assisted in the attack on Craney Island, in 1813; and was wrecked in the same year on the Sisters Rocks, off Halifax. He was afterwards, for many years, Lieutenant in the coast-guard service, in Hampshire. From 1826, until promoted to the rank of commander, in 1829, he commanded the Skipjack schooner, on the Jamaica station, and was actively employed in the suppression of piracy and the slave trade in the West Indies. He obtained post rank in 1845, after having been employed 11 years as inspecting commander in the coast-guard, and became a retired rear admiral in 1863.

COLONEL CHARLES HENRY SOMERSET, C.B., died a few days since in Clifton Gardens, Maida Hill, in his 46th year. He was the eldest son of the late Lieut.-General Sir Henry Somerset, K.C.B., K.H., commander in chief of Bombay. He served as aide-de-camp to Sir Benjamin D'Urban during the Kaffir war in 1835. In 1841 he accompanied Major Smith's expedition to Natal, and served in the Kaffir war of 1846 and 1847 as aide-de-camp to his father, and afterwards to General Sir George Berkeley during the successful operations in 1847, for which he received a medal. He became major in 1850, and in the same year commanded the storming party of Cape Mounted Riflemen, at the capture of Fort Armstrong, and in the action at Berea, his name being frequently mentioned in despatches and general orders. He became colonel in 1854, and was afterwards for many years lieutenant-colonel of the 72d Highlanders.

THE REV. MR. M'CAUL, D.D., Rector of St. Magnus the Martyr, died yesterday afternoon, at an advanced age. Dr. M'Caul was an eminent Hebrew scholar, Professor of Divinity in King's College, and author of numerous theological publications directed especially against recent forms of doubt.

BIRTHS.—On the 8th inst, at 32, Curzon Street, Mayfair, the Countess VANE, of a daughter—8th inst, at 14, Belgrave Square, the Hon. Mrs. J. VIVIAN, of a daughter—8th inst, at 32, Bruton Street, Berkeley Square, the Hon. Mrs. CHARLES LENNOX PEEL, of a son—1st ult, at Icicle Lodge, Colpetty, Colombo, Lady CREASY, of a son.

MARRIAGES.—On Saturday, the 7th inst, at Christ Church, Marylebone, MICHAEL F. K. SEYMOUR, Esq., only son of Vice-Admiral Sir Michael Seymour, G.C.B., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, to ELIZABETH GEORGINA FREDERICA, only daughter of Captain W. H. KENNEDY, R.N., and granddaughter of the late Admiral the Hon. ## Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Nov. 14.

All kinds of produce in season are abundant. Supplies of Pine Apples especially are very heavy; prices are therefore in consequence somewhat lower than those of last week. Imported Grapes are realising from 8d. to 1s. per lb. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Chaumontel, Glou Morceau, Monsieur le Curé, and Beurré Diel Pears. Some good samples of Ribston Pippin and Cox's Orange Pippin Apples may now be obtained. Kent Cobs are good and plentiful. New St. Michael Oranges realise from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Calceolarias, Mignonette, and Roses.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Nov. 9.

The supply of Beasts is considerably larger than on Monday last. The weather being favourable the demand is good, and prices are about the same as on that day. Sheep are also rather more plentiful. Trade is not quite so brisk, but on the average prices are pretty well maintained. The trade for Calves remains unaltered. From Germany and Holland there are 1650 Beasts, 6890 Sheep, and 245 Calves; from Ireland 1400 Beasts; and 3200 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Nov. 12.

The supply of Beasts is about the same as on Thursday last. Trade is brisk for choice descriptions, and Monday's quotations are fully maintained for all qualities. The number of Sheep fresh up from our own grazing districts is very small indeed, the much larger proportion being foreign. Best qualities are readily disposed of at late rates. Calves are selling as on Monday. Our foreign supply consists of 540 Beasts, 2980 Sheep, and 260 Calves from Germany and Holland; and 100 Beasts from Spain. Milch Cows, 85.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Nov. 9.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and met with a quick sale at the extreme rates of last week. Foreign was taken in retail only, but our late quotations were fully supported. Fine Malting Barley was a free sale at previous rates, secondary sorts were neglected, and grinding was 1s. per qr. cheaper. With a short supply of Oats the trade was firm, and fine corn rather dearer. Flour was steady, with a fair demand for good American.

FRIDAY, Nov. 13.

Since the 6th instant the weather has continued to be very wet, with heavy gales of wind and white frosts at night, yesterday and to-day fine. Complaints are becoming very general that the Wheat sowing is much interrupted, but the season is not yet late. The Wheat trade for the past week has been inactive throughout the kingdom, but as the supplies were limited and stocks are moderate, extreme prices have been realised for both English and foreign. No alteration of moment has occurred in the value of any description of Spring Corn. Good sweet American Flour is in request, but difficult to be met with. Since Friday last 30 vessels have been reported off the coast. Only very few vessels having arrived off the coast, the floating trade has remained inactive; for Wheat 1s. per qr. higher prices have been obtained. Maize is 3d. per qr. dearer, but Barley has declined 6d. to 1s. per qr. In Paris (Nov. 12), Flour has advanced 1s. per 280 lbs. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 3d. per 280 lbs. The present stock is estimated at 9,880 cwt. For Wheat higher prices are asked, but the business is very limited. The arrivals of English grain, foreign Wheat, Oats, and Flour are moderate, of Barley large. To-day's market was very badly attended. English Wheat was in request at the extreme prices of Monday last. Foreign was held very firmly, and in some instances at an advance which caused the sale to be limited. Barley, Beans, and Peas are steady at Monday's quotations. The Oat trade is firm, and in some instances rather more money is obtained.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 10.—Our market has not been numerously attended to-day, and Wheat has had only a moderate consumptive sale at Friday's quotations. Flour meets a fair inquiry, and prices must be noted the turn against buyer. Indian Corn is difficult to move, and sales of quantity are not practicable under a decline of 3d. per qr. Oats and Oatmeal slow at previous rates. Beans being offered more freely have lost the improvement made on Friday last. Peas and Barley remain without alteration. The market closes steady, but quiet.

FRIDAY, Nov. 13.—Market moderately attended. Wheat: strong feeling, and prices fully as dear. Flour: rather more offering, but holders do not give way. Indian Corn; slow sale; mixed, 28s. 3d. to 28s. 6d. Egyptian Beans: Saidi, 30s. on spot and 30s. to arrive. Oats and Oatmeal quiet.

News of the Week.

THE KING OF DENMARK died on Sunday afternoon from an attack of erysipelas, after an illness of three days. As HIS MAJESTY has died without issue, the direct male line of FREDERICK III. has become extinct, and the succession has devolved on a collateral branch represented by Prince CHRISTIAN of GLUCKSBURG, the father of the Princess of WALES and the KING OF GREECE. This Glucksburg branch is junior to that represented by the Duke of AUGUSTENBURG, but as the latter took part in the insurrection of 1848, his estates, instead of being confiscated, were purchased by the late KING, on receiving from the Duke, in his own name and in that of his family, a renunciation of his rights, and a distinct pledge that he would in no way contest the settlement of the succession which the KING was about to propose to the European Powers. In accordance with these arrangements a treaty was signed in London in May, 1852, between France, England, Austria, Prussia, Russia, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, by which the succession to the Crown of Denmark and the Duchy of Holstein was unconditionally settled on Prince CHRISTIAN of GLUCKSBURG, and on the issue of his marriage with the Princess LOUISA, daughter of the Landgravine of HESSE, who represented in her own person the female line of the Royal house of Denmark. This Treaty was confirmed by the Danish Law of Succession in the following year, and, on the invitation of the Great Powers, was accepted by Hanover, Saxony, Wurtemburg, Electoral Hesse, and Oldenburg. The only States which declined the invitation to accede to the Treaty were Bavaria, Baden, Saxe-Weimar, Hesse-Darmstadt, and Mecklenburg. The adherence of the smaller German States was not thought necessary or desired. For the last 10 years therefore Prince CHRISTIAN has been regarded as the heir apparent to the Danish throne, and was accordingly proclaimed King on Monday last at Copenhagen amid the acclamations of the people. His first act on ascending the throne was to sanction the common Constitution for Denmark and Schleswig, which had passed the Rigsraad a few days before the death of the late KING, but had not been confirmed by him. Meanwhile the Hereditary Prince FREDERICK of AUGUSTENBURG, in spite of his father's renunciation, has proclaimed himself Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, and has proceeded to Berlin to obtain a recognition of his claim from the Prussian Government. The Grand Duke of SAXE-COBURG GOTHA, the Duke of SAXE-WEIMAR, and the Duke of SAXE-MEININGEN have already pronounced in his favour, on the ground that the Treaty of 1852 was never assented to by the German Diet or by the States of Holstein, and that Denmark has not fulfilled her obligations to the Duchies. The avowed object of Germany is to dismember Denmark by detaching both Schleswig and Holstein from her, and erecting them into a German Principality. If Prussia and Austria, in spite of the Treaty to which they were parties, should give their sanction to this movement, a war between Germany and Denmark will be inevitable.

A despatch from Vienna announces that Austria and Prussia, following the example of England, have given a conditional assent to the proposed Congress of Paris.

The Treaty for the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece was signed in London on Saturday by Austria, England, France, Prussia, and Russia, and the necessary formalities of transfer only remain to be carried out. The Treaty stipulates that the fortifications of Corfu shall be dismantled, and that no military force beyond that required for purposes of police shall be stationed in the islands.

The report of the Royal ordinance on the press was read in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on Wednesday. Two of the leading members of the Liberal party immediately moved that the Chamber should refuse its sanction to the ordinance as contrary to the constitution, and unnecessary for the public safety. On Thursday this motion was carried by a large majority. In the Upper House the address in answer to the King's Speech was carried by 72 to 8.

Accounts from New York inform us that General Meade has again crossed the Rappahannock with his whole army, and that General Lee's force is said to be diminished to 30,000 men. The latest telegram from Chattanooga states that the Confederates still occupied Lookout Mountains on the 3d inst., and were shelling Hooker's forces from that position. The reported capture of Fort Sumter is not confirmed, and the bombardment still continued on the 5th inst. The Democrats have carried the election in New Jersey.

By the telegraph from Suez we have accounts from Shanghai to the 7th October. Major Gordon was then before Soochow, and an attack on that city was imminent. The news from Japan was unfavourable. Armed men were appearing at Nagasaki, and Prince Satsuma and other princes were preparing for war.

Home News.

The Court.—The Queen and Royal family continue at Windsor Castle. On Friday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Crown Princess, walked and drove in the grounds. The Prince and Princess of Wales at Sandringham.—On Friday the Prince and Princess walked in the grounds. On Saturday their Royal Highnesses drove to Westacre, where the Prince joined the West Norfolk hounds for a day's hunting, the Princess, who drove a pair of greys, following to Narford Hall. Their Royal Highnesses returned to Sandringham in the evening. On Sunday the Prince and Princess drove to Castle Rising, and attended Divine service at the parish church. The Rev. C. W. Bagot, rector of the parish, officiated and preached the sermon. On Monday the Prince went out shooting with Lord Alfred Hervey over the Rising Estate. On Tuesday his Royal Highness honoured Mr. Villebois, of Marham House, with a visit, driving over in the morning and spending the day shooting. On Wednesday the Prince went out shooting in the Wolferton wood. In the afternoon the Princess drove out. The flags on the estate have been hoisted half-mast high during the week, in consequence of the death of the King of Denmark.

The Crown Prince of Prussia landed at Dover on Monday afternoon, and travelled by the Mail train of the South Eastern Railway to London. The Crown Princess met his Royal Highness at London Bridge Station, and accompanied him to Windsor.

Prince Alfred, accompanied by Prince William of Hesse, left Holyrood Palace on Saturday morning for Dalkeith House, on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. On Sunday their Royal Highnesses attended Divine Service in the west parish church of Dalkeith in the forenoon and at St. Mary's Episcopal Church in the afternoon. On Monday they returned to Edinburgh. On Tuesday, their Royal Highnesses having been duly introduced by the Lord Justice-General, took their seats as members of the Speculative Society of Edinburgh.

The Cabinet.—A Cabinet Council was held on Monday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Thursday. Another is summoned for Monday.

Parliamentary Movements.—The election for Andover terminated on Wednesday in the return of Mr. Humphrey, the Conservative candidate, by a majority of [illegible] over Mr. Hawkshaw, the numbers being [illegible] to 83. Mr. Robert Bateson Harvey, of Langley Park, brother-in-law to the Duke of Buckingham, is the Conservative candidate for Buckinghamshire, vacant by the accession of the Hon. W. G. Cavendish to the peerage.

Order of the Star of India.—The Queen has nominated and appointed His Highness Sreemund Rajahye, Hindostan Raj-Rajender Sree Maharajah Dheerej Sewaee Ram Sing, Maharaja of Jeypore, and his Highness Furzund Dilband Russikh [illegible] Dowlut-i-Englishia Rajah [illegible] Sing, Bahadoor of Pattiala, to be Knights of the Star of India.

The Army.—The Regiment of which General Bell is appointed Colonel in the room of Sir Patrick Grant, is not the 10th as stated last week, but the 104th.

The Court-Martial on Lieut.-Colonel Crawley.—The General Court-Martial for the trial of Lieut.-Colonel Crawley, of the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, met on Tuesday at the Club House, Aldershott. Lieut.-General Sir G. A. Wetherall, K.C.B., presided, and the other members of the Court were,—Major-General Lawrenson, Major-General Russell, Major-General Rumley, Major-General Hodge; Colonel [illegible], Royal Artillery; Colonel Wardlaw, 1st Dragoons; Colonel the Hon. G. T. [illegible], Royal Horse Artillery; Colonel [illegible], 12th Lancers; Lieut.-Colonel Sawyer, 6th Dragoon Guards; Lieut.-Col. Ladder, 40th Regiment; Lieut.-Colonel Sargent, 3d Regiment; Lieut.-Colonel Jenyns, 13th Hussars; Lieut.-Colonel Jones, 73d Regiment; and Lieut.-Colonel Gray, 97th Regiment. Sir A. Horsford, K.C.B., acted as the official prosecutor. Col. Crawley was assisted by Mr. Vernon Harcourt and Mr. Walker, of the Chancery Bar, and Mr. Godson, solicitor. The proceedings having been thus opened in form, the official correspondence and warrant authorising the holding of the court-martial were first read, after which Colonel Crawley was asked whether he had any objection to be tried by the President, or any of the members of the Court. The reply being in the negative, the President, members of the court-martial, and officiating Judge-Advocate were all duly sworn, and Colonel Crawley was arraigned upon the following charges:—

"1. For conduct unbecoming an officer, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Mhow during the month of May, 1862, when the Regimental Sergeant-Major Lilley was confined in close arrest, caused the orders under which he was so confined to be carried into effect with unnecessary and undue severity, whereby the said Regimental Sergeant-Major Lilley and his wife were subjected to great and grievous hardships and sufferings. 2. For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Mhow, on or about the [illegible] day of July, 1862, in the course of an official letter [illegible] to the General [illegible] which was then being held for the trial of Paymaster [illegible], [illegible] Inniskilling Dragoons, expressed himself in the following language, or in words to the like effect:—'Close arrest necessarily involves a sentry over a prisoner, but it does not necessarily [illegible] his being placed over a prisoner's wife or family, and I can assure the Court that no person could be more [illegible] than I was when I learned from the evidence of Sergeant-Major Lilley that his wife had been inconvenienced or annoyed by the precaution taken for his safe custody. It was Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon's fault if any such thing occurred, for it was his duty as adjutant to have seen the post assigned to the sentry, and to have taken care that no such improper interference with the privacy of the sergeant-major's wife should have taken place. As it was [illegible] with the statement of Sergeant-Major Lilley, [illegible] to have the sentry removed to a post where he could perform his duty equally well without annoying or interfering with Mrs. Lilley.' Thereby representing that the said Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon was in fault for what had occurred, whereas in truth and in fact the said Lieutenant-Colonel Crawley then well knew that the said Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon had acted in the said matter by the express order and direction of the said Lieutenant-Colonel Crawley."

When he was called upon to plead, Colonel Crawley objected that the charges were vague, but his objection was overruled; he therefore pleaded Not Guilty. The case was then opened by the acting Judge-Advocate, and Lieut. and Adjutant Fitzsimon, Major Champion, Private Blake, and Sergeant Mails were examined with regard to the placing of a sentry inside Sergeant-Major Lilley's hut. On Wednesday, after some documentary evidence had been produced, Major Champion was cross-examined. He stated that the different residences occupied by Sergeant-Major Lilley were not unfit for human habitation, but were more comfortable than the houses usually allotted to men of his rank. He further stated, that when Lilley's first rooms were wanted to be pulled down, Colonel Crawley made application for a more comfortable place for him. On Thursday the sitting was almost wholly occupied with the cross-examination of Lieutenant and Adjutant Fitzsimon, to whom Colonel Crawley attributed the placing of the sentries inside the sergeant-major's rooms. The cross-examination chiefly referred to the state of feeling in the regiment at the time of the Mhow court-martial, and the comments made by the authorities on the witness's evidence on that occasion. Yesterday the cross-examination of Adjutant Fitzsimon was resumed, and occupied the whole sitting.

Foreign.

France.—The Emperor presided at a Council of Ministers at the Tuileries on Wednesday, and returned to Compiègne in the evening. In the Senate on Thursday Count Walewski, M. Casabianca, M. Boger, M. Thouvenel, M. [illegible], and M. Bonjean were appointed members of the committee to prepare the Address in reply to the Emperor's Speech. In the sitting of the Corps Législatif on Monday, M. de Morny complained of the irreverent comments upon the debates in the Chamber on the part of the Journal des Débats, and said, "Having discussed the matter with the Minister of the Interior, I am resolved, upon a recurrence of the circumstance, to apply the law prohibiting the arraignment of public writers at the bar of the Chamber." The chief topics of discussion in the Chamber during the week have been the reports of the committees appointed to verify various elections, the validity of which was contested by the Opposition on various grounds. Several of these elections have been confirmed and others have been annulled by the Chamber. In one of the debates concerning the part taken by the Government in the election in question, M. Thiers addressed the House for the first time, and excited great laughter by saying that he had obtained an admission from the Government of all that he wanted—namely, that the course of justice had been suspended by the act of the Procureur du Roi. He immediately corrected himself by exclaiming amidst renewed laughter, "I beg pardon, I should have said the Procureur Impérial. I shall soon get into right habits." La France believes itself able to state that several European Sovereigns have officially announced their acceptance of the Congress, and that no refusal has yet been received. The same paper and the Temps state that Lord Cowley on Wednesday delivered to the Emperor the reply of England, accepting the invitation, but declaring the necessity of previous negotiations. It is understood in Paris that the Courts of London, Vienna, and Berlin, have agreed to accept the proposal of a Congress, on the understanding that the Ministers of the great Powers will confine themselves to the consideration of questions at present pending; that none but States concerned in the entire execution of the programme will have a seat and vote at the Congress; and that positive guarantees for the thorough carrying out of the programme will be given. La Nation thinks itself in a position to affirm that of the great Powers Prussia has raised the least objection to the proposal. The Mémorial Diplomatique states that after the Council of English Ministers which took place on the 12th inst., Earl Russell authorised the British Ambassador at Paris to declare to the French Government that Great Britain desired nothing better than to co-operate in the work undertaken by Napoleon III., of ensuring European order and consolidating the peace of the world; but, in order that their common efforts might be crowned with success, it appeared indispensable to the Ministers of her Majesty Queen Victoria that the Cabinets of England and France should enter into a preliminary exchange of frank and cordial explanations respecting the object of the Imperial programme and the means of attaining it. The Pays, in an article concerning the objections raised by the English papers, says that it must be borne in mind that in 1856 the Earl of Clarendon was the first to propose a similar resolution. The Temps publishes a rumour, under reserve, that the Emperor has requested King Leopold of Belgium to draw up the programme of the Congress. The official yellow book which has just been issued contains 65 documents; 36 relate to Poland, 12 to America, 3 to Mexico, and 9 to Greece, but there are no documents relating to Italy or to the candidature of Prince Alfred for Greece, or to that of the Archduke Maximilian for Mexico. The remaining five documents relate to commercial subjects. In the last note on the Polish question, dated the 22d September, M. Drouyn de Lhuys deplores the fact that three Powers like England, Austria, and France should not have succeeded in giving to the steps they took all the efficacy desirable, and says:—"It did not rest with us that the irresistible authority of a collective resolution was not secured to their opinion." Among the documents referring to American affairs is a despatch of M. Drouyn de Lhuys of the 12th September, relating to a conversation with Mr. Dayton, in which the latter contradicted the rumours in circulation respecting a protest of the Federal Government against the events taking place in Mexico. Mr. Dayton also denied the truth of the assertions relative to an alleged Russo-American alliance. M. Drouyn de Lhuys, in his despatch, says:—"I declared to Mr. Dayton that the disposition of the Emperor's Government on the American question has not changed. We have not recognised the South, and therefore, à fortiori, have not signed any treaty with it for the cession of Texas and Louisiana. I repeated to Mr. Dayton that we sought neither for ourselves nor others any acquisition in America, and that I relied upon his assistance in causing the prevalence in America of a juster appreciation of our institutions and of the necessities to which our policy deferred." Relative to Mexico M. Drouyn de Lhuys announces, in a note dated 15th October, that General Bazaine possessed instructions enabling him to definitively fix the indemnity which Mexico owes to France, and that he will do so without delay.

SPAIN.—The Queen has replied to the Emperor Napoleon's letter by entirely accepting the proposal for a Congress. In the Senate on Wednesday the Marquis of Miraflores stated that the Queen's letter to the Emperor would shortly be laid on the table of the House. The Novedades doubts whether the Congress will meet with success, as a good understanding with reactionary Governments is impossible. A marriage is spoken of between the Infanta Isabella and the Count of Paris. The Annamite Embassy was expected to arrive at Madrid on Saturday evening. In consequence of the unsatisfactory news from San Domingo, two steamers have left Cadiz for Porto Rico with 1800 troops. The Government is determined to uphold the rule of Spain in that island.

PORTUGAL.—The Emperor Napoleon's invitation to the King of Portugal to take part in the Paris Congress was considered in Cabinet Council on Monday, and conditionally accepted. Senhor Antonio José de Avila has been appointed to attend the Congress as the King's delegate. The King and Queen, accompanied by a numerous suite, left Lisbon on Wednesday for Oporto by land. Their Majesties intend to make a short tour in the north. The orange trees this year have been considerably affected by disease.

MADEIRA.—The vines have been more fruitful than for many years. Several pipes of wine have been already made.

SAXONY.—The Saxon Diet was opened on the 9th inst. by the King in person. His Majesty in his speech announced an augmentation in the rate of payment of public functionaries, and a reduction of certain taxes. He expected that the approaching conference at Berlin would result in an universal understanding of the German Sovereigns on the commercial treaty with France and the maintenance of the Zollverein. In conclusion, he expressed a hope that the aims of the German Reform Act would be attained through negotiations on the basis already gained. The King further promised that Federal execution in Holstein should be carried out.

BELGIUM.—The project of marriage between the Count of Flanders and a Brazilian Princess is understood to have fallen through, in consequence of the Count's disinclination to exchange his pleasant bachelor life in Europe for a residence in the Brazils, with the prospect of hereafter finding himself the consort of an empress. King Leopold is said to have been very desirous for the match, but found it impossible to overcome his son's resistance.

SWITZERLAND.—At the election for the Council of State the list of candidates of the Radical party was chosen, with the exception of M. Fazy. The Juarez Government has addressed a Note to the Federal Council, protesting against any modification of the Republican constitution in Mexico by the French invasion, and hoping for the sympathy of Switzerland.

SWEDEN.—Advices from Stockholm state that the Committee on the National Debt has resolved to postpone contracting a new loan until further proposals are received, more particularly from abroad.

DENMARK.—The King was attacked by erysipelas on Friday. On Saturday the disease spread over the King's whole face, with increasing fever and continued slight delirium, and His Majesty died at half-past 2 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. The King has been succeeded by Prince Christian, father of the Princess of Wales, the Crown having been settled upon him by the Treaty of May, 1852, to which England, Austria, Russia, Prussia, France, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark were parties, and also by the Law of Succession of 1853. On Monday M. Hall, President of the Council of Ministers, proclaimed Prince Christian as King of Denmark, under the title of King Christian IX., from the balcony of the Palace of Christiansburg. On the appearance of the new King on the balcony an immense crowd assembled before the palace, gave enthusiastic cheers for "Denmark and Schleswig!" "The new Constitution for the whole Monarchy!" "The new Danish Constitution!" and "The Hall Ministry!" On Tuesday the whole Municipality of Copenhagen presented an address to King Christian, expressing grief at the death of his predecessor, and congratulating his Majesty on his accession to the throne. In this address the Municipality expressed the hope that his Majesty would follow the course pursued by his predecessor, and said:—

"The present danger can only be met by harmony between the King and the people. The Municipality begs the King to complete the Act interrupted by the death of the late King, and to sign the constitution which was voted by the Council of the Empire. The liberty and independence of Denmark can only be insured by this course. The King is also solicited to make choice of advisers who, like the present tried Ministers, the advisers of the late King, possess the confidence of the people."

In reply, his Majesty graciously requested time to consider, and said that as a constitutional King, his resolution must be strongly influenced by the views of the Council of State and public opinion. On the reply of the King being known the people shouted "Long live the Municipality, the Constitution, and the Ministry!" On Wednesday the King sanctioned the new common Constitution for Denmark and Schleswig which had been adopted by the Rigsraad on Friday evening, two days before the late King's death. The President of the Council communicated the measure in person to the assembled Rigsraad. The galleries were crowded with spectators, who cheered loudly for the King. The Rigsraad on Thursday proceeded in a body to congratulate his Majesty. General exultation prevails throughout the city.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—A proclamation issued by the hereditary Prince Frederic of Augustenburg was published on Wednesday. The document is dated Dolzig, Nov. 16, signed "Frederic, Duke of Schleswig-Holstein," and announces the Prince's intention of assuming the Government of those duchies. It says:—

"By virtue of the decree of renunciation executed by my father in my favour, I declare that I assume the government of the Duchies. Unquestioned right afforded a pretext for the [illegible] upon you, as the Danish King was at the same time your Duke. Henceforth, however, the rule of the Danish monarch would be usurpation. I [illegible] upon you to repel force by force. Your country is occupied by foreign troops, and you possess no arms. It is [illegible] upon me, therefore, to appeal to the Government of the Federation for protection of my sovereign rights and your [illegible] privileges."

Addressing himself next to the inhabitants of the duchy of Lauenburg, and announcing his accession to the government, the Prince explains the grounds upon which his claim is founded and promises to preserve their rights and liberties. In conclusion, he promises to govern the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein in accordance with the constitution and fundamental laws of the country, and to uphold the rights of the people.

The leaders of the extreme party of the Holstein Diet convened a meeting at Kiel for Thursday to discuss the situation of the country, but the meeting was forbidden by the Government, on account of its being meant as a hostile demonstration to the King's succession. It was thereupon determined to hold the meeting at Hamburg, and numerous inhabitants of Schleswig and Holstein went to that city for the purpose. They were, however, dispersed by the police in three different places, and finally proceeded to the village of Uhlenhorst, where the meeting took place. An Address was voted to the Prince of Augustenburg, requesting him to place himself at the head of the people. It is asserted that the members of the Holstein Diet met at an hotel in Hamburgh on Thursday night. Twenty-four members of the Holstein Diet unanimously resolved on Thursday to solicit the Federal Diet for the most speedy protection of the rights of the country. This request has already been sent to the Federal Diet. The other members of the Holstein Diet who were not present at the meeting, on account of its having been prohibited by the police, have been asked to sign this address. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha has recognised the Prince of Augustenburg as Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, and has informed the representative of Holstein at the Federal Diet that any other pretension to the succession to the duchies would be met by a proposition to the Federal Diet requesting it to protect the right of this legitimate Prince by the necessary means, and, in case of need, to establish it by force. It is asserted that the Grand Duke of Weimar and the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen have also recognised the Prince, and that the Grand Duke of Baden has authorised his delegate to the Diet to represent Prince Frederic in that Assembly, in right of his vote for the Holstein territory.

FRANKFORT.—At an extraordinary sitting of the Federal Diet on Saturday, the Danish representative brought forward a proposition of a conciliatory character, according to which the King would grant to the Holstein Estates the additional right of voting the normal Budget. This proposition was referred to the United Committees.

PRUSSIA.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Wednesday the report of the Royal ordinance on the press of the 1st of June was read. MM. Simson and Gneist proposed that the Chamber should first refuse to sanction this ordinance, on the ground of Article 63 of the Constitution; and second, on the ground of Article 103, declare that the ordinance on the press was neither necessary for the maintenance of public safety nor for averting unusual difficulties. No limitation of the liberty of the press could be effected by a Royal ordinance, and the decree of the 1st of June was, even according to the terms in which it was conceived, contrary to the Constitution. On Thursday the propositions of Herren Simson and Gneist were discussed and carried by a large majority. The Polish members proposed that the inquiry instituted concerning three Polish deputies should be dropped. This proposal was referred to the Committee on Judicial Affairs. In the Upper House on Thursday the debate upon the draught of the Address in reply to the King's Speech was continued. The Committee on the Address proposed that the Chamber should not introduce the Holstein question into the deliberations, on account of the obscurity by which it is still surrounded. Count Bninski protested against the paragraph expressing gratitude to the Government for the measures adopted against the spread of the insurrection in Poland, and maintained that the insurrection had only for its object the liberation of Poland from Russian rule. Count von Bismarck Schonhausen, in reply, said:—

"Count Bninski may believe what he says. The Government, however, was obliged to judge in accordance with facts. The Government has proofs in hand that the insurrection was not directed alone against Russia. Government has, however, a political, social, and moral interest in the movement in Russian Poland not being victorious. An independent Poland would always be a source of danger for the Prussian monarchy, and would occupy the greater portion of the army. We must not allow a movement to be successful which soils itself with unheard of crimes, and which delights in the apotheosis of assassination."

The address was then put to the vote, and agreed to by 72 to 8. The Hereditary Prince Frederic, Duke of Augustenburg, arrived at Berlin early on Wednesday morning. His Highness had an interview with the Minister President, Count von Bismark Schönhausen. The Prussian fleet, which arrived at Plymouth a few days since on a cruise to Madeira, has been suddenly recalled, and the Neue Preussische (Kreuz) Zeitung of Wednesday evening says:—

"It is asserted on good authority that the Ministries for Marine and War are actively engaged in making preparations for hostilities, the outbreak of which between Germany and Denmark appears now to be unavoidable. The 6th and 13th divisions of the army are said to have already received orders to be placed on a war footing. It is said that corresponding directions for the equipment and commissioning of a war fleet have likewise been given."

The semi-official Nord Deutsche Zeitung says:—

"By the accession of the new King to the Danish throne the Schleswig-Holstein question has assumed an international character. All agree upon the validity of the London protocol. It is doubtful whether the German Confederation will acknowledge the Prince named by the protocol as the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein. The Federal Diet is by no means bound by the law of nations to this course, as it has not acceded to the London protocol. Neither are the Duchies bound to his recognition, as the Estates have not been applied to for their assent. Austria and Prussia also are released from the engagements they undertook, as Denmark has not fulfilled the duties it undertook towards Germany."

AUSTRIA.—A courier arrived at Vienna on Monday with despatches from Prince Metternich, from which it appears that the intention of Austria and England to make their participation in the Congress dependent on the reply of France to certain preliminary questions would not meet with a favourable reception at the Tuileries. The Upper House of the Reichsrath on Saturday approved without debate the loan of 60,000,000 florins granted by the Lower House. The Finance Committee of the Lower House of the Reichsrath has passed the following resolution:—

"We hope that the House will decree that in future, on the presentation of the Budget of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, at the opening of the Session, a statement of the foreign political relations of the Empire be laid before the Reichsrath, accompanied by the documents having reference thereto."

At the sitting of the Lower House on Tuesday the Galician Deputy, Herr Dith, demanded of the Police Minister that the excessive severity of the police in Galicia should be abated and the laws of personal liberty be respected. The Minister replied that the measures adopted by the authorities were in accordance with the law, and only directed against the revolutionary party, who wished to sever Galicia from the Austrian empire. Deputy Zybelkiewicz gave a harrowing description of the acts of violence which have taken place in Galicia. The Police Minister replied that he would oppose to Deputy Zybelkiewicz's picture of Galician circumstances another, founded upon documentary evidence. When a secret Government existed in the country, when revolutionary authorities ordered billeting and levying of taxes in Cracow, and declared certain persons suspicious; when foreigners streamed in from all sides, the Government must watch. Domiciliary visits by night were unavoidable. The Government would indefatigably maintain the authority of the law, and protect peaceable inhabitants from deeds of violence. The Wiener Zeitung of Wednesday says:—

"The continuance of the untiring intrigues of the extreme party in Galicia render the normal condition of that province impossible. The Government, however, is most anxious not to be compelled to adopt more energetic exceptional measures."

SAXE-COBURG.—It has been already stated that the Prince of Wales has renounced for himself and his heirs all right of succession to the Duchies of Coburg and Gotha, and that this renunciation has been received by the joint Diet of both divisions of the country. It is now announced that King Leopold of Belgium has recognised the act of renunciation in his quality as guardian to Prince Alfred, Prince Arthur, and Prince Leopold.

ITALY.—The naval review before King Victor Emmanuel took place on Monday in the Bay of Naples on the most magnificent scale, calling forth great enthusiasm. Large numbers of boats crowded with spectators were in the roads and harbour, and the whole population of the city witnessed the spectacle from the shore. On Tuesday the King reviewed the National Guard, and then left Naples for Leghorn. An amnesty has been issued to political criminals, including Count Christen and Mr. Bishop. Offences against the press laws, evasion of the conscription, breaches of the forest laws, infringement by the National Guards of their military duties, and all crimes, except those connected with brigandage and ordinary offences, are also pardoned. In the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday Signori Laforte and Micelli gave notice of their intention to question the Government concerning foreign politics, and Signor Ondes said he should put a question upon some occurrences having reference to the internal politics of the country. The Chamber was then adjourned for a short interval. On the return of the Ministers, the President of the Council announced that a vacancy was caused in the College of Messina by the death of Signor Zafarina, and expressed his regret at that event. In the sitting of Friday, the Committee appointed to examine the Treaty of Commerce and Navigation with France brought up a report proposing its adoption. The following is a summary of the Budget for 1864:—

The anticipated increase of the revenue amounts to 2,727,456.21. The Bills for the new taxes, not having yet been voted by the Senate, could not be taken into the calculations of the Minister of Finance. The ordinary receipts amount to 522,011,729,09, and the expenditure to 775,858,303,30, leaving a deficit of 253,846,574,21. The extraordinary expenses, which are estimated at 124,106,987,52, will be covered by the alienation of Crown lands.

The Grand Duchess Marie of Russia has arrived at Turin. In a Congregation of Cardinals held at Rome on Saturday, it was determined that the Papal Government should accept in a general manner the proposition of a European Congress. The Roman Railway Company has accepted the conditions of a concession to construct a railway from Civita Vecchia to Tuscany, the line to be completed within two years and a half.

SICILY.—A severe hurricane swept over the island on Monday morning, occasioning great devastation. Several lives were lost, and numbers of ships were sunk in the roads and harbour of Messina.

IONIAN ISLANDS.—The protocol ratifying the resignation of the Protectorate, and the cession of the Ionian Islands by Great Britain to the kingdom of Greece, was signed in London on Saturday by the representatives of the Five Great Powers, the signatures standing in alphabetical order—1, Austria; 2, Great Britain; 3, France; 4, Prussia; 5, Russia. It stipulates that the fortifications of Corfu shall be demolished previously to the transfer of the island.

RUSSIA.—The statement published by a London paper, that Baron de Budberg had stated to M. Drouyn de Lhuys, as Prince Gortschakoff's reply, that Russia would take part in the Congress, but not until after the pacification of Poland, is said to be entirely unfounded. The Emperor left the Crimea on the 7th, on his return to St. Petersburg. An Imperial ukase orders the formation of 12 new regiments of infantry, each containing three battalions. This force is intended to form the third reserve corps. The Journal de St. Petersbourg publishes a reply to recent articles in Le Nord attributing to Russia the design of pursuing a revolutionary policy in Hungary and Turkey, and a policy hostile to England in Asia. The journal declares that Russia has never in any degree infringed the principle of order, for which she has frequently testified her respect. In Asia, Russia and England can assist each other mutually, and have no reason to annihilate their reciprocal influence. The Imperial Bank has ceased to issue foreign bills. The rate of exchange on that city has consequently fallen $2\frac{5}{8}$ per cent.

POLAND.—The telegram from Lemberg, stating that the National Government had dismissed Prince Czartoryski and General Mieroslawski, is contradicted on good authority. By order of General Prince Wittgenstein, Corfini and Borkowski were hanged last week at Wloclawek. The Lady Superior of the Convent of St. Felix and Countess Ledochowska, the sister-in-law of the Papal Nuncio at Brussels, have been sentenced to decapitation at Warsaw. The Czas publishes the following almost incredible act of atrocity:—

"According to an order published by General Lewchine every woman who appears in the streets of Warsaw after nightfall must carry a lantern, unless she is accompanied by a man who is provided with one. A householder and his wife were returning home, the husband met a friend and both stopped for a moment on the flagway; the wife, who had advanced a few steps, was arrested by a policeman, who dragged her to the guardhouse because she had no lantern. Notwithstanding the remonstrance of the husband, the commissary of police of the eighth district of Warsaw sentenced her to receive five stripes of a rod. She declared she was with child, and prayed to be spared the torture. 'Give her 10 stripes,' replied the commissary. 'Since you are implacable,' said the husband, 'permit me to suffer the corporal punishment in place of my wife.' 'It is your wish,' said the police agent,—'give him 10 blows and 15 to his wife,' and this execrable order was executed."

The National Government has published a proclamation encouraging the Poles to persevere, and confirming the order for ladies to discontinue wearing mourning. It has also issued a decree ordering the realisation of the forced loan of 40,000,000 florins, and stating that officers have been appointed by the National Government for the verification of the accounts. The Poles, under the command of Wilkowski, gained a great success over the Russians on the 30th ult. in the palatinate of Lublin. The rest of Czachowski's band was completely destroyed on the 6th inst. in the Government of Radom. Czachowski was captured, and has since died of his wounds at Radom. The Russians have been selling at Lowicz, by public auction, the timber from the woods which have been cut down as a strategic measure. A Polish cavalry corps has invaded the town and seized 10,000 florins, the produce of the sale, leaving a receipt. Preparations have been made all along the line of railway in Galicia, and also on the line to Brody, for the provisioning and billeting of troops.

CIRCASSIA.—Six Russian officers have been shot as spies by the Circassians.

TURKEY.—The Porte has addressed a Note to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg, protesting against the armaments on the frontier and the building of gunboats on the Black Sea, in violation of the Treaty of Paris. The Turkish arsenals and navy-yards are working day and night in order to meet eventualities. The plague has broken out at Komords (?), on the Persian frontier. All the arrears of the army prior to March last have been settled by individual serghis, payable to the soldier at the expiration of his term of service. Since March all have been paid in cash. The new taxes are to be applied to Constantinople, which city has hitherto been exempt.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Considerable feeling is still exhibited in the Western Province against the intended holding of Parliament at Graham's Town. A new feature has also arisen in this discussion from a large meeting having been held at Graaf Reinet, where it was unanimously resolved to present an address to the Governor, expressing an opinion that Uitenhage was better fitted for the seat of Parliament than Graham's Town. The frontier districts were mustering all their strength with the ulterior view of securing a permanent removal of the Government from Cape Town to Graham's Town. Some of the Midland districts were holding similar views in favour of Uitenhage. The Western Province was making strenuous exertions to meet this coming struggle. The Governor had refused to mediate between the Gamaras and Hottentots, who were at war in Damarland. The railway to Wellington was expected to be finished by the end of October. A railway from Port Elizabeth to Uitenhage was proposed. Baines's and Chapman's expedition to the Zambesi had failed. They were returning to the Cape, after having lost all their animals, and had 18 native servants murdered by the Matables. Dr. William Gill, of Somerset East, a resident in the colony for 44 years, and a son of the Rev. George Gill, a dissenting minister of Market Harborough, Leicestershire, had died and left from 18,000*l*. to 20,000*l*. for the endowment of a college in the Eastern Province. The Confederate steamer Alabama had sailed for the Bay of Bengal.

INDIA.—A British force has been ordered to take the field against the Sittanas, under the command of General Garvock, commanding at Peshawur. It is composed of her Majesty's 71st Highland L. I., her Majesty's 101st Bengal Fusiliers, the 3d (Renny's) Sikhs, the Guides, and the 13th Bengal Cavalry, with the Mountain Train Artillery; in all about 4000 men. The produce of the cotton crop in the central provinces in 1862 was estimated at 47,000,000 lb. This season the prospects are still more encouraging. A larger area than ever has been sown, the weather has been most favourable, and cotton is selling in Nagpore at 1*s*. 4*d*. a lb. retail. The Cinchona plants in the Madras Presidency have suffered somewhat severely during the beginning of last month from continuous and heavy rains. The species which suffered most belonged to the red bark.

CHINA.—Despatches from Shanghai of Oct. 9 state that Major Gordon is before Soochow, and an attack on that city is imminent. Reinforcements have been sent to Taitsang and Quins-an. Mr. Lay of the Customs, Captain Osborn, and General Brown, have gone to Pekin to bring the Imperial Government to an understanding respecting Capt. Osborn's flotilla, which has been so badly treated as to pay that many of the seamen have deserted.

JAPAN.—The news from Japan is unfavourable. Armed men are appearing at Nagasaki. Prince Satsuma and other princes are preparing for war. Advices from the Swiss Embassy at Yokohama announce that the Ambassadors have received a first official visit from one of the chief officers of the Tycoon. The Ambassadors believe that America and Russia are pursuing an ambiguous policy, and exciting the Japanese to resist the other Powers.

AUSTRALIA.—The Melbourne papers announce the arrival of Sir Charles Darling, and his assumption of the government of Victoria; the departure of Sir Henry Barkly for the Mauritius; and the prorogation of parliament without Mr. Heales's bill to amend the Land Act of 1862 having become law. Both houses of Parliament have resolved to oppose the policy of the home government in regard to the resumption of transportation to Australia. Mr. and Mr. Charles Kean arrived on the 24th Sept. in 78 days from London.

NEW ZEALAND.—The accounts from the seat of war to the 25th Sept., state that the Maoris have taken up a strong position at Mere-Mere on the bank of the Waikato river, a place thickly covered with scrub and underwood, the front of their position looking towards the river being protected by a number of rifle pits. A hill or Maori pah rises behind these pits, and on the side looking from the river defensive works of great strength have been constructed. At every available point around this eminence and on its ridges, rifle pits have been sunk, and "whares" and palisades raised for the protection of the natives engaged in defending them. The encampment of the British troops is within cannon-range of the Maori rifle pits. The proximity to the river of the position occupied by the natives has afforded an opportunity to Commander Sullivan of making a reconnaissance with the Avon, a colonial gun-boat, and of inflicting considerable damage on the Maoris with her 12-pounder Armstrong gun. General Cameron was nearly ready to strike a decisive blow, which it is hoped will have considerable influence in shortening the duration of the war. Every able-bodied man in the colony is up in arms, and large numbers of volunteers were daily arriving at Auckland, not only from the other New Zealand settlements, but from Australia. The next mail will probably bring decisive news. Mr. Howitt, a brother of the celebrated Australian explorer of the same name, and son of William and Mary Howitt, has been drowned with three others, by the upsetting of a canoe on Lake Brunner, in the western district of Canterbury.

UNITED STATES.—On the 7th inst. Sedgwick's and French's divisions of General Meade's army advanced to the Rappahannock and carried the Confederate redoubts at the Rappahannock railroad bridge and Kelly's Ford, capturing 1800 prisoners and seven guns. The Federal loss was 800. On the 8th General Meade and his whole army crossed the Rappahannock with little opposition, and moved forward. His advance reached Brady's station. Burnside's cavalry also crossed the river above the Rappahannock ford. It is reported that Kelpstrick occupied Fredericksburg heights on the 7th. General Lee's force is said to be diminished to 30,000 men. Accounts from Chattanooga contradict the report of the occupation of Lookout Mountain, and state that General Longstreet was still firing from the Mountain on General Hooker's position, without, however, inflicting much damage. Daily communications had been opened with Bridgeport, and supplies were rapidly reaching the Federals. General Thomas has reported the capture of a forage train belonging to General Bragg's army, together with the guard in the Lookout Valley. General Bragg's army is reported to have been weakened for some purpose not yet developed. Despatches from General Grant announce that the Confederates had attacked two of Burnside's advanced positions and captured portions of two Federal regiments. No details are given. General Thomas officially reports an engagement between a regiment of Michigan infantry and 400 guerillas at Lawrenceburg, in Tennessee, on the 4th inst., in which the latter were defeated. The Confederate losses were eight men killed, seven wounded, and 24 captured. The Federals had three men wounded and eight horses killed. The Confederates have been repulsed at Colliersville, on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad. The Confederate General Geary and his staff were captured. The Confederates are also said to have been repulsed in an attack upon Pine's Bluff, Arkansas. General Price has retreated beyond the Red River. General Sherman has had some severe fighting near Tuscumbia. It is reported that there are no Confederates, except guerillas, left in East Tennessee. The bombardment of Fort Sumter continued without intermission throughout the 31st ult. and the 1st inst. 1005 shots were fired by the Federals on the former day, and during the afternoon of the latter the firing averaged four shots per minute. Early on the 31st ult. the sea face wall of Fort Sumter fell in, burying a number of the garrison in the ruins. Thirteen men were reported missing through this accident; the other casualties were two killed and three wounded. The flagstaff was twice shot away; the flag itself was so badly battered that the battle flag of the Georgia regiment was raised instead. On the evening of the 1st the bombardment was still severe. The steamer Salvor, which arrived at Philadelphia from Charleston on the 4th inst, reports the capture of the Fort, and its occupation by the 146th Pennsylvanian Regiment; but the last Federal advices and Confederate telegrams to the 5th from Charleston contradict the report, and state that the bombardment still continued furiously. No casualties were reported. President Davis had visited Charleston and inspected the defences, and was said to have expressed his opinion that Charleston never could be taken. He has also made a speech at Mobile, reminding the troops that they were not common soldiers, but the best population of the country poured into the army; and he appealed to them from other incentives than military discipline. Self must be entirely forgotten in present times, and those who were hoarding up wealth were hoarding up infamy, the mark of which they and their posterity who shall have grown rich by war must bear. The currency question is attracting much attention in the South. The Richmond papers complain of the scarcity of food. The prisoners arriving from Richmond were starving. The Philadelphia Engineer contains a doubtful rumour that the Confederates are evacuating Richmond, and that President Davis has left permanently for the South. It is reported that General Joe Johnston has ordered General Forrest to burn all the cotton in his command. Serious rioting has taken place in Pennsylvania colliery caused by an attempt to enlist the miners. The rioters were mostly Irish. Three out of five of the Administration candidates were elected in Baltimore. The majority of the inhabitants refrained from voting. The Governor of Maryland has protested against military interference with elections, and has ordered the judges to report to the State Attorney the presence of the military at the polls. The State would support the judges in doing their duty. The Democrats have carried the New Jersey elections. The Republican majority in New York State was estimated at 30,000. Mr. Seward has made a speech asserting that there could be no peace until Mr. Lincoln was President of the whole United States. He anticipated the early submission of the insurgents, "when there would be peace, and the angels in Heaven might tune their harps to the symphony of such a peace." There was no State that had not been made stronger, and no citizen that had not been made richer by the war. A great ball in honour of the officers of the Russian fleet has been given at the Academy of Music; but the room was so crowded that dancing was impossible. Some accounts estimate the number of persons present at upwards of 4000. Marshal Forey has arrived at New York from Mexico. The steamer Margaret and Jessies has been captured.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE LATE LORD MAYOR.—At the Court of Aldermen on Tuesday, Alderman Copeland moved and Alderman Wilson seconded a vote of thanks to Alderman Rose for the manner in which he had maintained the privileges of the City and the dignity of the mayoralty during his year of office. Alderman Sidney took exception to the late Lord Mayor's conduct in the matter of the police arrangements on the occasion of the Royal visit, and in his soliciting honours at the hands of the Prime Minister. He asserted that the late Lord Mayor was wholly to blame for the peril in which the privileges of the Corporation had been put, and though he did not think the reasons given by Lord Palmerston for not making the late Lord Mayor a baronet were tenable, he thought the conduct of Alderman Rose in making the complaints he had made on the subject was most unwise. Alderman Phillips defended Alderman Rose, and after some further discussion the motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL TO LORD CLYDE.—A public meeting was held on Friday at Willis's Rooms, to consider the propriety of raising a subscription for the erection of a statue of Lord Clyde. The Duke of Cambridge presided, and gave a clear and lengthened narrative of Lord Clyde's brilliant career, and speeches in honour of his services were delivered by Earl De Grey, the Duke of Argyll, the Earl of Ellenborough, Lord Stanley, the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Lucan, Sir C. Wood, and others. Resolutions in favour of the object of the meeting were unanimously adopted, and a committee was appointed to carry them into effect.

AUTHORISED COMMENTARY ON THE BIBLE.—The objections brought against certain portions of the Bible are about to be met by leading theologians of the Church of England in a very practical way. The plan was originated by the Speaker of the House of Commons, who consulted several of the bishops on the subject, and the Archbishop of York, at his instance, undertook to organise a plan for producing a commentary which should "put the reader in full possession of whatever information may be requisite to enable him to understand the Word of God, and supply him with satisfactory answers to objections resting upon misrepresentation of its contents." The plan has received the sanction of the Primate. A committee, consisting of the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of London, Lichfield, Llandaff, Gloucester and Bristol, Lord Lyttelton, the Speaker, Mr. Walpole, Drs. Jacobson and Jeremie, takes the general supervision of the work. The Rev. F. C. Cook, preacher at Lincoln's Inn, will be the general editor, and will advise with the Archbishop of York and the Regius Professors of Divinity at Oxford and Cambridge upon any questions which may arise. The work will be divided into eight sections, the first of which will consist of the Pentateuch, and will be edited by Professor Harold Browne, the Revs. R. C. Pascoe, T. F. Thrupp, T. E. Espin, and W. Dewhurst. The historical books will be consigned to the Revs. G. Rawlinson, T. E. Espin and Lord Arthur Hervey. The Rev. F. C. Cook will edit, and the Revs. E. H. Plumptre, W. T. Bullock, and T. Kingsbury will annotate the poetical books. The four great Prophets will be undertaken by the Revs. R. Payne Smith and H. Rose. The Bishop of St. David's and the Rev. R. Gandell will edit the 12 minor Prophets, assisted by the Revs. E. Huxtable, W. Drake, and F. Meyrick. The Gospels and Acts will form the sixth section; the first three Gospels will be edited by Professor Mansel, the Gospel of St. John by the Dean of Canterbury, and the Acts by Dr. Jacobson. The editorship of St. Paul's Epistles is assigned to Bishop Ellicott and Dr. Jeremie, assisted by Dr. Gifford, Professor T. Evans, Rev. J. Waite, and Professor J. Lightfoot. To the Archbishop elect of Dublin and the Master of Balliol is assigned the rest of the sacred canon.

THE LATE ACCIDENT TO THE PRINCE CONSORT.—A communication has been received from the Admiralty, expressing their lordships' satisfaction at the praiseworthy conduct of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who served in her Majesty's ship Prince Consort on the late trying occasion; and stating that their lordships have granted all of them a gratuity for their services.

THE ABANDONMENT OF THE SEBASTIAN CABOT.—An inquiry instituted by the Board of Trade, after sitting for several days, was concluded at Liverpool on Friday, when the Court recommended that the certificate of Captain Hopkinson should be suspended for eighteen months, on the ground of unseamanlike conduct, in abandoning the Sebastian Cabot with a cargo valued at 100,000*l*. in the Channel, on her voyage from London to Bombay. The Court was of opinion that the charges of intoxication made against the captain were not substantiated by the evidence.

ABANDONMENT OF THE AUSTRAL.—The ship Austral, which left the Thames only a few days ago for Australia, sustained such injuries in a gale in the chops of the Channel, that she was abandoned by the crew, who were picked up by a French vessel. The ship and cargo are said to be insured for 60,000*l*.

THE LATE ACCIDENT TO THE MAIL STEAM SHIP AFRICA.—An investigation at the instance of the Board of Trade took place last week in Liverpool to ascertain the circumstances under which the Royal Mail steamship Africa, Captain James Stone, ran on a rock at Cape Race, and sustained some damage on the night of the 12th of October. After carefully considering the testimony of the master and other witnesses, the Court came to the conclusion that the master of the Africa was in default, and that the stranding of the vessel was occasioned by a culpable want of caution in not having either slowed his engines or used his lead when he had run his distance, the state of the weather being such that he could not see the lights or verify his supposed position by any other means. Their sentence therefore was that the certificate of Mr. James Stone be suspended for six calendar months. A special meeting of the Council of the Mercantile Marine Service Association was held at Liverpool on Monday, at which resolutions were unanimously carried, condemning not only the sentence on Captain Stone, but these Courts of Inquiry in general. It was resolved that the jurisdiction of these tribunals was opposed to the fundamental principles of British legislation and the rights of Britons, and that means should be forthwith taken to procure the restoration of Captain Stone's certificate and the establishment of a fair tribunal. A petition to this effect has also been addressed to the Board of Trade by certain merchants, shipowners, and other inhabitants of Liverpool.

AMALGAMATION OF THE ST. KATHARINE, LONDON, AND VICTORIA DOCKS.—On Tuesday meetings of the proprietors of these companies were held, at which it was unanimously resolved to apply to Parliament in the ensuing session for power to carry into effect certain arrangements for the amalgamation of the companies. It was explained that the terms virtually amount to a payment to the Victoria Company of 1,000,000*l*., in bonds of the Amalgamated London and St. Katharine's Companies, bearing $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest. The steelyard property is not included in the purchase.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.—A meeting of the governors of St. Thomas's Hospital was held on Tuesday, when, notwithstanding some protests from parishes in the south-east of London, the Court agreed to a resolution adopting the Stangate site for the hospital, and agreeing to give 95,000*l*. for the ground, subject to the approval of the Court of Chancery.

SANITARY STATE OF BETHNAL GREEN.—An inquest was opened on Tuesday on a little girl who had lived with her parents in a place called Hollybush Gardens, Bethnal Green. The jury visited the house, and found the approaches to it in a horribly filthy condition, while the stench from the drains was most offensive. Witnesses who were examined deposed that at times the smell which forced its way into the houses was almost unendurable. A complaint had been made to a collector, who had told the person who spoke to him that the place would be made better when the drainage was settled. The inquest was adjourned in order that the locality might be examined by some medical man unconnected with the district. A post-mortem examination of the body of the deceased is also to be made.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF POLAND.—A public meeting was held on Tuesday evening at the Beaumont Institution, Mile End, for the purpose of expressing sympathy with Poland. Lord Campbell, who took the chair, said he had lately spent a month in Warsaw, and he had made it his business while there to ascertain the feelings of the Poles of all classes and of all opinions as to the value of our English sympathy. The universal reply he received was, that the sympathy of England would do much to sustain their spirits in the struggle. He therefore asked his fellow countrymen to extend their sympathy to their Polish brethren, and to protest against any truckling on the part of the English Government to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg. The Poles had asked of the English Government to acknowledge their belligerent rights. This was an intelligible request. It was naturally thought that the declaration of the Foreign Secretary at Blairgowrie would have been at once followed by the acknowledgment on the part of the British Cabinet of the belligerent rights of the Poles. He thought this course had not been taken because the people of Great Britain had not plainly and forcibly spoken out upon the question. It was not the aim of the League to light up the torch of war, but it did aim at obtaining for the Poles belligerent rights, fully convinced that if those rights were conceded Polish independence would be achieved by the Poles themselves. The League, and he quite coincided with it, thought it to be the interest of England that Poland should become an independent nation, forming a barrier against Russian aggressions on Western Europe. Mr. James Day proposed the first resolution,—"That the devoted heroism of the Poles in their present and in their past struggles for the independence of their country entitle them to the admiration and support of Great Britain. It was seconded by Mr. Burnes. Mr. Hennessy, M.P., supported the resolution in a long speech, in which he said that the declaration of the French Emperor that the treaties were at an end afforded great hope for Poland. He contended that England ought to support the Poles, even to the extent of war if necessary. The resolution was then put and carried by acclamation.

Mr. E. Beales moved the second resolution,—"That this meeting cordially approves the objects of the National Polish League, and urges on the Government the justice of extending to the insurgent Poles the belligerent rights which they have asked." He contended in a long speech that England was to a great degree responsible for the atrocities now being committed by Russia in Poland. Mr. D. M. Nicoll seconded the resolution, which was supported by M. Zaba, and unanimously agreed to.

Big Ben.—The great bell of the Houses of Parliament is once more announcing the time from the Clock Tower of Westminster Bridge. It was discovered on examination by the founders, Messrs. Meares, that it was not so cracked as people imagined, and consequently it has been again set to work. The crack did not pass completely through the metal, and though the tones are rather subdued, they are distinctly audible to distant parts of the metropolis.

The Late Tragedy in a Cab.—The body of Hunt was conveyed from Camberwell in a van, and buried at half past 11 on Friday night in the Garrett Lane Cemetery, Tooting, without any funeral service. The inquest on the bodies of his wife and children was resumed and concluded on Monday, when, in accordance with the evidence of the medical men, the jury returned a verdict that they were found dead in a cab from the effects of prussic acid, administered to them maliciously and with intent to take away their lives by Samuel William Hunt. The three bodies were buried on Thursday at the Paddington Cemetery, in Willesden Lane.

The Alleged Murder at Dalston.—Another case of suspected murder has been the subject of a coroner's inquest, which after several adjournments was brought to a close on Friday. On the evening of the 17th ult. a shoemaker named Homerston returned to his house at Dalston severely wounded in the head. He stated that he had been attacked in the street by some men who had followed him out of a public-house, and with whom he had had a difficulty about some betting transaction. He was taken to the German Hospital, and died on the 5th inst. The coroner said that the case was one of great suspicion, but he thought an open verdict would be best, as the police could follow up the case if any new light were thrown upon it. The jury returned a verdict "That deceased died from certain injuries, but whether they arose from a fall or blow the evidence was not sufficient to show."

Suspected Murder and Robbery in Shoreditch.—On Friday morning an inquest was resumed for the fourth time, relative to the mysterious death of Edward Vial, aged 37 years, a German sausage dealer, who died from violence inflicted on him on the night of the 21st of September while on his way home. No evidence it appeared could be obtained positively showing how the injuries were inflicted which led to his death. The coroner, consequently, thought it was useless again to adjourn the inquiry. It was clear that the man had been attacked as he was on his way home, and robbed of the money that he had gained by his sales for the evening. The jury accordingly returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Report states that the deaths in London, in the week which ended Saturday, Nov. 14, were 1457. The average number in the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1379. The present return is therefore 78 above the average. During the week the births of 1066 boys and 995 girls, in all 2061 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853–62 the average number was 1851.

Provincial.

Aberavon.—Nine more bodies were found on Monday in the pit at Morfa Colliery, where the explosion took place about three weeks ago. The number of unrecovered bodies is 15. The four bodies now brought to the mouth of the pit were greatly disfigured, and were only identified by their clothing and tobacco boxes. The adjourned inquest was resumed on Tuesday, when a further adjournment was agreed to, the jury thinking it desirable to wait until the last body is found, because it is believed that that will furnish a clue to the cause of the explosion. If it were occasioned by the opening of a lamp by a workman, signs of that opening will be seen on the lamp, which will, no doubt, be found in the hands of the man. A former explosion at the same colliery was occasioned by the opening of a lamp, and on that occasion four lives were lost.

Aylesbury.—The Bishop of Oxford delivered his triennial charge to the clergy of the diocese in this town last week. He began by taking a comprehensive survey of the present condition of the Church, and said that the progress she had made was never so visible or so rapid as at the present moment. The three great hindrances to the complete success of the Church as a working engine for good among the people were bad cottages, beer-shops, and dissent. The first two must be put down as counter-working religious efforts of whatever kind; the last as only specially counter-working the Church. But there were special evils also with which the clergy were called to contend. He exhorted his clergy to be faithful to distinctive teaching, and severely censured those clergymen who left their own parishes to take part with dissenters in other cures. Referring to the late attacks on the Bible, he said the clergy must never forget that the Church was before the Bible, was the guardian and witness for the Bible, and the authority on which the truths of the Bible must be propounded to each separate conscience. Much was said of late about comprehension. His own soul yearned for comprehension; he would sacrifice for it everything but truth; but one jot of truth he would not consent to sacrifice for any amount of comprehension.

Guildford.—During the recent excitement caused by the measures taken by the local authorities and the Government to prevent a riot on Guy Faux Day, it was discovered that Sergeant Maghe of the 3d Buffs, who was lodging at a public house with a woman called Elizabeth Waterer, the daughter of a gamekeeper at Headley, near Epsom, had strangled her during the night and afterwards attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat. The woman, who is supposed also to have taken poison, was quite dead, but the man is still alive and in charge of the police, though he is in such a critical state that his recovery is doubtful. The inquest was opened on Saturday week, and adjourned until he is able to attend.

Hereford.—The committee appointed at the county meeting for raising a memorial to the late Sir G. C. Lewis have decided that it shall assume the form of a statue in bronze of the right hon. gentleman, to be placed in front of the Shire Hall in this city. The work is to be intrusted to Baron Marochetti, who has undertaken its execution for the sum of 1000*l*.

Ipswich.—On Thursday week a riot took place in this town, caused by the presence of the well-known Baron de Camin, whose lectures against Popery have occasioned similar breaches of the peace in other parts of England. The baron was announced to lecture in the Temperance Hall, but the authorities refused the public admission to the building, which was surrounded by a strong body of police. The consequence was that the crowd left the hall in a body, and proceeded to the residence of the mayor, where they began to vent their feelings by hooting and shouting; at last stones were thrown, and in a short time most of the windows in the mayor's house were broken. On Friday evening the "Baron" was allowed to lecture without opposition. The hall was nearly half empty, but outside there was a crowd of 2000 or 3000 boys, either unwilling or unable to pay the 3*d*. demanded for admission. About 10 p.m. the rabble started off to Orwell Place, where they broke several windows in the house of Father Kemp, the Roman Catholic priest, but a strong body of police appearing they dispersed without committing further mischief.

Leeds.—The Archbishop of York distributed, a few days since, the certificates gained at the recent examinations in connection with the West Riding Educational Board, in the Town Hall of this borough. He spoke of the great advantage of examinations to every school, as a test of the proficiency of both masters and scholars, and encouraged the latter to increased exertion, as there were no barriers on the road to knowledge which they might not overcome. His Grace concluded by some practical hints on the value of style, and on the advantage of having one subject to which to devote a great deal of thought and attention, as a corrective to that superficiality of mind which he thought was the greatest danger of the present day.

Manchester.—At the weekly meeting of the Central Relief Committee on Monday, the Earl of Derby in the chair, the hon. Secretary reported that 156*l*. 12*s*. 11*d*. had been received during the week, and that the balance in the bank was 258,392*l*. 4*s*. 1*d*. Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported that on the 7th inst. there was an increase of 211 in the number of persons receiving parochial relief in 27 unions of the district as compared with the number relieved in the previous week. At a subsequent meeting of the general committee, a report was read stating that the cost of the distress up to Michaelmas last was 1,979,369*l*. Of this amount 535,898*l*. came from charitable sources, and 823,470*l*. was the extra charge obtained from the local rates. This calculation, of course, does not include the private charity, of which no record can be obtained. The sum available to the purposes of the general committee is still about 384,018*l*., besides what is promised in large towns in Yorkshire and elsewhere, but not transmitted. On the motion of the Mayor of Manchester, seconded by Lord Egerton of Tatton, the report was adopted.

Taunton.—Captain Speke, one of the discoverers of the sources of the Nile, visited this town on Friday week; when a congratulatory address on his return to his native country was presented to him. On the previous day he was entertained at a banquet given by the Bristol Society of Merchant Venturers, and on Wednesday week a public dinner in his honour took place at Ilminster.

Windsor.—The use of tobacco for smoking purposes within the precincts of Windsor Castle has been prohibited by the express command of her Majesty the Queen. Cards, neatly framed and glazed, requesting that gentlemen will not smoke in the Castle, have been hung in the private rooms of the Lords in Waiting and Equerries of the Royal suite, and even in the rooms in the York Tower, which are fitting up for the Prince of Wales. The servants and workmen of the Castle are also prohibited from smoking within the Castle, by command of her Majesty.

Worcester.—A murderous outrage was committed last week by a supposed madman on Mrs. Barnes, a cottager residing about two miles from this city. She was at work in her cottage when a man respectably dressed entered and beat her so unmercifully about the head with a bludgeon as to fracture her skull. The supposed culprit has been apprehended at Gloucester. He gives his name as James Barton, but at Gloucester he had assumed the title of Lord Spencer. Mrs. Barnes, who is still in Worcester Infirmary, has identified him as the man who attacked her, and a young man named Crump has deposed that he saw him leave the cottage on the day of the assault. The prisoner was accordingly taken before the magistrates, and committed for trial on the charge of assault with intent to murder.

Ireland.

Prince Consort Memorial.—A meeting of the Committee was held a few days since, at which it was announced that Mr. Foley, R.A., had undertaken the design and execution of the Memorial. A letter was read from him thanking the committee for the order, and stating that he would use his best endeavours to carry it out in a manner worthy of the high character of the subject, and would come over as soon as possible to consult the committee.

The Opening of Stephen's Green.—A meeting was held in the Mansion House a few days since, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, to adopt measures for opening Stephen's Green as a public park. Sir Colman O'Loghlen made a speech in favour of opening the square, and letters were read from Lord Talbot de Malahide and the Right Hon. J. Napier to the same effect. After the subject had been fully discussed, it was resolved at once to serve the usual Parliamentary notices for a Bill to open the Green as a public park.

The Galway Route.—The Hibernia arrived in Galway Bay at half-past 4 p.m. on Saturday, having left Boston on the 3d inst., and St. John's on the 7th. She is the first of the new company's vessels that has made the homeward voyage within the prescribed time. But the feeling of satisfaction which was thus inspired was soon damped by the intelligence that the Adriatic, the crack ship of the fleet, celebrated for her speed, had arrived out at St. John's two days after her time. The cause of the delay has not been made known. A demand of 10,000*l*. has been made for salvage by the owner of the steam-tug that assisted to get the Anglia off the rock in Galway Bay; but the demand appears to have been relinquished, for she sailed for Liverpool on Sunday morning at daybreak, in company with the Hibernia.

Scotland.

Fatal Boiler Explosion in Glasgow.—On Friday afternoon a boiler explosion took place in the well-known chemical works of St. Rollox, Glasgow, the property of the Messrs. Tennent. The first intimation the workmen on the premises had of the accident was the noise of the explosion. Seven men were injured, two of whom died in the course of the evening, and two others have died since. The cause of the accident has not been ascertained.

Railways.

Metropolitan Extensions.—The usual notices of intended application to Parliament have been given by the South Eastern Company for power to extend the Mid-Kent to Addiscombe Road, Croydon, and from thence to the Caterham line; to raise additional capital for the purchase of the Mid-Kent; and to obtain power to make working agreements with the London, Chatham, and Dover, and to dissolve the Mid-Kent. The Metropolitan Company has given notices of application for power to extend the line from Paddington to Notting Hill, Kensington, and Brompton, and to raise additional capital; to extend the line from Finsbury to Trinity Square, Tower Hill, to raise additional capital for the purpose, and to make arrangements with the Metropolitan Board of Works, the Commissioners of Sewers, and any vestry or district Board; to obtain power to extend the time for the purchase of lands and completion of works on the authorised lines; to make a new railway from the main line near King's Cross station to the Midland Extension at or near Skinner's Place, Euston Road; to alter and divert a portion of the existing railway from the Metropolitan at King's Cross to the down line of the Great Northern near the Great Northern Hotel; to widen and improve the line near Praed Street; to raise additional capital, to make arrangements with the Midland, and to obtain power to withdraw the money deposited with the Court of Chancery in respect of the Finsbury Extension. Notice has also been given for making a line from the Tottenham and Hampstead Extension in the Holloway Road to Euston Road and the east end of Villiers Street, Strand; to make a branch to the Middle Wharf, Adelphi, terminating by a junction with the Charing Cross near the north end of the bridge; branches to the Midland Extension line and to the Euston Road; a branch to the London and North-Western near Hampstead Road; and to obtain power to raise further capital, and to enable the Midland, Great Northern, Great Eastern, London and North-Western, and South-Eastern Companies to subscribe towards and hold shares in the undertaking.

Law.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—Colonel Knox, M.P. v. Gye.—In this case Colonel Knox, M.P., sought to obtain a decree for the dissolution of a partnership which he alleged had subsisted between himself and Mr. Frederick Gye in the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, since 1851, and for an account and payment of what was due to him in respect of his share of the capital, including his moiety of the sum of 12,000*l.* brought into the concern by the late Mr. A. H. Thistlethwayte. Mr. Gye denied the existence of the alleged partnership, and asserted that all the plaintiff had done with reference to the opera was done simply with a disinterested desire of serving him. Vice-Chancellor Wood in giving judgment expressed an opinion adverse to the claim of partnership set up by the plaintiff. He said the turning point of the case was that a few years after Mr. Gye took the management of the opera, with the aid rendered to him by the plaintiff and other gentlemen, it was proposed that the plaintiff should sign a deed with reference to the management of the opera, but that the plaintiff refused to do so, saying he never had been, and never would be a partner in the concern. In 1857 Col. Knox, in answer to an appeal of Mr. Gye for a further advance to carry on the opera, said he could not fairly advance any more money, that Mr. Gye must get some wealthy man to do so—adding that if the affair turned out well, the person who would have all the advantage was Mr Gye himself. In 1859 Col. Knox wrote to Mr. Gye, asking what he had been telling people about his connection with the theatre, and in reply Mr. Gye said whenever he spoke of Colonel Knox in connection with the affair he had always expressed his gratitude to him for advancing the money he did, and for his determination never to reap any benefit from it. Upon the whole case the Court was of opinion that Colonel Knox was not a partner in the theatre. The question of partnership was the sole issue raised by the bill. The Court would give the plaintiff an opportunity of amending the bill so far as related to accounts, but so much of the bill as related to partnership must be dismissed with costs. Boucicault v. Delafield.—The Colleen Bawn.—In this case the question was raised, whether an author had any copyright in his own work. Mr. Boucicault had applied for an injunction to restrain Mr. Delafield from performing his Colleen Bawn. Mr. Delafield pleaded that the piece had been acted in America before it was brought out in England; that it was therefore a foreign play, and as such he had a right to perform it, under the sanction and subject to the provisions of the International Copyright Act. Vice-Chancellor Wood said the construction of the Act left him no alternative; he must hold that Mr. Boucicault had lost his title to prohibit the representation of the piece.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—Parry v. Great Ship Company.—The plaintiff showed cause against a rule obtained by the defendants, calling upon him to show cause why the judgment and execution obtained by him as a creditor against the Great Eastern steam ship for 5350*l.* should not be set aside. The debt was to have been covered by an insurance at a given day, but the Court held that the directors did not keep their agreement, and the Great Ship is now therefore to be sold for a judgment debt of 5350*l.*

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.—Attorney-General v. Sellim and Others—The Seizure of the Alexandra.—This was an information containing 90 counts, filed by the Attorney-General, with the view of obtaining on the part of the Crown the condemnation of the ship Alexandra, as well as of imposing penalties or imprisonment upon certain persons concerned in the equipping, fitting out, or furnishing of the ship, contrary to the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act. The case was tried in this court at the sittings after last term at Westminster, before Lord Chief Baron Pollock and a special jury. The trial lasted four days and resulted in a verdict for the defendants. During the present term the Attorney-General obtained a rule to show cause why there should not be a new trial, on the ground mainly that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and of misdirection by the Chief Baron in his summing up to the jury. The Attorney-General having formally moved to make the rule absolute, Sir Hugh Cairns on the part of the defendants showed cause against the rule, urging that no case had been made out to disturb the verdict of the late jury, or induce a new trial. He commented at great length on the meaning of the Foreign Enlistment Act, which he said had not been infringed by the construction of the Alexandra. On Wednesday Sir Hugh Cairns finished his argument in opposition to the new trial, and Mr. Karslake followed on the same side. On Thursday the Attorney-General addressed the Court in reply, and contended that to send one vessel unarmed from our ports, and another with an armament, which was to be taken on board by the first outside the limits of the national jurisdiction, must be treated as one act, and as if the whole were done within our jurisdiction. Yesterday the Attorney-General continued his address, and had not concluded when the Court rose.

Obituary.

THE DOWAGER LADY BOLTON died on Monday at the Rectory, Odiham. The deceased lady, the Hon. Maria Carleton, who was eldest daughter of Guy, first Lord Dorchester, was born August 20, 1777, so that her ladyship was in her 77th year. She married, May 8, 1810, William Powlett, second Lord Bolton, by whom, who died in July, 1850, her ladyship had no issue.

ADMIRAL SIR JOHN GORDON SINCLAIR, BART., of Stevenson and Murkle, died at Stevenson House on Friday last. He was eldest son of the seventh Baronet by the daughter of the fourth Duke of Gordon, and was born in Edinburgh in 1790. In 1812 he married the daughter of the Hon. Admiral Michael de Courcy, by whom he leaves issue. He succeeded his father in 1795, and was a Deputy-Lieutenant of the counties of Haddington and Caithness. At the actions of Morgion and Cassis he greatly distinguished himself, and was for some time Captain of the port of Gibraltar. He is succeeded in the Baronetcy by his son, Robert Charles Gordon Sinclair, born in Paris in 1820, and Captain in the 38th Foot since 1849.

MR. PHILIP BURY DUNCAN, D.C.L., late Fellow of New College, Oxford, and honorary D.C.L. of the University, died on the 12th inst. at his seat, Westfield Lodge, Bath, in his 92d year. The "brothers Duncan," John Shute and Philip Bury Duncan, successively keepers of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, both munificent contributors to it and to every scientific and literary institution at Oxford and in Bath, were the sons of a Hampshire gentleman of substance. Mr. Philip Duncan was born in 1772, and was early sent to Winchester School, where his brother, about three years his senior, had formed friendships with the late Archbishop Howley and Lord Sidmouth, which lasted for their respective lives. John Shute Duncan was a Fellow of New College, and was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1798, but never practised; was appointed keeper of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford in 1823, and resigned his office in 1826; was created D.C.L. in 1830, and died in 1844. "Phil. Duncan" was also a Fellow of New College, and was a distinguished naturalist like his brother, who was one of the ablest botanists in England, and the author of a well-known work on "Botanical Theology." Philip Duncan succeeded his brother in 1826 at the Ashmolean, and all Oxford men during the succeeding 28 years will remember his zealous devotion to science, his liberal donations to all scientific institutions in Oxford, his kindness of heart, and pleasant manners. All Wykehamists, New College men especially, will hear with regret of the death of the oldest member of Wykeham's noble foundations—one who, like his excellent brother, was proud of his school and college, and would do anything to further the interests of Wykehamists either by purse or by kindly counsel. Mr. Duncan presented casts of the most admired ancient statues to the Radcliffe Library. He and his brother were the restorers to utility of the museum founded by Elias Ashmole. In the catalogue of this museum the reader will see almost a majority of the most interesting objects—vertebrated and invertebrated animals, bimana, quadrumana, cheiroptera, birds, reptiles, fishes, together with leaves and seed-vessels and antiquities of all sorts, with the initials "J. S. D." or "P. B. D." as the donors, appended to the titles. Besides this, Mr. Duncan's purse was always opened for the benefit of any scientific scheme. He and his brother were the mainstay of the Literary Institution at Bath, and on his brother's death the eminent antiquarian and ecclesiologist Mr. J. H. Markland, while eulogising Mr. John Shute Duncan, spoke of Philip Duncan as the "excellent relative of the deceased, allied not only by blood, but by kindred pursuits and virtues." After an honourable connection with Oxford of 60 years, Mr. Duncan, in March, 1854, resigned his keepership of the Ashmolean, and a week or two afterwards the senior out-going proctor, Mr. Chase, of Oriel (now Principal of St. Mary Hall) spoke in feeling terms of the loss sustained by the University in the retirement of Mr. Duncan. He was created hon. D.C.L. a year or two afterwards with universal applause. Mr. Duncan was the author of various works—an essay on sculpture, a paper on Roman relics (read before the Ashmolean Society in 1836), a volume of lectures on various subjects, delivered before the Bath Institution, &c.

COVENT GARDEN, Nov. 21.

All kinds of produce in season are abundant. Pine Apples are unusually well supplied; prices for them are lower than last week. Imported Grapes realise 8d. to 1s. per lb. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Chaumontel, Glou Morceau, Monsieur le Curé, and Beurré Diel Pears. Some good samples of Ribston Pippin and Cox's Orange Pippin Apples may still be obtained. Kent Cobs are good and plentiful. New St. Michael Oranges realise from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Primroses, Mignonette, and Roses.

The following are this day's quotations:—Yorkshire Flukes, 90s. to 95s. per ton; do. Regents, 70s. to 80s.; Kent and Essex Regents, 70s. to 80s.; do. do. Rocks, 50s. to 60s.; Perth, Forfar, and Fifeshire Regents, 65s. to 75s.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Nov. 16.

The number of Beasts is considerably smaller than on Monday last, and the demand is good; consequently, on the average prices are rather better. Sheep are not quite so plentiful; trade is by no means brisk. Choicer descriptions meet with purchasers at late rates, but other kinds are rather lower. Trade remains as on Thursday for Calves. From Germany and Holland there are 1740 Beasts, 6780 Sheep, and 352 Calves; from Scotland, 108 Beasts; from Ireland, 960; and 2780 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Nov. 19.

The number of Beasts is about the same as on Thursday last. Trade is dull, and Monday's quotations are scarcely maintainable throughout. The supply of Sheep is smaller; and although there is not a large demand, late prices are fully maintained. Calves are rather lower than on Monday. Our foreign supply consists of 790 Beasts, 2089 Sheep, and 290 Calves. Milch Cows, 35.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Nov. 16.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was small, and the condition inferior to what it has been of late; nevertheless, it was quickly realised at the extreme rates of this day se'nnight. Foreign Wheat was taken at an improvement of 1s. per qr. Fine malting Barley continues in good demand at full prices, other descriptions are unaltered in value. Beans are the turn dearer. Peas bring late rates. The Oat trade is firm, and old corn brings an advance of 6d. per qr. American Flour is 6d. per barrel dearer.

FRIDAY, Nov. 20.

The weather although somewhat dull since the 18th has been fine and mild. The Wheat trade during the past week has shown great firmness, and a slight tendency towards improvement; extreme prices, and in some markets a slight advance, have been realised. A similar tendency has been observable in all kinds of spring corn and barrel Flour. Since Friday last 28 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been very firm; the small number of cargoes off the coast has caused the business to be very limited. Wheat has risen 1s. per qr., Maize 6d., and holders ask for a further advance; Beans and Barley are improving. In Paris (Nov. 19), prices are rising for Flour, and business has been a little more active than of late. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 9d. per 280 lbs. The present stock is estimated at 8660 cwt. Wheat is about 9d. per 480 lbs. dearer. The arrivals of English and foreign Barley are large, of all other grain small. To-day's market was thinly attended. English Wheat commanded the extreme rates of Monday last, and Foreign being generally held for an advance of 1s. to 2s. per qr., caused business to be limited. Barley is unaltered in value. Beans and Peas firm. Oats are the turn dearer.

ARRIVALS THIS WEEK.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 17.—Our market has been pretty numerously attended to-day, and a fair consumptive demand has been experienced for Wheat at the extreme rates current on Friday last. Flour commands a moderate extent of sale without change in value. Indian Corn is held for an advance of 6d. per quarter, which is found to check business. Oats and Oatmeal are less active. Beans must be quoted 3d. per quarter dearer. Peas and Barley have undergone no alteration. The market closes steady.

FRIDAY, Nov. 20.—Market moderately attended. Wheat: good demand, and prices fully 1d. dearer. Rather more inquiry for Flour at previous rates. Indian Corn dull. Egyptians Beans steady. Oats and Oatmeal unchanged.

FLUCTUATIONS IN THE LAST SIX WEEKS' AVERAGES.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Nov. 19.

Our market is in an attitude of observation as to the termination of the present financial crisis, and as soon as that wished for consummation has been arrived at, it is presumed matters will go on as heretofore, as stocks generally are held by substantial men, who are not disposed to sell at less money with the certainty of not being able to replace this side of next shear day.

DAY, SON, AND HEWITT, Inventors of the "Stock Breeder's Medicine Chest;" containing DAY'S EXTRACT and GASEOUS FLUID, which are to the Stock Breeder and Farmer of the most inconceivable value, inasmuch as paining in Ewes in bad lambing, Cows in bad calving, swollen udders, sore teats, and all bad wounds, bruises, and swellings in all Animals, are dissipated and finally annihilated by the "Extract," while the "Gaseous Fluid" for Ewes weakly after bad lambing, Cows after bad calving, Mares after bad foaling, by its balsamic and electrical influence imparts the greatest life and animation. It is proverbial for its marvellous cure of the Fret, Colic, and Gripes in Horses, and for Diarrhœa (or Scour) in Calves, Sheep, and Lambs. Such is the permeation of the "Extract" by rubbing in, and of the "Gaseous Fluid" by dosing, that they draw the acrid humours which cause disease out of the parts affected, and excite the curative powers of nature into action; when life, vigour, and the soundest health ensue. This is the secret of their wonderful popularity. Price of "Extract," 2*s.* 6*d.* and 7*s.* per bottle; or quarter of dozen in wood box, 7*s.* 6*d.* "Gaseous Fluid," 1*s.* 8*d.* per bottle, or 20*s.* per dozen in wooden box. Plain directions for use given with every Article.
☞ Caution. Counterfeits are being hawked about at markets, some as "DAY'S," and others as "DAY & Co.'s," to avoid which be sure and ask the person soliciting orders, "Are you travelling for DAY, SON, & HEWITT?"

THE GENERAL LAND DRAINAGE and IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,

Offices: 52, Parliament Street, S.W.

HENRY KER SEYMER, Esq., M.P., Chairman.
Sir J. VILLIERS SHELLEY, Bart., M.P., Vice-Chairman.
J. BAILEY DENTON, Principal Engineer.

Under this Company's Act tenants for life, trustees, mortgagees, guardians, committees of incompetent persons, beneficial lessees, corporations (ecclesiastical or municipal), incumbents, charitable trustees, &c., may effect the following land improvements, and charge the outlay and expenses on the estate improved, by way of rentcharge, to be paid by half-yearly instalments, viz:—

1. All works of Drainage, Irrigation, Warping, and Embankment.
2. The Erection of Farmhouses, Cottages for Agricultural Labourers, and all kinds of Farm Buildings.
3. The Construction of Roads.
4. The Grubbing and Clearing of Old Woodlands, Enclosing, Fencing, and Reclaiming Land.

The owners of estates, not entailed, who may be desirous to avoid the expense or inconvenience of a legal mortgage, may also charge their Estates with an outlay in improvements under the simple and inexpensive process of the Company's Act.

The term of years for the rentcharge is fixed by the landowner, so as to adapt the amount of annual payment to the circumstances of the tenants, the term for building works being limited to 31 years.

No investigation of title being required, and the charge not being affected by encumbrances, no legal expenses are incurred.

The arrangements for effecting improvements are threefold:—

No. 1. The works may be designed and executed entirely by the landowner's agent, and the Company employed only to supply the loan and conduct the matter through all the official forms for charging the outlay on the estate.

No. 2. The Company will supply plans, specifications, and estimates for any improvements to be executed by the landowner's agent as under No. 1. In each of these cases the landowner will be solely under the control of the Enclosure Commissioners.

No. 3. The Company will undertake the entire responsibility of the improvements, prepare the plans, execute the works, and finally charge on the estate the actual amount expended, with their commission thereon, approved by the Enclosure Commissioners.

Landowners may thus obtain what assistance they require from the Company, and no more, in effecting the objects in view.

Works of Drainage and other improvements are also executed on commission for landowners, who merely require the skill and experience of the Company's officers and a staff in constant practice.

Applications to be addressed to WILLIAM CLIFFORD, the Secretary, at the Office of the Company, 52, Parliament Street, S.W.

THE LANDS IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

Incorporated by Special Act of Parliament in 1853.

2, Old Palace Yard, Westminster, S.W.

TO LANDOWNERS, THE CLERGY, ESTATE AGENTS, SURVEYORS, &c. IN ENGLAND AND WALES AND IN SCOTLAND.

The Company advances money, unlimited in amount, for the following works of Agricultural Improvement, the whole outlay and expenses in all cases being liquidated by a rent charge for 25 years.

1. Drainage, Irrigation and Warping, Embanking, Inclosing, Clearing, Reclamation, Planting, for any beneficial purpose, Engines or Machinery for Drainage or Irrigation.
2. Farm Roads, Tramways and Railroads for agricultural or farming purposes.
3. Jetties or Landing places on the sea coast or on the banks of navigable rivers or lakes.
4. The erection of Farm Houses, Labourers' Cottages, and other Buildings required for Farm purposes, and the improvement of and additions to Farm Houses and other buildings for farm purposes.

Landowners assessed under the provisions of any Act of Parliament, Royal Charter, or Commission, in respect of any public or general works of drainage or other improvements, may borrow their proportionate share of the cost, and charge the same with the expenses on the lands improved.

No investigation of title is required, and the Company being of a strictly financial character do not interfere with the plans and execution of the Works, which are controlled only by the Government Enclosure Commissioners.

For further information, and for forms of application, apply to the Honourable WILLIAM NAPIER, Managing Director, 2, Old Palace Yard, Westminster S.W.

PRICE'S CHILD'S NIGHT LIGHTS are perfectly safe, and burn their time. The quality of these Night Lights can now be relied on.

SHERWOOD BED LIGHTS, Sixpence and Eighteenpence a box.—These candles are made to supply a want very generally expressed, a cheap, really good Chamber Candle. They will be found inferior only to "PRICE'S CANDLES, WHICH WILL NOT DROP GREASE WHEN CARRIED," which are sold in boxes, 1s. and 3s. each.

GLYCERINE, which very simple tests show to be impure, is being sold on the statement that "it is in every respect equal to Price's." Most medical men prescribe "PRICE'S GLYCERINE." Where purity is of importance patients can ensure it by desiring to have their Glycerine in 1 lb., 8 oz., 4 oz., or 2 oz. bottles, with capsule over the stopper marked "Price's Patent."

News of the Week.

HER MAJESTY'S Government, after holding numerous Cabinet Councils for the consideration of the EMPEROR'S proposal of a Congress to discuss the affairs of Europe, resolved on Wednesday definitively to decline the invitation. It was stated last week that the Government had asked for information as to the subjects which the EMPEROR proposed to submit to the attention of the Congress. The French Government, in reply, specified four subjects of discussion—Poland, Italy, the Danish Duchies, and the Danubian Principalities. Her Majesty's Government, therefore, proceeded to consider these subjects, and to determine whether there was any prospect that the discussion of them by a general Congress would be of advantage to Europe or to the countries themselves. The conclusion at which they arrived was that Russia, after having rejected the intervention of three such Powers as France, Austria, and England, would probably refuse to discuss the Polish question before the representatives of all Europe; that Austria would oppose any discussion of the Venetian question or the recognition of the Italian Kingdom; that the affairs of Denmark and the Duchies were already provided for by a Treaty signed by the five great Powers; and that the state of the Danubian Principalities presented no difficulties which called for the interposition of a Congress. While therefore courteously acknowledging that the Emperor NAPOLEON was actuated by a sincere desire for peace, in inviting the other Powers to settle with him the questions which now disturb the Continent, they have come to the conclusion that it would be useless or prejudicial to assemble a Congress to discuss them, and have therefore declined to accede to the proposal.

The excitement caused by the Schleswig-Holstein question is rapidly increasing throughout Germany, and the whole nation appears unanimous in the determination to support the claims of Prince FREDERICK, in opposition to those of the KING of DENMARK. In the Prussian Chamber of Deputies the Liberal party has given notice of a motion that all the German States are bound to support the claims of the PRINCE, and the Conservative party has announced its readiness to place all requisite means at the disposal of the Government for the maintenance of the rights of the Confederation. The Upper House of the Saxon Diet has passed a strong resolution in favour of the independence of the Duchies, and the Chamber of Deputies of Hesse Darmstadt has unanimously resolved to request the Government to maintain the right and integrity of Germany by the recognition of Prince FREDERICK. The committee of the National Verein have issued an address to the German princes and people calling on them to maintain the rights of Germany and the Duchies, and it is said that the Committee of the Federal Diet have decided to propose the immediate adoption of Federal execution in Holstein.

The Prussian Government has given effect to the recent vote of the Chamber of Deputies, condemning the press ordinance as unconstitutional, by cancelling the ordinance by royal decree. In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday the Government introduced a Bill on military service. With the exception of some changes in the wording, this Bill is the same as was presented last session, and retains the article stipulating for three years' service.

Accounts from New York inform us that General LEE, whose force is said to be diminished to 30,000 men, has retreated beyond the Rapidan, after having suffered a surprise by General MEADE's advance when the Federal army crossed the Rappahannock. General LEE is now strongly entrenched on the south side of the Rapidan, and General MEADE's army is posted between the Rapidan and the Rappahannock. General BURNSIDE has met with a disastrous defeat in Tennessee, and is said to have been superseded by General FOSTER. The reported capture of Fort Sumter is not confirmed, and the bombardment was still in progress on the 10th inst. Lord LYONS has acquainted the Federal Government with the existence of a plot among the Confederate refugees in Canada, to seize the steamers on Lake Erie, liberate the prisoners in Fort Johnson, and burn the lake cities. The three Chief Justices of Pennsylvania, constituting a majority of the Supreme Court of that State, have declared the Conscription Act to be unconstitutional.

Accounts from Japan have been received through San Francisco to the 6th October. They state that all foreigners had been ordered by the Japanese authorities to leave Nagasaki, but had refused compliance. The Japanese Governor therefore resigned, and several of the Ministers who were in favour of peace with the Christian nations were dismissed from office. A French officer having been murdered by the Japanese, immediate reparation was demanded, and war by the combined French and English force was considered imminent. The Dutch also intended to avenge the insult offered to their flag, and were said to be getting ready for active operations.

Home News.

THE COURT.—On Thursday week the Duke of Newcastle left the Castle for London. The Duke of Nemours and Princess Marguerite of Orleans arrived on a visit. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. On Friday morning the Queen walked and drove in the grounds, accompanied by the Crown Princess. Count and Countess Bernstorff left the Castle for London. Earl Russell had an audience of the Queen. In the evening Prince Arthur arrived from Greenwich Park. On Saturday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked and drove in the grounds. In the afternoon the Queen honoured Mr. Frith with a fourth sitting for his picture of the Prince of Wales's marriage. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, and Prince Leopold honoured the Windsor Theatre with their presence to witness The Ghost Illusion, as exhibited by Professor Pepper at the Polytechnic Institution. Sir George Grey and the Rev. Dr. Stanley arrived on a visit. On Sunday morning the Queen, with the Crown Prince and Princess, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Prince Arthur, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service in the private chapel. The Rev. Dr. Stanley preached the sermon. On Monday morning the Queen drove out. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia and the Princess Hohenlohe came to London and visited the studios of Mr. Theed and Mr. Foley. Prince Arthur left the Castle for Greenwich Park. Sir G. Grey returned to town. On Tuesday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Crown Princess of Prussia, drove in the grounds of the Castle. In the evening the Prince and Princess of Wales arrived at the Castle. On Wednesday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Princess of Wales, walked and drove in the Home Park. The Prince of Wales and the Crown Prince of Prussia went out shooting. In the afternoon the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Princess Hohenlohe, drove out in a carriage and four. In the evening Earl de Grey and Ripon arrived at the Castle and had an audience of her Majesty. On Thursday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Helena and Princess Hohenlohe, visited Prince Arthur at Greenwich Park. The Royal party travelled by special train from Windsor to the Clapham junction, and thence by the Brighton Railway to Beckenham, where they took the South-Eastern line to Lewisham. The Royal carriages were there in attendance to convey her Majesty and the Royal party to Blackheath. In the afternoon the Queen returned to Windsor by the same route. The visit was strictly private.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—On Friday the Prince joined the meet of the West Norfolk hounds at Sussex Farm, Burnham. The Princess accompanied the Prince, driving a pair of greys. On Sunday their Royal Highnesses attended Divine service at Sandringham Church. The Rev. G. B. Moxon officiated. On Tuesday afternoon the Prince and Princess left Sandringham for Windsor, where they will remain on a visit to the Queen until her Majesty takes her departure for Osborne, which will be about the 12th December.

THE CROWN PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF PRUSSIA.—On Saturday the Crown Princess laid the foundation stone of the new church at Windsor, in the presence of the Crown Prince, Princess Louisa, Prince Arthur, the Bishop of Oxford, the Dean of Windsor, and a large body of visitors. On Thursday the Crown Prince and Princess, Prince William, and Princess Charlotte, went to Claremont, and visited Queen Marie Amelie.

COURT MOURNING.—The Gazette of Friday contained an order from the Lord Chamberlain for the Court to go into mourning for three weeks from Sunday the 22d inst., for the late King of Denmark.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Monday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street. Another Council was held on Tuesday, and another on Wednesday. The rumour which was current last week that Earl Russell had resigned, or was about to resign, the seals of the Foreign Office, and that the Earl of Clarendon would be his successor, is said to be entirely without foundation.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—By an Order in Council, Parliament is further prorogued to the 13th of January next.

KNIGHTHOOD.—Mr. Collier, Solicitor-General, and Mr. Carey, Bailiff of Guernsey, were presented to her Majesty on Monday by Sir George Grey, Secretary of State for the Home Department, and received the honour of Knighthood.

THE CHANNEL FLEET.—It is announced that Admiral Dacre's divison of the Channel fleet will leave Spithead on Tuesday next for Copenhagen, to be present at the coronation of King Christian of Denmark.

THE COURT-MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.—On Saturday the cross-examination of Lieut. Fitzsimon was continued. He stated that he did not post the sentries inside the sergeant-major's room; that he thought they must have incommoded Mrs. Lilley, but he did not inquire or go inside to see that the annoyance should be as little as possible. At the close of the cross-examination, Colonel Crawley intimated that he had no further questions to ask of the witness. The prosecutor also stated that he had no intention to re-examine him. On Monday the cross-examination of witnesses, which had occupied the whole of the three previous days, came to an end, and the prosecution made some further progress in the charge. Several commissioned and non-commissioned officers testified to their being present when Colonel Crawley gave the order that the sentry should not lose sight of Lilley night or day, and in reply to remarks that the prisoner was married, and that his wife was sick, said he did not care, married or single his orders must be carried out. One of the sentries, however, stated that the orders were that the sentries should not go into Mrs. Lilley's bedroom. On Tuesday the officers who had been called as witnesses for the prosecution on the preceding day were cross-examined by Colonel Crawley, with the view of showing that they bore a grudge against him, and had been reprimanded for the animus they displayed in the course of their examination on the former trial. On Wednesday some letters written by Colonel Crawley about the time of the sergeant-major's death, and giving his version of the affair, were read. Among the witnesses examined were the sergeant's wife, who attended Sergeant-Major Lilley in his last illness, and who gave an affecting account of his death, and the surgeon who attended the sergeant-major and his wife. He spoke highly of both of them, and refuted the charge of intoxication brought against Mrs. Lilley, by stating that she took brandy as a medicine by his orders. His impression was that she was inconvenienced by the proximity of the sentry in the second quarters to her bedroom, and that the sergeant-major's death, which was caused by apoplexy, was likely to have been accelerated by his confinement. On Thursday the witnesses of the previous day were cross-examined by Colonel Crawley, with the purpose of showing that they had a grudge against him, and of proving from the testimony of Surgeon Turnbull that Sergeant-Major Lilley had indulged during his arrest in spirituous liquors. Yesterday Colonel Crawley resumed the cross-examination of Surgeon Turnbull, who said that he did not know from personal knowledge that Sergeant-Major Lilley was addicted to drink, that he did not make any medical inspection of the Sergeant-Major, because he did not anticipate his death as a probable consequence of his arrest, the circumstances of which appeared to him of so unusual and mysterious a nature that he did not know exactly how to act in the matter.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—It is believed that M. Fould's financial statement will be presented to the Emperor immediately after the verification of the elections. The election of M. Isaac Pereire, the well-known capitalist, for the Pyrenées Orientales, has been declared null and void, after a very lengthened debate, on the ground that he distributed his wealth so liberally among his constituents as unduly to influence the election. The Mémorial Diplomatique says that the replies to 15 out of the 20 letters of invitation addressed by the Emperor Napoleon to the Sovereigns are all in the affirmative, and that none of the five Governments which have not yet officially answered will refuse. It is now however announced that her Britannic Majesty's Government, after having applied for frank and cordial explanations of the Imperial programme, and after fully discussing M. Drouyn de Lhuys' reply, has come to the conclusion that no possible advantage can be expected from the Congress, and has therefore courteously declined the invitation. The Patrie states, under reserve, that the Emperor, without wishing to draw up a programme for the Congress, had expressed an opinion that it should be chiefly occupied with considering the following subjects:—Poland, the German Duchies, Rome and Venice, and the Danubian Principalities. On Thursday Baron de Budberg, the Russian Ambassador, delivered to M. Drouyn de Lhuys the reply of Russia to the invitation. Several versions of this reply are current. The Patrie asserts that the adhesion of Russia is made subject to the condition of the abandonment of the Polish question, and L'Europe states that it expresses a wish that a programme should be drawn up; while the Nation asserts that it contains no such stipulations. It is not true, as asserted by several papers, that Baron de Budberg has been invited to Compiègne. It is said that the French Government have decided not to support the claims of M. de Lesseps in the matter of the Suez Canal. The Patrie of Wednesday evening asserts that the Mexican Government will pay to France an annual indemnity calculated upon the footing of 1400fr. for every man left in Mexico. The Emperor has granted from his privy purse a pension of 6000fr. a year to the mother of Madlle. Emma Livry, the actress, who was burnt to death on the stage, and a sum of 40,000fr. to defray the expenses attendant on her illness. The statue of Napoleon I., lately removed from the Place Vendôme, having been cleaned and repaired, has been placed on its new pedestal at the Rond Point of Courbevoie. As it now stands at a height of only 80 feet from the ground, it looks to greater advantage than it did in its former elevation of upwards of 130 feet. The French iron-clad squadron arrived at Cherbourg on Wednesday.

SPAIN.—The Senate on Thursday passed the address in reply to the Queen's speech. On the previous day the Cortes were declared definitively constituted. Senor Rios Rosas was elected President. An accredited rumour has reached Madrid of the destruction by a Spanish vessel of two American ships laden with arms and munitions for the San Domingo insurgents. The Madrid journals repeat the rumour that General Dulce had demanded the despatch of 30,000 men to San Domingo. It is stated that the Government supports the pretensions of the Archduke Maximilian of Austria for the Mexican throne. A decree has been published converting Spanish money into specie of the same standard as foreign coin, in order to place obstacles in the way of the exportation of bullion.

MOROCCO.—The question of the limits of Melilla has been decided, and Muley Abbas has paid indemnities to the proprietors of the land. Grievous complaints have been made of the treatment received by the Jews from the Spanish officials in Morocco. It is said that on the allegation of very trivial offences these officers insist on the Moorish authorities inflicting punishments, the severity of which is out of all proportion to the alleged offence. Sir Moses Montefiore, at the request of the London Board of Deputies, has arrived in Morocco personally to investigate these complaints.

PORTUGAL.—A great fire broke out in Lisbon on Thursday night in the building of the Bank of Portugal, and spread to the Municipal Chamber, the Fidelity Insurance-office, and about 50 adjacent shops and houses. Everything valuable in the Bank was saved, but several documents in the Municipal Chamber were lost. Several persons perished. The fire has been completely extinguished, although not until the buildings were gutted. The conflagration was the greatest there has been in Lisbon for many years.

SWITZERLAND.—The Federal Council has replied to the Emperor Napoleon, accepting his invitation to a Congress, and expressing a hope that the treaties will be respected as they have been up to the present.

SWEDEN.—Count Manderström announced on Tuesday in the Diet that the King replied on the 15th to the Emperor Napoleon that he would be present in person at the Congress. The death of the King of Denmark has occasioned an immense sensation in Sweden. It is said that great distrust of King Christian IX. and excitement against Prince Frederick prevail at Stockholm. General Bildt arrived at Copenhagen on Saturday as Ambassador Extraordinary, to convey the condolence of the Swedish Court upon the death of the late King. It is said that the General comes provided with the authorisation necessary for the final conclusion of the treaty of alliance between Sweden and Denmark. In the sitting of the Diet on Monday the Government applied for an extraordinary credit of 3,000,000 thalers for military armaments. Orders have been despatched to Carlscrona to prepare screw ships for sea, and to recall the Swedish war steamers Vanadis and Gefle from the Atlantic. The Committee on the National Debt has resolved to postpone contracting a new loan until further proposals are received, more particularly from abroad.

DENMARK.—The Prince of Wales has been created a Knight of the Order of the Elephant. The Rigsraad on the 19th went to the Palace in a body, and presented an address of congratulation to King Christian. His Majesty thanked the President for his address, and stated that the new common constitution for Denmark and Schleswig has only just been sanctioned, because it was an important step that he had been desirous of carefully weighing, as the Rigsraad had also done. Great cheering proceeding from large numbers of people, the King and his family stepped out upon the balcony and bowed their thanks. Deputations from the municipal councils of the Danish kingdom and Schleswig have arrived at Copenhagen to thank the King for sanctioning the common constitution. Herr Schael-Plessen has been appointed Minister for Holstein. Great activity is displayed in the War and Marine Departments: 11,000 soldiers have been called out, and two screw frigates, two screw schooners, and two iron-plated schooners are to be fitted out. The King has sent General Oxholm to Paris, the bearer of a favourable reply to the invitation to an European Congress. The body of the late King has been removed to Copenhagen, where the ceremony of lying in state will take place. His Majesty had several times expressed a wish that his body should not be wrapped up in the usual grave-clothes, but should be placed in the sheets in which he died. The body therefore was not embalmed, but deposited in a lead coffin, which was immediately soldered up. Delegates from various parts of the kingdom have arrived in Copenhagen to concert measures for the erection of a monument to the deceased Monarch. It is intended that this monument shall be in the form of an equestrian statue, and that it shall be placed in front of the Christian-borg Palace.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—Prince Frederic of Augustenburg has notified his assumption of the Dukedom of Schleswig Holstein to all the Governments composing the German Confederation, and has appointed Privy-Councillor Sommer his representative in the Federal Diet, and Colonel Du Plat as the director of his military affairs. He has also proposed, through his representative at the Diet, that measures should be taken for the protection of the functionaries in Holstein who have refused to take the oath of allegiance to the King of Denmark. The Prince, after having had interviews with the King of Prussia and his Ministers, left Berlin on the 19th for Frankfort. A public meeting of about 2000 Schleswig-Holsteiners and persons holding similar opinions in favour of Prince Frederic was held at noon on Sunday. The President announced that General Bandissin was ready to undertake the command of the volunteers, and that 55 officials assembled at Kiel had determined to refuse to obey the orders received from Copenhagen to take the oath of allegiance to Christian IX. The University professors, the members of the Court of Appeal, and other officials are among those who intend refusing to take the oath. The officials of the Superior Court of Appeal for the whole of Holstein in Gluckstadt, the Administration of the county of Rantzau, the Chamberlain Von Moltke, all the magistrates and judges, the professors in the public schools, nearly all the members of the legal profession, and the entire staff of the Holstein Government, from the chief official downwards, have unanimously resolved to refuse to take the oath of allegiance to King Christian. The Dagbladet of Thursday however says that all the Custom House officers, Post Office and telegraph officials in Holstein, all the members of the Government in Plöen, together with the sub-employés and all the prefects of Holstein, have taken the oath; and that several of the most prominent members of the Holstein nobility have arrived at Copenhagen, and been received by his Majesty.

HAMBURG.—The branch of the National Verein located in Hamburg, has laid down the principle, in general meeting, that if the Schleswig-Holsteiners will not separate from Denmark, they must be compelled to do so.

SAXE-GOTHA.—The Committee of the National Verein sent Herren Bennigsen and Fries to Gotha on Tuesday, as a deputation to the Prince of Augustenburg. The Prince received the deputation, and in reply to their address, said:—

"In the affair of the Duchies there must be no distinction between Governments and peoples, nor any party difference among nations. The people's sense of right is the best guarantee for the rights of Princes. It has been possible to oppress the people of Schleswig and Holstein in the name of the rights of Princes, and in the name of the rights of a Prince I shall deliver them, and by the help of God will soon do so."

HESSE DARMSTADT.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday, it was unanimously resolved to request the Government to maintain the right and integrity of Germany by the recognition of the Prince of Augustenburg as Duke of Schleswig and Holstein. The resolution further expressed the readiness of the Chamber to support the Government with all the means of the country in carrying out this course.

SAXONY.—In the sitting of the Saxon Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday, Baron von Buest, in reply to a question from one of the members, said that the Ambassador of Saxony at the Federal Diet had received instructions to protest energetically against the readmission of a Danish Ambassador to the Diet until the Schleswig-Holstein affair should be settled, and to recommend that a corps of Federal execution should occupy Holstein and Lauenburg until the transfer of both countries by the Confederacy to the Prince who may be recognised as the legitimate successor. The Minister concluded by saying that unity among all the members of the Confederation is now above all necessary. In the sitting of Wednesday, the following resolution was passed:—

"The Chamber, in expressing its satisfaction with the declaration made yesterday by the Government, and assuming that the latter will at the same time use their efforts for the maintenance of the rights, not only of Holstein, but also of Schleswig, declares that the people of Saxony and its representatives are ready to support the Government in every way, even should it become necessary to adopt the most extreme measures."

In the sitting of Thursday a proposition recognising the rights of the Prince of Augustenburg and promising the Government the support of the Chamber, was unanimously adopted.

HANOVER.—A large public meeting, consisting of some 12,000 persons of all classes, has determined, amid great enthusiasm, to address a petition to the Ministry. The tenor of the address is that the Ministers should advise the King to despatch the troops intended to enforce Federal execution at once into Schleswig-Holstein, to uphold the legitimate Government.

FRANKFORT.—The deputation of the Holstein Estates which met at Kiel has arrived in Frankfort. At the sitting of the Diet on Saturday announcement was made of the change which has taken place in the occupant of the Danish throne. The renunciation of his rights by the Duke of Augustenburg, and their transfer to his eldest son as Duke of Schleswig-Holstein and Lauenburg, were handed in. Notices of motions affecting the succession questions in Holstein and Lauenburg were given upon the part of some of the Governments of the Confederation. These, similarly with the previous announcements, were referred to the committee on the affairs of Holstein. Motions of Austria and Prussia referring to a protest against the Royal sanction of the Danish constitutional law upon the 18th inst. were also handed in. The Diet further received a protest from the members of the Schleswig-Holstein Estates. The sitting of the Diet has since been adjourned to Saturday, but in the meantime it is reported that the Committee of the Diet has decided to propose the immediate adoption of Federal Execution in Holstein.

OLDENBURG.—The Grand Duke of Oldenburg despatched on the 17th inst. a protest to M. Hall, at Copenhagen, declaring that the accession of Prince Christian to the throne is not founded on right. An illegal accession to the throne not being binding, the Duke lodges a protest of his views, and reserves to himself the right of taking further steps.

PRUSSIA.—A Royal decree was published on Saturday, at the instance of the Ministry, in conformity with Article 63 of the Constitution. The decree withdraws the order of the 1st of June, referring to the prohibition of newspapers and periodicals. In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday a Government Bill was laid on the table relative to military service. With the exception of some changes in the wording, it is the same measure as was presented last Session. The article stipulating for three years' service is maintained. In the sitting of Monday, Herren Stavenhagen and Virchow, in the name of the Liberal party, moved that:—

"The honour and interests of Germany demand that all the German States should support the rights of the hereditary Prince Frederick to the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein."

A committee was elected on Monday to report on this motion. In the sitting of Thursday Herren von der Heydt, Wagener, and Blankenburg proposed the following resolution on behalf of the Conservative party:—

"In the present position of the succession to the Duchies of Holstein, Schleswig, and Lauenburg, the House declares itself ready to place all requisite means at the disposal of the Government for the energetic guardianship of all the rights of the German confederation."

On Tuesday the Committee of the National Verein at Berlin issued an address reminding the Princes of their serious responsibility, imploring the German nation to act for itself, and calling upon the friends of the country to furnish men, money, and arms, and to hold all resources in readiness. It promises application of the funds collected for the German fleet in a manner corresponding with the emergency, and demands self-taxation by the people, and finally exhorts the nation to firm organisation, stating that the National Verein has formed an auxiliary committee for the purpose. It is stated that the 6th and 13th divisions of the Prussian army, numbering together 35,000 men, have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to take the field.

AUSTRIA.—In the sitting of the Lower House of the Reichsrath, on Wednesday, Count Rechberg stated that he would reply to the question on Holstein on the next day. He was only awaiting the arrival of a diplomatic document from Paris, and would then be enabled to lay the correspondence on the subject before the House. The statement of the Vienna papers that Prussia and Austria had sent identical instructions to their representatives at the Federal Diet, that, as the offspring of a morganatic marriage, Prince Frederick of Augustenburg had no hereditary claim to the Duchies, is emphatically denied.

RUSSIA.—It is said that the Cabinet of St. Petersburg is endeavouring, by an amicable intervention, to prevent a struggle between Germany and Denmark, which might involve all Europe. It is understood that the Empress of Russia, who is at present in the Crimea, will proceed to Nice in the hope of improving her health at that place. The Grand Duchess Helène and the Grand Duchess Marie will accompany her Majesty.

POLAND.—The National Government has published four addresses from the Governments of Wilna, Wietebsk, Kowno, and Grodnow, bearing 250,000 signatures, protesting against the expression of loyalty extorted by General Mouravieff, and expressing entire devotion to the National Government. A proclamation has been issued at Warsaw by the National Government denying the rumours, proceeding from Russian sources, that the Poles were on the point of laying down their arms. The proclamation announces a continuance of the war as the only means of saving the country. It also states that the forces of the insurrection are on the increase, and that the Russians have proved themselves unable to govern otherwise than by fire and sword. The official Dziennik publishes an ukase, removing from office Alexander Laski, appointed director of the Warsaw Bank, who was forbidden to accept the post by the National Government. The first Russian elementary school has been opened at Warsaw. Arrests continue to take place in Warsaw. Among those lately arrested are the brothers Jasinski and Maslowski, M. Bock, Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, M. Chalabinski, MM. Miszynski, Luszczenski, and Pietkowski, directors of departments of the civil administration; an editor named Kucz and a large number of the workmen at the manufactories of Messrs. Fraget and Winter. Madame Bausemer and several other ladies have also been arrested and imprisoned in the citadel. The son of the banker Rawicz has been hanged at Siedlec by order of the Russian General Maninkin. Bodies of Poles are continually being deported from the government of Augustowo to Siberia. The Czas announces that General Prince Wittgenstein has gone to the government of Kalisch to extort addresses of loyalty to the Czar. Chmielinski gained a victory over the Russians near Czarnocala, on the 20th inst., in consequence of which the insurgents occupied the town of Gora, on the Vistula. A company of infantry and two sotnias of Cossacks have been defeated by the insurgents near Lenizna, in the government of Lublin. In the district of Gostyn, Tyrewicz's cavalry corps has been dispersed by the Russians. An outbreak on the part of the peasants has taken place in the Government of Augustowo, and foreigners residing there are compelled to sign loyal addresses to the Czar. The insurrection in the government has extended to such a degree that the chief town, Suwalki, is threatened by the insurgents, and in the forest of Zywewody, near Suwalki, a Russian detachment fell into an ambuscade, and was defeated by the insurgents. The insurrection is again extending in Lithuania, which is infested by bands of guerillas. The insurgents are said to have been victorious in engagements near Biala and Kalwarga, and to have captured a Russian convoy of munitions in the district of Poniewicz. An important engagement is also said to have taken place near the Niemen in that province. Fresh bands have appeared in Samogitia, in the district of Rossiene and Grodno.

ITALY.—The King arrived at Turin on Sunday morning. On the previous day his Majesty was present at the inauguration of the Central Railroad. In his passage through Bologna the King paid a visit to General Cialdini, who has been for some time ill in that city. His Majesty was loudly cheered by the people, and seemed much pleased. The letter of the King accepting the Emperor's invitation to the Congress was despatched on Wednesday to Paris. In the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday Signor Ara defended the treaty of commerce with France. Signor Rica opposed the treaty, and requested a modification of the articles relating to the fisheries in French waters. The Minister of Marine spoke in support of the treaty. In the sitting of Wednesday the Minister of Commerce said he did not desire an equivocal approval of the treaty, leaving doubts in the public mind of its intrinsic worth. He required it to be entirely approved. He believed the treaty to be a useful one, corresponding with the just expectations of the country, and stated it to be worthy of the two nations who had concluded it. The Minister's speech was much applauded. The debate was resumed on Thursday, on which day the Senate was occupied with the national taxation. The soldiers are being recalled from their furloughs, and the garrisons increased in the Venetian provinces. The works on the fortifications are also being accelerated. The Official Gazette publishes a notice stating that, notwithstanding the protests made by some of the Bishops, the Government has decided to carry out the provisions and regulations relative to the exequatur and the placet royal. The Russian Ambassador at Rome, Count de Kisseleff, is about to marry the widow of Prince Ruspoli, and the daughter of Prince Torlonia, the banker. The Court of Rome has refused a dispensation, and partially disgraced Prince Torlonia, the father of the bride. As the Ambassador is of the Greek faith, the marriage will consequently take place in Paris. Count de Kisseleff will not return to Rome, but will, it is believed, be appointed Russian Ambassador at Madrid.

TURKEY.—It is said that the Sultan has made a favourable reply to the Emperor's invitation to the Congress., but like the other Powers, has made preliminary inquiries and imposed certain conditions on his participation in it. The Sheik-ul-Islam, the great obstacle to progress and financial reform in the Council of Ministers, was dismissed on Wednesday. The Budget has been officially published. The surplus and other figures are substantially the same as those already made known. The Imperial decree ordering the publication, proclaims reform and retrenchment as being permitted by circumstances.

EGYPT.—The Paris papers publish a telegram from Alexandria stating that the Bedouins in the vicinity of Mocha have revolted, pillaging the coffee crops and other produce. Djeddah and Mecca are quiet. Ismail Pacha is in Upper Egypt.

MADAGASCAR.—Advices received at the Mauritius from Madagascar mention a rumour that King Radama is still living. He was left for dead by the assassins, but is said to have been found by his partisans, and concealed.

INDIA.—Lord Elgin and Sir Hugh Rose have left Simla on their winter tour, and are now travelling towards the Punjaub, so that the news of the junction of their camps may be expected shortly. The bulk of the troops are to be at Lahore on the 10th December. The man apprehended at Ajmere as the arch rebel Nana has been identified as a high priest of the Mahrattas. He still remains a prisoner at Cawnpore, and it is his declared determination to sue Government for false arrest and imprisonment. It is said that four Italians who had entered Bokhara for the purpose of making investigations into the silk cultivation of that country, have been imprisoned as spies by the Khan. The political mission to Bhootan, under the Hon. Ashley Eden, will start for its destination as soon as the rains have ceased.

JAPAN.—Advices from Japan state that a French officer had been murdered by the Japanese. Immediate reparation was demanded. Hostilities by the combined French and English forces were generally expected; and the Dutch are also said to be making active preparations to avenge the insult offered to their flag. The Mikado had issued an order that no Daimio should purchase any foreign vessel. The Prince of Nagasaki had ordered the execution of the pilots who conducted the Federal steamer Wyoming to Simoniski. One of them was murdered soon afterwards. The Chief Minister and three other members of the Cabinet of Nagasaki had been dismissed for favouring peace with the Christians. All foreigners had been ordered to leave Nagasaki, but they refused to do so, whereupon the members of the General Government resigned.

UNITED STATES.—It was reported by the last mail that General Lee, whose force had been diminished to 30,000 men, had retreated beyond the Rapidan with all his army, but it now appears that he is in strong force on the Rapidan, where he is vigorously intrenching his position, and that a considerable force is still north of the river, as is proved by their shelling Kirkpatrick's camp, near Stevensburg, on the morning of the 13th. General Meade maintains his position between the Rapidan and the Rappahannock, near Cedar Mountain. General Stuart's cavalry is still operating north of the Rapidan. It is asserted that Lee's army was well fed, but ill clad, and that it was his intention to go into winter quarters between the Rappahannock and the Rapidan, but was taken by surprise by Meade's rapid advance against him. General Meade's report of the battle of Gettysburg has been published. He captured three guns and 13,000 prisoners. The Federal loss amounted to 23,000 killed, wounded, and missing. General Meade also officially reports that in the actions at Rappahannock Station and Kelly's Ford the Federals captured 1900 prisoners, four cannon, and eight colours, and lost 370 men in killed and wounded. The defeat of the Confederates in Western Virginia and the occupation of Clarksburg by Generals Averill and Duffie have been officially confirmed. The Federals captured 100 prisoners and a large quantity of war materiel. A disaster has occurred to General Burnside's outposts at Rogersville, in Tennessee. The Federals lost 600 prisoners and four cannon. The number of their killed and wounded has not transpired. General Burnside reports that the main body of his army is in an impregnable position near Rogersville. The Confederate Generals Rhoddy, Ferguson, Chalmers, and Richardson are in Northern Mississippi, co-operating against General Sherman's line of communications. In Tennessee General Forrest, with a large body of cavalry, has been detached to harass General Grant's transportation of supplies. The Government has impressed all the steamboats and railways at Cincinnati for the transport of troops to General Grant, who is to be immediately reinforced by upwards of 30,000 men. Letters from New Orleans to the 4th state that no news from General Banks's expedition had yet been received. Speculation pointed at Point Isabel, Texas, as its real destination. The further progress of General Franklin's army had been found impossible, owing to the impassible state of the roads, and it was believed that the expedition would be abandoned. Telegrams from Charleston of the 10th report the bombardment of Fort Sumter as still in progress. The whole number of shots fired at the fort during the present attack is 9340, of which 7700 have taken effect. The Confederate flag was shot away every day, but immediately replaced. There had been no firing upon Charleston. Chief Justices Lowrie, Woodward, and Thompson—the first two Democrats and the last a Republican, together constituting a majority of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania—have declared the Conscription Act to be unconstitutional. Lord Lyons has officially informed the Government at Washington of his receipt of despatches from the Governor-General of Canada announcing a plot among the Confederate refugees in Canada to seize the steamers on Lake Erie, liberate the Confederate prisoners at Johnson's Island, in Sandusky Bay, and attack the principal Lake cities. Secretary Stanton has warned the authorities of those cities, and advised the arrest of all suspicious vessels in the different ports. General Dix has also been sent to Buffalo to inspect the frontier defences, while a large military force and a gunboat have been sent to defend Fort Johnson in case of attack. Mr. Seward has refused permission to certain parties to recruit 20,000 troops for the service of the Juarez Government, declaring that such proceedings would be a violation of the law, and that any one engaged therein will be prosecuted with all practicable diligence. It is semi-officially announced that Mr. Seward has received information that the French Government has stopped the building of Confederate iron-clads in French ports. Mechanics and other large bodies of working men in New York and in Boston have struck for higher wages, stopping the construction of Government vessels and injuring other branches of trade. The strike was beginning to assume formidable proportions in the principal Northern cities, when the Government and the employers generally acceded to the demands of the workmen, on account of the increased prices of articles of consumption. It is reported from Washington that on board the Confederate steamer Robert E. Lee, captured a few days since, were Mr. C. E. Stewart, Belgian Consul, H. H. Webber, and H. W. Rooke, of the British army. Important despatches from the Confederate agents in Europe were found in the vessel, or picked up in the water. These latter are said to express an entire hopelessness of any assistance for the Confederacy from either England or France. The Richmond Inquirer thinks the South should be informed why foreign recognition is withheld, and whether slavery is the cause or not. The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald states that the Haytian Minister is so disgusted with his treatment in Washington, that he will reside permanently in New York. Marshal Forey, after visiting the Falls of Niagara, has sailed for France in the French gunboat Panama. He maintained a strict incognito while at New York, but visited General Scott. Another Russian fleet is expected daily. The steamers Robert Lee, Cornubia, Ella, and Annie have been captured.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS.—At the Court of Common Council on Friday, Alderman Copeland asked whether the Metropolitan Board had any knowledge of certain public works which were being carried out at Odessa, by Mr. Furness, the contractor for the Thames Embankment, and if so, whether Mr. Bazalgette, the engineer to the Board, was interested in them. Mr. Lowman Taylor, one of the representatives of the corporation at the Board, in reply said that it was too true as respected the engineer to the Board; that the matter had oozed out in a Chancery suit to which Mr. Bazalgette had been made a party, and was now under the consideration of a committee of the Board. It was said that Mr. Bazalgette was to participate in the profits of the works in question to the extent of 2 per cent., and that he would realise about 10,000*l.* In answer to other questions Mr. Taylor said that the estimate of Mr. Furness for the embankment was higher by 25,000*l.* than one of the other estimates that was sent in; and it was upon the recommendation of Mr. Bazalgette that his tender was accepted. On the same day at the Marylebone vestry, after hearing the statements of Messrs. Nicholay and D'Iffanger, their representatives at the Board of Works, it was unanimously resolved that the members for Marylebone be requested to watch, at the Metropolitan Board, the proceedings in regard to the recent contracts for the Thames embankment, and communicate any information on the subject they may think necessary, from time to time, to the vestry. On Wednesday the committee of the Board, after sitting three days upon the subject, agreed to report that after a minute investigation it had been proved that though the contract of Mr. Furness at 520,000*l.* was much higher than those of Mr. Kidley, Messrs. Baker, and Mr. Moxon, it was by no means through the influence of the chief engineer that that tender was accepted. On the contrary, it was established that the engineer was in favour of Messrs. Baker having the contract. This showed that there was no collusion between him and the contractor whose contract has been accepted. At the same time the fact could not be disputed that Mr. Bazalgette had committed a breach of his engagement with the Board in carrying out other works without their sanction or knowledge. This report having been read, a resolution was moved to the effect that the Board regretted to find that the engineer in chief had entered into monetary arrangements with one of the contractors, but, at the same time, expressing their conviction that there had been no collusion between him and the contractor for the Embankment works; that nothing had occurred to affect his professional or personal honour, and that he had always fulfilled his duty to the Board with integrity, ability, and punctuality. An amendment was moved by the members for St. Pancras stating that, although the terms of the chief engineer' agreement with the Board were that his whole time and attention should be devoted to their service, he had unadvisedly entered into arrangements with one of the contractors, whereby he was to receive large sums of money in the shape of commission, but as the evidence distinctly showed that it was his wish that the contract should be given to Messrs. Baker, no collusion existed between Mr. Bazalgette and Mr. Furness with respect to that contract. They therefore recommended the Board to call the engineer's attention to the terms of his agreement, and that in future the whole of his time and energies be devoted to the Board, and that he at once unhesitatingly give up all claims under the agreement, which it was felt he had improperly entered into. Mr. Bazalgette having voluntarily handed in a guarantee in writing to carry out the suggestion made in the last paragraph of the amendment, the original resolution was carried by 11 to 9. At the weekly meeting of the Board yesterday, this resolution, on the motion of Mr. Freeman, seconded by Mr. Tite, M.P., was adopted.

AMERICAN THANKSGIVING DAY.—In pursuance of the proclamation of the President of the United States, inviting his "fellow-citizens in every part of the United States, and also those who are at sea, and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November as a day of thanksgiving and prayer to our beneficent Father who dwelleth in Heaven," a number of Americans resident in London assembled at St. James's Hall, under the presidency of the Hon. R. J. Walker. The day was observed as a holiday by the Americans in London and in all parts of the country, and business was suspended at the legation and at the consulates. The proceedings commenced with a brief address from the Hon. R. J. Walker, after which the thanksgiving proclamation of President Lincoln was read. Prayer was then offered up by Mr. Sellar Martin, a negro, in whose adventures as a runaway the public were a short time since much interested. The company then sang in unison a hymn composed for the occasion. A banquet followed, at which the Hon. Mr. Walker, who officiated as chairman, delivered an address on the origin and progress of the rebellion, and the prospects of its speedy suppression, concluding by proposing "The Health of the President of the United States." The toast was drunk with great enthusiasm, and was acknowledged in a speech of great length by Mr. Adams, the American Minister. Several other toasts and sentiments were duly honoured in the course of the evening.

FALL OF A HOUSE AT ISLINGTON.—On Thursday, about mid-day, the Three Wheatsheaves Inn, which was in course of being rebuilt opposite Islington Green, suddenly fell, and buried nine of the workmen in the ruins. Two of them are dead, and the rest lie at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in so precarious a condition that some of them are not expected to recover.

LEGACIES TO STATESMEN.—A lady resident at Torquay, as a mark of her admiration of Mr. Disraeli, has left him a legacy of 40,000*l.*, and appointed him sole executor under her will. The lady was an entire stranger to the right hon. gentleman. A similar case has just been made known in regard to the late Sir James Graham. In May, 1834, Sir James, who was then First Lord of the Admiralty, left the Cabinet of Earl Grey on account of the decision of the Cabinet to entertain the question of appropriation of Church property to secular purposes. In the following month Mr. George Blamire, a native of Cumberland, and a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, differing from Sir James Graham as to politics, to show his satisfaction with Sir James Graham for abandoning office and quitting his party from a conscientious sense of duty, made his will, leaving to Sir James Graham absolutely all his real and personal property, worth perhaps 40,000*l.* Mr. George Blamire died in the course of last summer, and his will has been proved, but as Sir James Graham died in October, 1861, the legacy lapses, and Mr. Blamire's property will be divided among his next of kin.

IRON SHIPS OF WAR.—Mr. E. J. Reed, Chief Constructor of the Royal Navy, delivered a lecture last week at Greenwich, on the subject of "Ships of War." After describing the various iron-cased ships which have been built in England, he contended that the Warrior and ships of her class were too long. He firmly believed that the same rate of speed could be obtained from shorter vessels. The attention of the Admiralty had been much devoted to this question, and he could assure them that no more iron ships for the Royal Navy would be laid down of such a length as 400 feet. While one of these long vessels had a large portion at each extremity exposed, a shorter vessel could be armour-plated from end to end, and would sail as many knots per hour. These matters did not escape the attention of those now at the head of naval affairs. Naval construction was a peculiar art, resting upon abstruse branches of science, and involving principles and calculations with which non-professional men in office could not prudently interfere in an arbitrary manner, and hence the practice of the profession was to run in grooves, out of which it was most difficult to remove, even in times of the greatest emergency. In fact, it was only by a violent wrench, by giving sudden and unexpected scope to younger men and new ideas, that the thing could be done at all. When it had to be done it was attended by such pain and disappointment to many that it required great nerve and courage to undertake it. That had recently been proved in his own case, some extremely penetrating and pure-minded people having discovered that his appointment to his present office was a "disgraceful job." He supposed these people thought it disgraceful for a Board of Admiralty to appoint to an office involving much hard work a man who had neither attained the age of 60, or taken part in elections in what are called "Government boroughs." He then discussed the question of the comparative merits of ships built entirely of iron, or with a backing of timber, and expressed an opinion in favour of the latter class. The late disaster to the Prince Consort proved in a remarkable manner the vast strength of the wooden hull of that ship. An officer who was sent to Kingston to inspect the vessel after she came to grief reported:—"From one end of the ship to the other, not one bolt-head had been disturbed." It scarcely ever happened that an ordinary wooden ship, without an iron plate upon her, after encountering a Channel storm, returned to port with such trifling damage as that done to the Prince Consort. He could state with the utmost confidence that the Admiralty was now building a corvette from which the swiftest iron vessel now afloat could not hope to escape, and which would be armed in a most effective manner.

EXPERIMENTS AT SHOEBURYNESS.—A preliminary trial of Sir William Armstrong's 600 pounder gun, lately manufactured at Elswick for the War Department, was made on the 19th inst. at Shoeburyness, with the most satisfactory results. The gun weighs upwards of 22 tons, and is mounted on an ordinary gun carriage of great size and strength. Its length over all is 15 ft., that of the bore being 12 ft. Its internal diameter is 13.3 in., and it is rifled on the "shunting" principle. The grooves are 10 in number, and turn once in 65 calibres. In its construction it differs little from the other large muzzle-loading guns manufactured under Sir William Armstrong's direction, consisting of a number of coiled tubes of enormous strength shrunk one upon the other. The thickness of the walls of the gun at the breech is 20.85 inches, the total diameter at the trunnions being 55 inches. It carries a conical cast-iron hollow-headed shot, weighing 510 lbs., or a shell of ordinary construction weighing 600 lbs., and capable of containing a bursting charge of no less than 40 lbs. of powder. The charge used on the 19th with shot was 70 lbs., with shell 60 lbs., and it fired 10 rounds without the slightest flaw. The gun was easily served by a party of 20 men. At first, not being accustomed to such a monster, the men worked rather slowly, but as they became used to their work they at last succeeded in abridging the space of time between the rounds to 10 minutes. The destructive powers of the gun will be enormous. A shell with a bursting charge of 40 lb. may be readily fired from it, the largest charge yet used in a shell being no more than 8 lb. On Friday the 9-inch muzzle-loading gun made at Woolwich, and rifled on the plan proposed by Mr. Lynall Thomas, was tried with 10 rounds of shot with somewhat unsatisfactory results, both the velocity and range of the shots fired being very unequal. This gun, which carries a 300 lb. shot, closely resembles an ordinary muzzle-loading Armstrong in outward appearance, the muzzle, however, being more prolonged. Mr. Thomas's invention consists in substituting a series of ribs for the usual grooves. The shot are made with grooves coated with soft alloy to fit the ribs of the gun, and are similar in form to those used in the Armstrong, but appear to be slightly longer. It is not known when Mr. Thomas's gun will be tested with shell.

THE RAISING OF HOLBORN VALLEY.—The improvement committee of the Court of Common Council have awarded premiums of 250*l.* and 150*l.* respectively to Mr. Richard Bell and Mr. T. C. Sorby, for the two best of a class of designs for raising Holborn Valley, making honourable mention at the same time of the designs of Mr. Frederick Wallen, Mr. Lewis H. Isaacs, Mr. F. Marrable, Professor Kerr, Mr. J. Wormald, and Mr. Henry R. Newton. They have also given notice of an intended application to Parliament in the next Session to authorise the Corporation to make a viaduct for the purpose of a high-level street commencing on Holborn Hill, near Ely Court, passing Hatton Garden, Ely Rents, Ely Place, and terminating in Skinner Street, near the Old Bailey. The following improvements are specified in connection with the scheme:—A new street, commencing near the junction of Hatton Garden with Holborn Hill, and terminating in Farringdon Road, near West Street; a new street, commencing near St. Sepulchre's Church, Skinner Street, and terminating in Farringdon Road, about 50 yards to the north of Snow Hill; a new street, commencing by a junction with Shoe Lane, near St. Andrew's Church, passing under the viaduct, and terminating in the intended new street, at a point about 45 yards west of its intended junction with Farringdon Road; a widening on the western side of Farringdon Road between Holborn Hill and the junction of the intended street, nearly opposite West Street; an alteration of the levels of Farringdon Street and Farringdon Road, commencing near Newcastle Street and terminating about 230 ft. north of New Charles Street; power to alter and improve the levels of the western approach to the Metropolitan Meat and Poultry Market in Smithfield; to widen the western end and northern side of Newgate Street, commencing at the corner of Giltspur Street, and terminating at and including No. 105, Newgate Street; and to widen King Street, commencing near its junction with Smithfield, and terminating at its junction with Snow Hill. Powers are also sought to charge the expenses of the works to be authorized upon the duty referred to in the 2d section of the London Coal and Wine Duties Continuance Act, 1863, to authorize the appropriation to that purpose of any moneys arising from that duty, and to authorise the Corporation to raise money on mortgage or annuity, and to apply for the above purposes any moneys under their control.

PROPOSED CAVALRY BARRACKS AT CHELSEA.—On Saturday a numerous deputation from the inhabitants of Chelsea waited upon Earl de Grey and Ripon, Secretary of State for War, to protest against the proposed site for new cavalry barracks in that district. Mr. Tite, M.P., introduced the deputation and read a memorial issued by the Chelsea vestry, from which it appeared that the Government intend to pull down the barracks at Knightsbridge, and erect others on a plot of land called "Quail's field," on the south side of Sloane Street. The memorial pointed out the injury the erection of the proposed barracks would do to the house property in the neighbourhood, and suggested that it would impede improvements now contemplated, and that a better site might be found on the Surrey side of Chelsea Suspension Bridge. Mr. Tite, the Rev. Mr. Burgess, rector of Upper Chelsea, and the Rev. Mr. Neven expressed their concurrence in the memorial, and said that the barracks would be injurious to the rating of the parish. Earl de Grey said there could be little doubt that whatever locality might be chosen similar complaints would arise. He would admit that barracks in any district were not desirable, but he had to deal with the exigencies of the service. There was one point upon which there was complete certainty, and that was that the cavalry barracks at Knightsbridge were most inconvenient, and that the sooner they were pulled down the better. Although he had inspected several sites, that at Chelsea was, on the whole, the best that could be found. As to the non-payment of rates by these military establishments, that was a question which might fairly be considered by the Treasury. The deputation had suggested a site which might be appropriated to the purpose on the opposite side of the river. But taking into consideration the position of the Houses of Parliament, the Royal palaces, and public buildings, he felt that it would be a fatal objection in a military point of view, that they should have the river between the barracks and those places. Mr. Simons suggested another site, which was not liable to this objection, between the new Chelsea barracks and the river. The Rev. Mr. Burgess said he had another suggestion to offer, and that was that a portion of the immense grounds of the Royal hospital might be appropriated for this purpose. Out of the 66 acres which the hospital and grounds occupied he was sure that 20 acres and upwards might be appropriated to this purpose. Earl de Grey said he did not see how far he should be justified in making such a proposal as that just suggested, but the whole question should have his mature consideration.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—The Master of the Rolls on Saturday ordered the Great Ship Company to be wound up. It had previously been announced that Messrs. Cunard, Wilson, & Co., of Liverpool, would offer the ship for sale by auction on the 14th January, by order of the mortgagees. At a meeting of the Company on Tuesday, Mr. Hawes reported that the attempt to raise 60,000*l.* from the shareholders to relieve the company from its difficulties had failed, and said that it appeared as though the shareholders had determined to allow the company to be wound up. The appeal to the shareholders had only produced 3000*l.* in cash and a promise of 4000*l.* more, and under the circumstances the money subscribed would be returned in full.

THE LATE MURDERS IN A CAB.—Some additional light has been thrown on the recent tragedy, by the publication of some letters addressed by the murdered wife to her sister, from which it appears that she was very cruelly treated many months before her death. She states that her husband continually beat her till she was bruised from head to foot, two or three times cut her, and repeatedly threatened to put an end to her life. At the beginning of the present year he threatened to kill her in such a manner that he would not be found out, stating that he could melt her to nothing all but her hair. She continued to address these complaints to her sister down to a week or two before her murder, telling her not to be surprised if she heard she was dead, and begging her to keep the letters, no doubt that they might be used as evidence against him in case of her meeting with a violent death. It is remarkable however that the letters make no reference to her children, and that it never seems to have occurred to her to ask the protection of a magistrate from her husband's violence.

CHILD MURDER.—A girl named Wolf has been committed for trial for the wilful murder of her infant. She was in service at Belsize Park, Hampstead, and the body of the child was found concealed in a drawer in her mistress's house.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH. — The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended on Saturday, November 21, were 1475, being 28 less than the corrected average of the last 10 years. During the week the births were 1970, which was more than 100 above the average.

ALDERSHOT.—On Thursday week a plasterer of Exeter, named Bartlett, arrived at Aldershot to have an interview with his wife, who has been living with a soldier for some time. He found her at the house of a Mrs. Niel, and had been with her about two hours when it was suggested that she and several other persons who were there should go and have something to drink at a neighbouring beerhouse. They accordingly proceeded there, when Bartlett suddenly seized his wife and cut her throat. Medical men were immediately sent for, and found that her throat had been cut in three places, one wound having partially severed the jugular vein and the windpipe. They succeeded in tying one of the principal arteries, but there appears to be faint hopes of her recovery. The husband was immediately secured, and a razor stained with blood was found within a few yards of the spot where the woman had fallen. On the way to the police-station the prisoner said if his wife died he should die happy, as he came down with the intention to do for her. He also said he should ask the favour of being allowed to go back to Devonshire to be executed. He is about 27 or 28 years of age.

AUCKLAND.—Down to Saturday afternoon the Union pitmen out on strike at Messrs. Straker & Love's collieries, in the Auckland district, had not settled with their employers. The matters first in dispute had been reduced to a question of wages, and no further overtures had been made by either masters or men. During last week ample notice having been given, a number of pitmen and their families were ejected from their cottages, but accommodation was found for them by the Union in the village of Willington and the neighbourhood. In the middle of the week the conduct of some of the pitmen became very riotous, but the excitement calmed down without any very violent outbreak. On Saturday, however, in consequence of the non-Union men having been threatened, extra policemen were placed at the collieries. Their notice having expired, the men at the South Medomsley colliery, to the number of 60, went on strike, demanding the erection of a weigh beam at bank, and an advance of wages. The strike still continues at Spennymoor colliery, and the owners have expressed their determination to close the mine rather than submit to the terms proposed by the Union. Placards have been issued by the men at Stanley, Thornley, and Kelloe collieries, intimating that an advance of wages had been demanded. A dispute between the owners of Felling colliery and the men, which arose last week about prices, is likely to be amicably settled. The notices for a reduction in wages in one or two of the pits in the Northumberland steam coalfield expired on Monday, but in this case also there is a prospect of the masters and men coming to an amicable understanding.

BIRMINGHAM.—On Saturday night the wife of Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy, the barrister, who has so often been before the public in connection with the Swinfen estates and the trials arising out of them, fell down the stairs of her own house, and fractured her skull so severely that she died in the course of the next day. At the inquest which was held on Wednesday, it appeared from the evidence that all the family were at home; that Mrs. Kennedy had gone to her bedroom, and was supposed to have come out again for some night-linen, when she fell down the stairs. Her husband immediately ran to her assistance, and a surgeon was sent for, but she never rallied, and died on Sunday evening. The jury returned a verdict of Accidental Death.

CAMBRIDGE.—On Tuesday Earl Powis was installed as High Steward of the University of Cambridge, with the usual formalities. The ceremony took place at his lordship's mansion in Berkeley Square. The Vice-Chancellor officiated on the occasion, assisted by the members for the University; the Masters of St. John's, Clare, and Jesus; the Proctors, the Public Orator, the counsel to the University, the Registrar, and many members of the University resident in London. In the evening a large party of gentlemen connected with the University dined with the High Steward at the Clarendon Hotel. Mr. Henry Fawcett, Fellow of Trinity Hall, was elected Professor of Political Economy yesterday by a large majority, the numbers being, for Mr. Fawcett, 90; Rev. J. B. Mayor, 80; Rev. L. H. Courtney, 18; Mr. H. D. Macleod, 14.

DEAL.—Lord Clarence Paget on Friday night was present at a dinner given by the Mayor of Deal, and in returning thanks as Secretary to the Admiralty, said that the bombardment of Kagosima was not intended by the Government or the Admiral when he was sent up to punish the Daimio who had murdered an English subject. If there had not been a gale of wind blowing at the time the forts only would have been destroyed. The storm which raged, however, prevented the gunners of the fleet from taking accurate aim, and thus the town was shelled. The damage unfortunately done to the property and lives of the innocent townspeople is deplored as much by the Admiral commanding the squadron, and every officer and man in it, as by the Government or the public of this country. With regard to the efficiency of the navy, he referred to the recent accident to the Prince Consort, and declared that she had proved herself an admirable sea-boat.

GUILDFORD.—A disgraceful riot took place in this town on Saturday evening. The detachment of troops which had been sent in the beginning of the month from Aldershot to prevent the usual disorders which prevail in the town on Guy Fawkes' day, remained until Thursday last, when it was marched back to the camp. This protection being withdrawn, the "Guys" came out on Saturday evening, masked and armed with bludgeons. They demolished the windows of one of the magistrates who had made himself obnoxious to them, and did great injury to the house of the ex-Mayor. They then attacked a policeman who came in their way, and beat him so savagely that for two days he was not expected to live. After committing these outrages they dispersed before the special constables could be marshalled against them. Bills have been issued offering 200*l.* for the apprehension and conviction of any of the rioters.

MANCHESTER.—A deputation from a portion of the distressed operatives who had been receiving relief from the Manchester Board of Guardians waited upon the Mayor on Monday, at the Town Hall. They marched in procession to the hall, headed by a lorry, which was surmounted by a huge placard, upon which was written "Motto of Freedom—A fair day's work, and a fair day's wage, and no Bastile to keep our wives and childer from starvation!" The procession contained about 200 persons, many of them lads. The Mayor courteously informed the deputation that he could not interfere with the proceedings of the guardians, and that some public works would soon be provided for Manchester. The deputation then attended an out-door meeting in Stevenson Square, and reported the result of their interview with the Mayor.

OUNDLE. — The Fitzwilliam hounds met at Cotterstock Lodge, near this town, on Monday. The horse of the master of the hunt, the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, fell in crossing a low fence, and threw the master heavily to the ground. Mr. Fitzwilliam was conveyed to the nearest house, and medical assistance was called in. It was then found that his collar-bone was broken, and that he had received some severe bruises. Later in the day he was conveyed to Milton in a fly, and hopes are entertained of his speedy recovery.

ROCHDALE.—On Tuesday evening Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright addressed a large meeting in this town, at which not less than 3000 people were present. Mr Cobden said that although there was no longer any question of free trade and protection to discuss, there were still the questions of taxation and the expenditure of the Government. The next Parliament would have to be endowed with new principles at the next general election. Some people said there was a popular apathy with regard to politics, and he must confess that the people of England just now much more anxiously attended to the proceedings of other countries than to those of their own. It was as if the daily morning dram of Reuter's telegrams was more acceptable than home politics. With regard to America, he still did not believe that the war would issue in the achievement by the South of their so-called independence. Nineteen-twentieths, however, of society in London—that was to say the upper 10,000—were of a contrary opinion; but their knowledge of America, like the knowledge of the newspapers, was sadly limited. The civil war in America was not a war for free-trade principles, but a war waged for the purpose of extending and perpetuating human slavery, and not to defend it as it existed. It was a war to establish a slave empire, of which slavery should be the corner-stone. It was the aristocracy of the South fighting against the democracy of the North. Whenever an aristocracy had done that elsewhere they had never succeeded, and so it must be with the struggle in America. If such a thing as a division of America should happen, it would be fraught with a great loss to human progress all over the world. Already we could see what the struggle had led to in Mexico and St. Domingo. If it had not been for the American war the French would not have made the Mexican mistake, nor Spain that of attacking St. Domingo. As to the Polish question, we had misled the Poles and aroused the Russians against us en masse. With regard to the proposed Congress, he disapproved of it altogether, unless they proposed to disarm. The only benefit, so far as he could see, to be derived from a congress was that which would arise from a general disarmament. Diplomacy would be a failure, as it had been hitherto. The diplomatic arrangements of the Paris Congress of 1856, after the Russian war, had only led to 1,000,000 more men being armed in the two services of the European countries, and he feared that the result of the proposed Congress would be much after the same fashion. He then spoke of the burning of Kagosima, which he characterised as great a barbarity as that of the burning of Polish villages by the Russians, and if there was such a thing as the retributive justice of Providence, which he believed there was, he felt sure that we should be visited by it for own un-Christian cruelties and massacres in Japan, China, and other places east of the Cape. He advocated an extension of the franchise, and was sure that for granting that no better time than the present one of quietness could be selected. He said that the condition of the English peasantry had no parallel on the face of the earth. There was no peasantry but that of England which was entirely divorced from the land. Our colonies were more free, Italy was more free, Germany was more free than we were, and we did not maintain our relative position in advance of other countries. There was no other country in the world where you would not find men holding the plough and turning up the furrow upon their own land. He did not want any agrarian outrages by which to change all this; but this he found, and it was quite consistent with human nature, that wherever he went the condition of the people was generally pretty good, in comparison with the power they had to take care of themselves. Mr. Bright, M.P., also addressed the meeting at considerable length. He urged that if the question of free trade and protection was settled, there yet remained to be discussed the great questions of taxation and parliamentary reform. He strongly advocated the admission of the masses to the franchise, and asked if it was an unchangeable decree of the Most High that more than half the population of this country should live in houses of not more than five pounds' yearly value, and that their children should grow up, in comparison with those of the wealthier classes, to a great extent uncared for and untaught? If we were fairly represented, he said, the agricultural labourer throughout the United Kingdom would be redeemed from that poverty and serfdom which up to this time have been his lot. The system which brought vast tracts of land into the possession of one man was a curse to the country, and doomed the agricultural labourer to perpetual poverty and degradation. As to the civil war in America he said that that country, now in mortal strife, afforded a haven and a home for multitudes flying from the burdens and the neglect of the old Governments of Europe, and when this mortal strife was over, when peace was restored, when slavery was destroyed, when the Union was cemented afresh, then Europe and England might learn that an instructed Democracy was the surest foundation of Government.

Ireland.

THE EXODUS.—Every steamer that leaves Queenstown is crowded with emigrants, and hundreds of families are preparing to leave the country. Dr. M'Hale, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tuam, has addressed a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the subject, in which he says that the emigration is sweeping away the population, and threatening to cast the entire young race of Ireland on the coasts of America. The following are extracts:—

"By the sure operation of the unerring laws of justice, vengeance is recoiling upon those by whom it has been so long and so cruelly exercised; and the systematic work of agrarian evictions, artificial famines, and forced emigration has now reached such a crisis as to terrify the British officials by whom it has been projected, as well as their Irish agents, by whom it has been so zealously carried on. The alarm that has seized the Government and the landlords springs not, it is manifest, from a concern for the tenant class, but from a consciousness of the social calamities which the flight of its stalwart inhabitants is bringing on the country in which their own interests are so seriously involved. And yet we hear not, on the part of the landlord class, any repentant declaration that they will strive, by granting leases on equitable terms, to remedy the evil which now appals them, nor any indication on the part of the Government that they will connect the interests of the landlord and tenant by making the franchise depend on the condition of a certain profitable and secure tenure of house or farm; nor is there finally any hope held forth that those detested prisons, the workhouses, shall be abolished, which are the most effectual instruments in driving the people from Ireland, any foreign land, with freedom and the reward of industry, being preferable to such penal incarcerations. Nor is the axe yet laid to the root of that hideous evil, the Protestant Church Establishment, so long acknowledged, deplored, and stigmatised as the standing scandal of our land and the shame of its Government. No, nor amid the inglorious scramble for place that now occupies the few who are tempted by the cheating hope, are there found in the present crisis of the fate of Ireland any who seem to bestow a serious thought on the protection of that too faithful people by whose heavy and repeated sacrifices those ungrateful men were placed in a position to dare to hope for those trifling honours and emoluments, to which the safety of the great mass of the Irish nation is continued to be so unscrupulously sacrificed. And yet the tragic farce that Ireland's destination is to be a feeder of cattle is not yet ended. In vain has the sad conviction been tardily forced on the country that with the contraction of the area for agriculture, its flocks and herds have been diminished in the same proportion. The aggregate meetings with which the country is now familiar are cattle shows in the morning, while their congenial owners crown the evening with banquets, giving expression to a novel sort of eloquence, which could find no favour beyond the precincts of the bucolical school—boasting of the peace which they call the solitude they have created, and boasting too of a still more extraordinary triumph—that they have reversed the sacred ordinances promulgated at the morning of creation, and that man is now obliged to yield dominion to the beasts of the field. It is no wonder if men of spirit, and possessing the means, should fly from a conflict so degrading and a doom so disastrous. They are flying, and in despite of all dissuasions from whatever quarter, they will continue to fly in such numbers and with such rapidity as remind one of the melancholy figures of our bards, comparing them to the flight of birds after the capitulation of Limerick. They know the terrors of war, as well as of the deep which they have to encounter; but neither war nor the deep has for them any terrors compared to the insecure, precarious, nay fugitive and savage mode of life to which the laws have doomed them, aggravated by the treachery of broken promises and violated covenants, on the part of unfaithful men, in which they are resolved no longer to confide. It is in vain then that landlords, now changing their tone, beseech their tenantry to stay—it is in vain that the obsequious scribes of a Government which so long treated them with cruelty implore of them not to go. Their resolve, however to be regretted, appears determined, as long as their just claims are so mercilessly unheeded. And hence the cool and stern indifference with which they leave a land that has lost for them the endearing character of a parent, and with it all the sacred attractions and security of home."

Law.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER: Case of the Alexandra.—On Saturday the Solicitor-General occupied the whole day with his argument against the verdict in the former trial and in favour of the interpretation of the Foreign Enlistment Act which had been given by the Attorney General. On Monday the Queen's Advocate addressed the Court for the Crown, and was followed on the same side by Mr. Locke, Q.C., and Mr. T. Jones. The Court took time to consider its judgment.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH: Presidency of the Royal Hospitals.—On Monday Sir F. Kelly, on behalf of the City of London, applied for a rule calling on the governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital to show cause why they did not elect Lord Mayor Rose to the office of governor of that institution. After some discussion the Court granted a rule nisi. The Earl of Coventry, &c. v. Wilkes.—The Jockey Club and the Press.—On Friday this case, which involved the right of the Jockey Club to warn persons off Newmarket Heath, disputed in the case of the defendant, who was the sporting correspondent of the Morning Post, was argued before the full Court. The Lord Chief Justice in giving judgment said the Court could not admit the defendant's plea, that all persons had a right to be on the heath while races were run. On that point therefore judgment would be for the plaintiffs. There are, however, other pleas in the case that remain to be disposed of. The Queen v. Peter Cleworth.—The Sunday Haymaking Case.—The Solicitor General moved for a rule calling upon two justices of the peace for the parish of Leigh to show cause why a certiorari should not issue for the purpose of bringing up and quashing the conviction of Peter Cleworth, a farmer who was convicted of making hay on a Sunday. The question was whether the Act of Charles II., under which the conviction was made, embraced farmers or not. The applicant had been convicted of having unlawfully exercised his ordinary calling on the Lord's-day, and had been adjudged to pay a certain penalty, and in default to be put in the stocks. It was treated in the conviction as not being a case of necessity, but he had made an affidavit that it was an act of necessity, for if the applicant had not saved the hay on the Sunday it would have been destroyed. The sole question on the face of the conviction was whether a farmer came within the scope of the act. The Lord Chief Justice said it was a matter that ought to be considered. The other Judges concurred and the rule was granted. Woolf v. Hamilton.—The City Detectives.—In this case a rule had been obtained calling upon Inspector Hamilton and others, members of the City detective force to show cause why a criminal information should not be exhibited against them for conspiracy. The rule stated that Mr. Woolf, a merchant in the City, being suspected by the defendant of having been in communication with an Austrian named Dietrichstein, who was charged with forgery, had been watched night and day by members of the City detective force, which led to a collision between them and to Mr. Woolf applying to the Court for a criminal information. After hearing cause against the rule, the Court unanimously decided that the detectives were only acting in discharge of their duty, and that there had not been sufficient grounds laid for a criminal information. The rule was therefore discharged.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY: Case of Colonel Waugh.—On Wednesday the Commissioner in this case granted the application of Colonel Waugh for release, the assignees having on the previous day withdrawn their opposition. The detaining creditor, however, opposed the release, and in consequence the order is not to take effect for a fortnight, in order to allow an appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench.

Obituary.

SIR FRANCIS EDWARD SCOTT, BART., died at St. Leonard's-on-Sea on the 21st inst. in his 39th year. He was the son of Sir Edward Dorman Scott, by the eldest daughter of Sir Hugh Bateman, Bart. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and married in 1854 the eldest daughter of Sir W. E. Cradock Hartopp, Bart. ## Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Nov. 28.

All kinds of produce in season are abundant. Pine Apples are unusually well supplied; prices for them are lower than last week. Imported Grapes realise 8d. to 1s. per lb. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Nelis d'Hiver, Glou Morceau, Monsieur le Curé, and Beurré Diel Pears. Good English Apples are getting somewhat scarce. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin and Cox's Orange Pippin Apples may still be obtained. Kent Cobs are good and plentiful. New St. Michael Oranges realise from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Primroses, Mignonette, and Roses.

BRITISH WOOLS.—LONDON, Nov. 26.

We have very little business to report on, as money matters being uncertain, the consumers of wool do not come into the market, and may be expected to keep out as long as possible, or until they think the minimum rate of interest is settled.

THE COLONIAL WOOL SALES.—These sales have been progressing at a reduction of $\frac{1}{2}$d. to 1d. per lb. in comparison of the rates realised after the first day or two of the present series.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Nov. 23.

There was a moderate supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market, which was cleared partly for the North at an advance of 1s. per qr. upon the prices of this day se'nnight. The attendance was good, and Foreign Wheat must be written 1s. to 2s. dearer, which rise tended to check sales. Malting Barley brought last week's quotations; grinding was rather cheaper. Beans and Peas were unaltered in value. The Oat trade was firm, and an advance of 6d. per qr. established. Barrel Flour of good quality was in demand, and rather dearer.

FRIDAY, Nov. 27.

With the exception of an occasional heavy shower and a very wet day on Tuesday, the tendency to improvement in the value of Wheat has continued during the past week throughout the kingdom, and an advance in prices of fully 1s. per qr. has been general. Former rates have also been well maintained for all descriptions of Spring Corn. Barrel Flour must be noted 6d. and Foreign Sack 6d. to 1s. dearer—Since Friday last 91 vessels have been reported off the coast. Paris, Nov. 26. Flour has been improving since last Thursday, was, however, quieter since yesterday; the six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 32s. 3d. per 280 lbs; the present stock is estimated at 4970 cwt. Wheat has remained steady, notwithstanding the large supplies. The arrivals of Foreign Barley this week have been considerable, of all other grain and Flour small. To-day's market was only moderately attended. English Wheat commanded the extreme rates of Monday. Business in Foreign was chiefly confined to some purchases on speculation at rather over that day's rates. Spring Corn of all descriptions is steady at Monday's quotations.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 24.—We have had a very good attendance of millers and dealers at to-day's Corn Exchange, and Wheat has met a free sale both for consumption and to hold over, at an advance of fully 2d. per cental on Friday's currency. Flour is held for 6d. per barrel and sack more money, which checks business. Indian Corn attracts a fair amount of attention, and must be quoted quite 3d. per qr. dearer than on Friday. Oats and Oatmeal dull of sale, but were not pressed. Beans are the turn cheaper. Peas and Barley unchanged. The market closes steady at the advance established.

FRIDAY, Nov. 27.—Market moderately attended. Wheat: fair demand, and full rates of Tuesday. Flour steady, without change in value. Indian Corn dull; mixed, 29s. Egyptian Beans have an upward tendency. Oats and Oatmeal dull.

FLUCTUATIONS IN THE LAST SIX WEEKS' AVERAGES.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Nov. 23.

The supply of Beasts is not quite so large as on Monday last, and the demand is good. Choice descriptions being scarce are rather dearer than on Thursday. The number of Sheep is also smaller, and consequently on the average prices are higher, although trade is not very brisk. It is difficult to dispose of inferior qualities. Calves are selling about as on Thursday. From Germany and Holland there are 2340 Beasts, 6870 Sheep, and 302 Calves; from Scotland, 140 Beasts; from Ireland, 690; and 2100 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Nov. 26.

The number of Beasts is rather smaller than for some Thursdays past; the demand, however, is but small. Choice descriptions are scarce, and realise Monday's quotations, but a clearance cannot be effected of other kinds. Sheep are rather more plentiful: the average quality is not improved, and prices remain unaltered. Trade is very dull for Calves, and Monday's quotations are with difficulty maintained. Our foreign supply consists of 628 Beasts, 1780 Sheep, and 247 Calves. Milch Cows, 90.

PRICE'S CHILD'S NIGHT LIGHTS are perfectly safe, and burn their time. The quality of these Night Lights can now be relied on.

SHERWOOD BED LIGHTS, Sixpence and Eighteenpence a box.—These candles are made to supply a want very generally expressed, a cheap, really good Chamber Candle: They will be found inferior only to "Price's Candles, which will not drop grease when carried," which are sold in boxes, 1s. and 3s. each.

GLYCERINE, which very simple tests show to be impure, is being sold on the statement that "it is in every respect equal to Price's." Most medical men prescribe "PRICE'S GLYCERINE." Where purity is of importance patients can ensure it by desiring to have their Glycerine in 1 lb., 8 oz., 4 oz., or 2 oz. bottles, with capsule over the stopper marked "Price's Patent."

DENNIS'S PATENT METALLIC HORTICULTURAL BUILDINGS are made from the best Wrought Iron, upon an entirely new principle. The combination of Iron and Glass under this patent is perfect; the possibility of fracture is prevented, and a permanently Water-tight Roof insured.

The leading practical advantages are extreme smallness of Framing, admitting a maximum of light and heat, great strength, durability, and perfect ventilation. They are speedily erected, partake of more desirable outline, and do not exceed the cost of a perishable wooden structure.
For Prospectus, &c., address T. H. P. Dennis, Horticultural Builder, Hot-Water Engineer, &c., High St., Chelmsford, Essex.

WARNERS'
IMPROVED
KOH-I-NOOR LAMP,
TO BURN
HYDRO-CARBON OILS.

No. 1.

J. WARNER and SONS have much pleasure in informing the public that they have produced a Superior LAMP for Burning any Description of Hydro-Carbon or Mineral Oils, and can, with great confidence, recommend the same as the best Lamp yet offered for the purpose.
The LAMP is easily Trimmed, the Wick requires Cutting but seldom, and a beautifully Brilliant and White Light is produced without either Smoke or Smell, combustion being more perfect than in Lamps with the common Flat Wick.
The LAMP is introduced as a Pillar Lamp for the Dining or Drawing-room, as a Bracket and Hanging Lamp for the Hall, or Public Assembly Rooms.
They are Ornamental in appearance, Strong, and of First-class Workmanship.

THE ABOVE FIRST-CLASS LAMPS TO BE OBTAINED OF ANY LAMP DEALER.

Gutta Percha Tubing for Watering Gardens.

THE GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of the following Testimonial from MR. J. FARRAH, Gr. to BOSWELL MIDDLETON JALLAND, Esq., of Holderness House, near Hull.

"I have had 400 feet of your Gutta Percha Tubing, in lengths of 100 feet each, with union joint, in use for the last 12 months for watering these gardens, and I find it to answer better than anything I have ever yet tried. The pressure of the water is very considerable, but this has not the slightest effect on the tubing. I consider this tubing to be a most valuable invention for Gardeners, inasmuch as it enables us to water our gardens in about one-half the time, and with one-half the labour required."

Manufactured by the GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY, Patentees, 18, Wharf Road, City Road, London, E.C., and sold by their Wholesale Dealers in town and country.

Oil Paint no longer Necessary.

HILL AND SMITH'S PATENT BLACK VARNISH for preserving Iron Work, Wood, or Stone. This Varnish is an excellent substitute for oil paint on all out-door work, and is fully two-thirds cheaper. It may be applied by an ordinary labourer, requires no mixing or thinning, and is used cold. It is used in the grounds at Windsor Castle, Kew Gardens, and at the seats of many hundreds of the nobility and gentry, from whom the most flattering testimonials have been received, which HILL & SMITH will forward on application.

Sold in casks of about 30 gallons each, at 1s. 6d. per gallon, at the Manufactory, or 1s. 8d. per gallon paid to any Station in the kingdom.

Apply to HILL & SMITH, Brierley Hill Iron Works, near Dudley, and 76, Cannon Street, E.C., from whom only it can be obtained.

THE PATENT IN-DOOR PLANT CASES

SOLE MANUFACTURER,

JAMES GRAY, HORTICULTURAL WORKS,

DANVERS STREET, CHELSEA, LONDON, S.W.

The PATENT IN-DOOR PLANT CASE is one of the most useful of the Gardening novelties of the day. It is a handsome ornament for the Drawing Room or Sitting Room, and at all times forms a fresh, pleasant, and interesting object to the mind and eye. It is always under command, and will preserve many of the most tender Exotic Plants through the severest winter with comparatively little of the trouble and annoyance attending the use of Lamps, Gas, and Heating appliances of any other kind.

To all who have a taste for the cultivation of In-door Plants, for raising Seedlings, striking Cuttings, &c. the Plant Cases will be found an inestimable boon.

The Cases are highly approved and recommended by Professor Lindley, and by Messrs. Veitch, of The Royal Exotic Nursery, King's Road, Chelsea.

News of the Week.

THE financial statement of M. FOULD, the French Minister of Finance, was published on Thursday. It states that there is a deficit in the revenue amounting to 972,000,000 of francs, or not far from 40 millions sterling. The cost of the Mexican expedition up to the 1st of January next will amount to 210 millions of francs, and that of the expedition to Cochin China will be 60 millions. It was hoped that the re-establishment of a regular government in Mexico would have led to the repayment of the advances made by France, but in the present state of that country France must not allow the security of her finances to depend upon such a contingency. M. FOULD, therefore, proposes to meet the cost of the war at once, and for that purpose recommends to the EMPEROR a loan of 300,000,000 francs, which will allow him to consolidate part of the floating debt. The produce of the loan will be employed to redeem 12 millions sterling of Treasury Bonds, and as the interest on the loan will be less than that on the Bonds, the State will be so far a gainer. M. FOULD adds that but for the wars in Mexico and Cochin China, there would have been during the last two years a surplus of 155,000,000 f., which would have reduced the floating debt to 776,000,000 f. The trade of France is good, and the elasticity of her resources unimpaired, and he hopes for the day when, by the reduction of expenses and an improvement in receipts, it will be possible to resume the operations of the Sinking Fund. He concludes by saying that if in the future the equilibrium of the Budget be maintained, if the generous efforts of the EMPEROR assure peace, and the State prosper, the finances will permit them to reduce the taxes, and realise the wishes of HIS MAJESTY.

The excitement in Germany on the Schleswig-Holstein question continues unabated. The Federal Diet have testified their opposition to the rights of the KING of DENMARK by excluding HIS MAJESTY'S representative from their deliberations, and the Prussian Chamber of Deputies have adopted, by a majority of 231 to 63, the resolution moved by the leaders of the Liberal party, declaring that the honour and interests of Germany demand that all the German States should support the rights of the hereditary PRINCE FREDERICK to the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein. Count VON BISMARCK on Tuesday communicated to the Chamber the views of the Prussian Government on the question. He said that however much the signature of the Treaty of London was to be regretted, Prussia was bound in honour to respect its stipulations, but required a similar observance on the part of Denmark. Prussia had come to an understanding with Austria on the subject, and as long as the treaty remained in force, the reasons for carrying into operation the Federal execution continued to exist. They had therefore proposed to the Diet that this measure should be carried out forthwith, and would make the necessary military arrangements for the purpose. Meanwhile the constitution voted by the Rigsraad shortly before the death of the late King has been officially proclaimed in Schleswig, in the name of KING CHRISTIAN IX., and the majority of the municipal councils and nearly all the officials of Schleswig have testified their loyalty by congratulatory addresses, or by taking the oaths of allegiance to HIS MAJESTY.

From the United States we learn that General BURNSIDE, after having for six weeks in vain endeavoured to effect a junction with General THOMAS at Chattanooga, has been attacked by the Confederates, under General LONGSTREET, in his isolated position in Tennessee. General LONGSTREET crossed the Tennessee river on the 14th ult., and after four days' hard fighting drove General BURNSIDE into Knoxville, which he has since completely invested. The latest news states that fighting was going on all around Knoxville, and that the Federal communication with Cumberland Gap was interrupted. Great anxiety is felt in Washington for the safety of BURNSIDE'S army, but it is hoped that General GRANT will be able to move from Chattanooga and attack LONGSTREET'S rear, and thereby cause a diversion in BURNSIDE'S favour. There has been some sharp skirmishing on the banks of the Rapidan, in which the Federals were driven back, but it is still said that General MEADE will shortly attempt to force the passage of the river and give battle to the Confederates. General BANKS has occupied Brownsville, Brazos Island, and Point Isabel in Texas without opposition. It was believed in New Orleans that his force was intended to act as an army of observation to watch the movements of the French in Mexico, as well as to operate against the Confederates. Accounts from Charleston to the 16th ult., state that a vigorous fire was still maintained against Fort Sumter, and that the Confederate flag had been shot away several times, but was always immediately replaced.

A telegram from India announces the dangerous illness of the Earl of ELGIN from dropsy of the heart, and states that there is little hope of his living to return to England. His lordship has requested the QUEEN to nominate his successor, and Sir JOHN LAWRENCE has accordingly been selected to proceed at once to India as Governor-General. Our troops have experienced great loss in an affair with the rebels on the Punjaub frontier. It is supposed that they fell into an ambuscade laid for them by the Sittanas.

The Paris papers publish intelligence from Japan, stating that Prince SATSUMA asserts that he inflicted severe losses upon the English in the late engagement.

THE COURT. — The Queen and Royal family continue at Windsor. On Thursday week the Duke and Duchess de Chartres, and the Earl of Carlisle, arrived at the Castle on a visit. The Earl of Carlisle had an audience of the Queen. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. On Friday morning the Queen walked and drove in the grounds. The Prince of Wales, the Crown Prince of Prussia, and the Duke de Chartres, went out hunting with the harriers. The Princess of Wales honoured Mr. Frith with a sitting for the marriage picture. The Marquis and Marchioness of Ailesbury arrived at the Castle on a visit. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. On Saturday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Princess of Wales, drove out. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia went to Oxford. In the evening the Prince and Princess of Wales left the Castle for Frogmore House, where they will remain. The Duke and Duchess of Argyll arrived at the Castle on a visit. On Sunday morning the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Prince Leopold, and the Princess Hohenlohe, attended Divine service in the private chapel. The Bishop of Oxford preached the sermon. On Monday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena and Princess Louisa, came to London and visited the Dowager Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Augusta Bruce. Her Majesty honoured Mr. Foley and Mr. Theed with a visit at their studios. At Mr. Foley's the Queen inspected the monument to the late General Bruce; and at Mr. Theed's her Majesty inspected the statues of the Prince Consort and the Duchess of Kent, which are in progress. In the afternoon the Royal party returned to Windsor. The Crown Princess of Prussia also came to London. The Prince of Wales and the Crown Prince went out shooting. On Tuesday morning, being the birthday of the Princess of Wales, the Queen, the Crown Prince and Princess, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, Princess Beatrice, and the Princess Hohenlohe, visited the Princess of Wales at Frogmore House. In the afternoon the Queen took a carriage drive. In the evening the Crown Prince and Princess, Princess Helena and Princess Louisa dined at Frogmore with the Prince and Princess of Wales. Prince Leopold joined the party in the evening. On Wednesday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked and drove in the grounds. Earl Russell had an audience of the Queen. The Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, Ambassador of France, was presented to the Queen at an audience. Count Roëpstorff, Envoy Extraordinary from the King of Denmark, had an audience of Her Majesty. M. de Bille, Danish Minister in London, was presented to the Queen at an audience. The Earl and Countess of Clarendon and Lady Constance Villiers, the Right Hon. E. Cardwell, and Lieut.-General Sir Harry Jones, arrived at the Castle on a visit. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. On Thursday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Crown Princess, walked and drove in the grounds. The Right Hon. E. Cardwell had an audience of the Queen.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—Tuesday being the birthday of the Princess of Wales, the day was observed with all the honours in the metropolis. The bells were rung in several of the churches, the Royal Standard was hoisted at the Government Offices, and the Guards paraded at the Horse Guards in full uniform. The day was also observed at Windsor with the usual salutes, and the Mayor and Corporation gave a ball in the evening. The Prince and Princess drove to Virginia Water, and lunched in the Temple, and in the evening had a dinner party. On Wednesday the Prince, accompanied by the Crown Prince of Prussia, went out pheasant shooting. The Princess walked and drove in the grounds of Frogmore House. On Thursday the Prince, accompanied by the Crown Prince, again went out pheasant shooting. The Princess walked and drove in Frogmore grounds.

THE CROWN PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF PRUSSIA visited the British Museum on Tuesday, and spent upwards of two hours examining the different collections.

PRINCE ALFRED, accompanied by Prince William of Hesse, paid a visit to the Marquis and Marchioness of Tweeddale at Yester House on Friday. On Saturday the Princes shot over the preserves, and on Sunday attended Divine service in the parish church of Gifford. On Monday their Royal Highnesses returned to Holyrood.

THE CROWN PRINCE OF DENMARK, who has been studying at Oxford University, left that city last week for Copenhagen, on a visit to the King and Queen of Denmark.

THE DUKE OF BRABANT arrived in London on Wednesday evening from Brussels.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Monday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street.

THE VICE-ROYALTY OF INDIA.—The Right Hon. Sir John Lawrence, Bart., has been appointed to succeed Lord Elgin as Governor-General of India, and will leave England by the next mail.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—On Tuesday Parliament was further prorogued by commission to Wednesday the 13th of January. Mr. Spooner has announced his intention, from advanced age and increasing infirmities, to resign his seat for North Warwickshire. and has recommended the Hon. C. L. Butler as his successor.

THE FRENCH EMBASSY.—His Excellency Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, the newly-appointed Ambassador from the Court of the Tuileries, arrived at Albert Gate House on Sunday evening from Paris, and presented his credentials to the Queen at Windsor on Wednesday.

KNIGHTHOOD.—The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom to Gillery Pigott, Esq., one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer.

THE CHURCH.—The Rev. Addington Robert Peel Venables, M.A., of Exeter College, and late curate of St. Paul's, Oxford, was consecrated on Monday as Bishop of Nassau in the Bahamas, in the private chapel of Lambeth Palace. The Archbishop of Canterbury officiated, assisted by the Bishops of London and Oxford. The Consecration of Dr. Trench as Archbishop of Dublin, will take place in Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, soon after Christmas.

THE PROPOSED CONGRESS.—The following correspondence has passed between her Majesty's Government and that of the Emperor of the French:—

"FROM THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

"Madam, my Sister,—In face of the events which daily arise and press themselves on attention, I deem it indispensable to impart my whole thought to the Sovereigns to whom the destiny of nations is confided. On all occasions when great convulsions have shaken the foundations and deranged the limits of States, solemn compacts have followed to reduce to order the new elements, and to recognise, while revising them, the changes that have been effected. Such was the object of the Treaty of Westphalia in the 17th century, and of the Negotiations of Vienna in 1815. It is on this last foundation that the political edifice of Europe now rests; and nevertheless, your Majesty is not ignorant, it is crumbling to pieces on all sides. If one considers attentively the situation of the different countries, it is impossible not to admit that on almost all points the Treaties of Vienna are destroyed, modified, disregarded, or menaced. Hence there are duties without rule, rights without title, pretensions without restraint—a peril the more formidable, since the improvements produced by civilisation, which has united peoples together by an identity of material interests, would render war still more destructive. This is a matter for serious reflection. Let us not delay taking a decision until sudden and irresistible events disturb our judgment and draw us in spite of ourselves in opposite directions. I now, therefore, propose to your Majesty to regulate the present and to secure the future by means of a Congress. Summoned to the throne by Providence and the will of the French people, but brought up in the school of adversity, it is, perhaps, less allowable for me than for others to ignore the rights of Sovereigns and the legitimate aspirations of peoples. Thus I am ready, without any preconceived system, to bring to an International Council a spirit of moderation and justice, the ordinary portion of those who have undergone so many different trials. If I take the initiative in such an overture I do not yield to an impulse of vanity, but because I am the Sovereign to whom ambitious projects have mostly been attributed. I have it at heart to prove, by this frank and loyal overture, that my sole object is to arrive, without convulsion, at the pacification of Europe. If this proposal be agreed to, I beg your Majesty to accept Paris as the place of meeting. If the Princes, allies and friends of France, should think fit to enhance by their presence the authority of the deliberations, I shall be proud to offer them cordial hospitality. Europe will, perhaps, see some advantage in the capital whence the signal of confusion has so often arisen becoming the seat of conferences destined to lay the basis of a general pacification. I take this opportunity of renewing to you the assurances of the high esteem and inviolable friendship with which I am, Madam, my sister, your Majesty's good brother. "NAPOLEON."

"Paris, Nov. 4."

"EXTRACT OF A DESPATCH FROM EARL RUSSELL TO EARL COWLEY, DATED FOREIGN-OFFICE, NOV. 11.

"My Lord,—I have to acquaint your Excellency that the Queen has received from the Emperor of the French a letter, dated November 4. The Queen has stated, in reply to this letter, that the Emperor may be assured that any suggestion or proposal made by his Imperial Majesty will always command her Majesty's most earnest and attentive consideration, and more especially when the general welfare of nations is concerned; that her Majesty has, accordingly, directed her confidential advisers to submit to her the opinion which, after due deliberation, they may arrive at, in regard to the important measures which the Emperor recommends for adoption by his allies; and that her Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will, with as little delay as possible, authorise the Ambassador at Paris to make known to his Imperial Majesty's Government the conclusion which, after weighing that opinion, her Majesty may feel it her duty to adopt. I am, &c.,

"RUSSELL."

"FROM EARL RUSSELL TO EARL COWLEY.

"Foreign Office, Nov. 12.

"My Lord,—Her Majesty the Queen having been pleased to refer to her confidential servants a letter of the Emperor Napoleon, addressed to her Majesty on the subject of a Congress, I proceed to inform you of the view which her Majesty's Government take of the proposal contained in it. The letter invites her Majesty to take part in a Congress, to be held in Paris, on the affairs of Europe. I am commanded in the first place to inform your Excellency that her Majesty's Government see in this step a proof of the interest taken by his Imperial Majesty in the welfare of Europe. I will now proceed to remark on the ground stated for this proposal, and then examine the proposal itself. His Imperial Majesty observes that on all occasions when great convulsions have shaken the foundations and deranged the limits of States, solemn compacts have been entered into, having for their object to reduce to order the new elements, and to recognise, while revising them, the changes that have been effected. Such was the object of the Treaty of Westphalia in the 17th century, and of the Negotiations of Vienna in 1815. On this last foundation the political edifice of Europe now rests, and nevertheless, His Imperial Majesty observes, it is crumbling to pieces on all sides. The Emperor goes on to state that, if the situation of the different countries is attentively considered, it is impossible not to admit that in almost all points the Treaties of Vienna are destroyed, modified, disregarded, or menaced. When so important a proposal as that which the Emperor has put forth is made to rest on certain grounds, it is our duty to examine carefully the grounds themselves. Nearly half a century has elapsed since the Treaties of 1815 were signed. The work was somewhat hurried by the necessity of giving repose to Europe after so many convulsions. Yet the changes made in this period of 50 years have not been more than might have been expected from the lapse of time, the progress of opinion, the shifting policy of Governments, and the varying exigencies of nations. If we take half a century, from the Peace of Westphalia to 1700, or a similar period from the Peace of Utrecht to 1763, we shall find those periods marked by extensive changes, as well as the period which has elapsed between 1815 and 1863. Yet it was not thought necessary at the epochs mentioned to proceed to a general revision either of the Treaty of Westphalia or the Treaty of Utrecht. It is the conviction of her Majesty's Government that the main provisions of the Treaty of 1815 are in full force; that the greater number of those provisions have not been in any way disturbed; and that on those foundations rests the balance of power in Europe. If, instead of saying that the Treaty of Vienna has ceased to exist, or that it is destroyed, we inquire whether certain portions of it have been modified, disregarded, or menaced, other questions occur. Some of the modifications which have taken place have received the sanction of all the great Powers, and now form part of the public law of Europe. Is it proposed to give those changes a more general and solemn sanction? Is such a work necessary? Will it contribute to the peace of Europe? Other portions of the Treaty of Vienna have been disregarded or set aside, and the changes thus made de facto have not been recognised de jure by all the Powers of Europe. Is it proposed to obtain from Powers which have not hitherto joined in that recognition a sanction to those changes? Lastly come those parts of the Treaty of Vienna which are menaced, and upon those portions the most important questions of all arise. What is the nature of the proposals to be made on this subject by the Emperor Napoleon? In what direction would they tend? And, above all, are they, if agreed to by a majority of the Powers, to be enforced by arms? When the Sovereigns or Ministers of Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, and Great Britain met at Verona in 1823 upon the affairs of Spain, the first four of those Powers carried into effect their resolutions by means of armed forces, in spite of the protest of Great Britain. Is this example to be followed at the present Congress in case of disagreement? Upon all these points Her Majesty's Government must obtain satisfactory explanations before they can come to any decision upon the proposal made by the Emperor. Her Majesty's Government would be ready to discuss with France and other Powers, by diplomatic correspondence, any specified questions upon which a solution might be attained, and European peace thereby more securely established. But they would feel more apprehension than confidence from the meeting of a Congress of Sovereigns and Ministers without fixed objects, ranging over the map of Europe, and exciting hopes and aspirations which they might find themselves unable either to gratify or to quiet. Her Majesty's Government have no reason to doubt that the Emperor Napoleon would bring into such an assembly a spirit of moderation and of justice. They feel confident that his object is to give security to the peace of Europe. The only question is as to the means by which that object is to be attained. You are directed to read and give a copy of this despatch to M Drouyn de Lhuys.—I am, &c., RUSSELL."

"FROM M. DROUYN DE LHUYS TO THE MARQUIS OF CADORE.

"Palace of Compiègne, Nov. 23.

"Sir,—Lord Cowley communicated to me some days ago a despatch from his Excellency Earl Russell, dated the 12th of this month, and which expresses the opinion of the British Government relative to the proposal to call at Paris a congress to deliberate on the affairs of Europe. You will find annexed a copy of it. My previous correspondence has answered beforehand some of the considerations developed in this document. It is my duty, nevertheless, to sum up in this despatch.

of which you will send a copy to his Excellency the Principal Secretary of State, the motives which have determined the resolution of His Majesty. The Imperial Government have no intention either to apologise for or to criticise the Treaties of Vienna. The Emperor declared on mounting the throne that he should consider himself bound by the engagements subscribed to by his predecessors. Lately again, in his letter to the sovereigns, His Majesty showed that the diplomatic acts of 1815 were the foundation on which rests to-day the political edifice of Europe. But this is, he considers, an additional reason for examining whether this foundation is not itself shaken to its base. Now, the Cabinet of London recognises with us that several of these stipulations have been seriously infringed. Among the modifications which have taken place, some have been consecrated by the sanction of all the Great Powers, and at present constitute a part of international law; others, on the contrary, carried into execution, have not been recognised as law by all the Cabinets. As regards the first, we cannot help calling attention to the irresistible power with which they have forced themselves on the acceptance of the Governments. The eagerness of England herself to give to them her adhesion proves how little the former combinations answered, according to the expression of Lord Russell, the requirements of the lapse of time, the progress of opinion, the shifting policy of Governments, and the varying exigencies of nations; on the other hand, are not we authorised in believing that changes so important have diminished to some extent the harmony and equilibrium of the whole? We admit with Lord Russell that it is not absolutely necessary to give to these changes a more general and more solemn sanction; but we consider it would be an advantage to clear away the ruins and re-unite in a single body all the living members. As regards the modifications to which the Powers have not given an unanimous assent, they constitute so many causes of dispute which at any moment may divide Europe into two camps. Instead of leaving the decision of these to violence and chance, would it not be better to pursue their equitable solution to a common agreement, and sanction these changes by revising them? The third category comprises those parts of the Treaty of Vienna which are menaced. 'Upon those portions,' says his Excellency the Principal Secretary of State, 'the most important questions of all arise. What is the nature of the proposals to be made on this subject by the Emperor Napoleon? In what direction would they tend, and above all, are they, if agreed to by a majority of the Powers, to be enforced by arms?' The Emperor, while he pointed out to Europe the dangers of a situation in deep commotion, indicated the method of averting the dire calamities which he foresees, and at which he less than others, perhaps, would have reason to take alarm, for the questions out of which at the present time war may arise interest France but indirectly, and it would depend on herself alone whether she would take part in the struggle or stand aloof from it. This he did by addressing all the Sovereigns in full confidence and simultaneously, without previous understanding with any of them, in order the better to testify his sincere impartiality, and to enter upon, free of every engagement, the important deliberations to which he invites them. Himself the youngest of Sovereigns, he considers he has no right to assume the part of an arbiter, and to fix beforehand for the other Courts the programme of the Congress which he proposes. This is the motive of the reserve which he has imposed upon himself. It is, moreover, so difficult to enumerate the questions, not yet solved, which may disturb Europe. A deplorable struggle is bathing Poland in blood, is agitating the neighbouring States, and threatening the world with the most serious disturbances. Three Powers, with a view of putting a stop to it, invoke in vain the Treaties of Vienna, which supply the two sides with contradictory arguments. Is this struggle to last for ever? Pretensions opposed to one another are exciting a quarrel between Denmark and Germany. The preservation of peace in the North is at the mercy of an accident. The Cabinets have already by their negotiations become parties to the dispute. Are they now become indifferent to it? Shall anarchy continue to prevail on the lower Danube, and shall it be able at any moment to open anew a bloody arena for the dispute of the Eastern question? Shall Austria and Italy remain in presence of each other in a hostile attitude, ever ready to break the truce which prevents their animosities exploding? Shall the occupation of Rome by the French troops be prolonged for an indefinite period? Lastly, must we renounce without fresh attempts at conciliation the hope of lightening the burden imposed on the nations by the disproportionate armaments occasioned by mutual distrust? Such are, Sir, in our opinion, the principal questions which the Powers would doubtless judge it useful to examine and decide. Lord Russell surely does not expect us to specify here the mode of solution applicable to each of these problems, nor the kind of sanction which might be given by the decisions of the Congress. To the Powers there represented would pertain the right of pronouncing upon these various points. We will only add that it would be in our eyes illusory to pursue their solution through the labyrinth of diplomatic correspondence and separate negotiation, and that the way now proposed, so far from ending in war, is the only one which can lead to a durable pacification. At one of the last meetings of the Congress of Paris, the Earl of Clarendon, invoking a stipulation of the Treaty of peace which had just been signed, and which recommended recourse to the mediation of a friendly State before resorting to force, in the event of dissension arising between the Porte and others of the signatory Powers, expressed the opinion 'that this happy innovation might receive a more general application, and thus become a barrier against conflicts which frequently only break forth because it is not always possible to enter into explanation and to come to an understanding.' The Plenipotentiaries of all the Courts concurred unanimously in the intention of their colleague, and did not hesitate to express in the name of their Governments the wish that States between which any serious misunderstanding may arise should have recourse to friendly mediation before appealing to arms. The solicitude of the Emperor goes further; it does not wait for dissensions to break out in order to recommend an application to the actual circumstances of the salutary principle engraven on the latest monument of the public law of Europe, and his Majesty now invites his allies 'to enter into explanations and to come to an understanding.'" —Accept, &c., Drouyn de Lhuys.

The following is the text of Earl Russell's last despatch to Earl Cowley, announcing the inability of her Majesty's Government to accept the Emperor's invitation to a Congress:—

"Foreign Office, Nov. 25.

"My Lord,—Her Majesty's Government have received from the Marquis of Cadore the copy of a despatch addressed to him by M. Drouyn Lhuys, in answer to my despatch to your Excellency of the 12th inst. Her Majesty's Government having obtained an answer to the inquiries they made, will not any longer delay giving a definitive reply to the invitation addressed by the Emperor of the French to her Majesty the Queen, to take part in a Congress of the European Powers to be assembled at Paris. I enclose a copy of the Emperor's letter of invitation to the Queen, which is similar to the one which has already appeared in the Moniteur addressed to the German Confederation. Her Majesty's Government fully recognise in this step the desire of the Emperor of the French to put an end to the disquietude which affects several parts of Europe, and to establish the general peace on foundations more solid than those on which, in his opinion, it now rests. The Emperor declares that France is disinterested in this question; that he for his part seeks no aggrandisement, and that the interests to be secured are those, not of France, but of Europe. Her Majesty's Government may also declare that Great Britain is disinterested in this matter, that she seeks no aggrandisement, and that she has only to counsel moderation and peace. But France and Great Britain being thus disinterested themselves, are bound to consider what is the position, and what, in a Congress, will be the probable conduct of Powers who may be called upon to make sacrifices of territory or of pre-eminence and moral strength. It would be little to the purpose to say on this occasion anything more of the Treaties of 1815. Practically, the Emperor of the French admits the binding force of many portions of those treaties, and her Majesty's Government as readily allow that some portions of them have been modified or disregarded, and that other portions are now menaced or called in question. Her Majesty's Government understand from the explanations given by M. Drouyn de Lhuys that, in the opinion of the Government of the Emperor, it is obvious to every one that there are several questions not hitherto solved which may disturb Europe. Of this nature are the following:—Must the conflict in Poland be still further prolonged? Is Denmark to be at war with Germany, and have the Powers which formerly took a part in the discussion of this question, become indifferent to it? Must anarchy continue in the Danubian Principalities, and thus at any moment tend to re-open the question of the East? Must Italy and Austria always remain in presence of each other in a hostile attitude? Must the occupation of Rome by French troops be prolonged for an indefinite time? The Emperor's Government put a further question:—Must we, without having made new attempts at conciliation, renounce the hope of lightening the burdens imposed upon the nations of Europe by excessive armaments, kept up by the feeling of mutual distrust? These, no doubt, are the principal questions which either disturb or threaten the peace of Europe; but there is a further question which Her Majesty's Government consider to lie at the bottom of this whole matter, and that is the following:—Is a General Congress of European States likely to furnish a peaceful solution of the various matters in dispute? This, indeed, is the question which it behoves the Governments of the different States to consider seriously and attentively. There appears to her Majesty's Government to be one main consideration which must lead them to their conclusion. After the war which desolated Germany from 1619 to 1649, and after the successive wars which afflicted the Continent of Europe from 1793 to 1815, it was possible to distribute territories and to define rights by a Congress, because the nations of Europe were tired of the slaughter and exhausted by the burdens of war, and because the Powers who met in Congress had by the circumstances of the time the means of carrying their decisions and arrangements into effect. But at the present moment, after a continuance of long peace, no Power is willing to give up any territory to which it has a title by treaty or claim by possession. For example, of the questions mentioned as disturbing or threatening Europe, two of the most disquieting are those regarding Poland and Italy. Let us examine the present state of these questions, and see whether it is probable that a Congress would tend to a peaceful settlement of them. In the first place with regard to Poland, the question is not new to France, to Austria, or to Great Britain. For several months these Powers, while carefully abstaining from any threat, have attempted to obtain from Russia by friendly representations the adoption of measures of a healing nature, but have only succeeded in procuring promises, often repeated, that when the insurrection shall have been put down, recourse will be had to clemency and conciliation. Would there be any advantage in repeating in the name of a Congress representations already made with so little effect? Is it probable that a Congress would be able to secure better terms for Poland unless by a combined employment of force? Considerable progress has been made by the military preponderance, and by the unsparing severity of Russia, in subduing the insurgents. Is it likely that Russia will grant in the pride of her strength what she refused in the early days of her discouragement? Would she create an independent Poland at the mere request of a Congress? But if she would not, the prospect becomes one of humiliation for Europe, or of war against Russia, and those Powers who are not ready to incur the cost and hazard of war may well desire to avoid the other alternative. It may be truly said, moreover, that the present period is one of transition. If the insurrection shall be subdued, it will then be seen whether the promises of the Emperor of Russia are to be fulfilled. If the insurrection shall not be subdued, or if, in order to subdue it, the Polish population is treated with fresh—and, if that be possible—with aggravated rigour, other questions will arise which may require further consideration, but which would hardly receive a solution from a large assembly of representatives of all the Powers of Europe. Indeed, it is to be apprehended that questions arising from day to day, coloured by the varying events of the hour, would give occasion rather for useless debate than for practical and useful deliberation in a Congress of 20 or 30 representatives, not acknowledging any supreme authority, and not guided by any fixed rules of proceeding. Passing to the question of Italy, fresh difficulties occur. In the first place, is it intended to sanction by a new treaty the present state of possession in Italy? The Pope and the Sovereigns related to the dispossessed Princes might, on the one side, object to give a title they have hitherto refused to the King of Italy; and the King of Italy, on the other, would probably object to a settlement which would appear to exclude him, by inference at least, from the acquisition of Rome and Venetia. But is it intended to ask Austria in Congress to renounce the possession of Venetia? Her Majesty's Government have good grounds to believe that no Austrian representative would attend a Congress where such a proposition was to be discussed. They are informed that if such an intention were announced beforehand, Austria would decline to attend the Congress; and that if the question were introduced without notice, the Austrian Minister would quit the Assembly. Here again, therefore, the deliberations of the Congress would soon be brought in sight of the alternative of nullity or war. But is it possible to assemble a Congress and to summon an Italian representative to sit in it without discussing the State of Venetia? The Emperor of the French would be the first person to feel and to admit that such a course would not be possible. With regard to Germany and Denmark, it is true that several of the Powers of Europe have interested themselves in that question, but the addition of Spain, Portugal, Italy, and Turkey to the deliberation would scarcely improve the prospect of a satisfactory solution. And if, with regard to Poland and Italy, no beneficial result is likely to be attained, is it expedient to call together a General Congress of all the States of Europe to find a remedy for the anarchy of Moldo-Wallachia? Were all these questions—those of Poland, Italy, Denmark, and the Danubian Provinces—to be decided by the mere utterance of opinions, the views of Her Majesty's Government upon most of them might, perhaps, be found not materially to differ from those of the Emperor of the French. But if the mere expression of opinions and wishes would accomplish no positive results, it appears certain that the deliberations of a Congress would consist of demands and pretensions put forward by some and resisted by others; and, there being no supreme authority in such an assembly to enforce the decisions of the majority, the Congress would probably separate, leaving many of its members on worse terms with each other than they had been when they met. But if this would be the probable result, it follows that no decrease of armaments is likely to be effected by the proposed Congress. M. Drouyn de Lhuys refers to a proposal made by Lord Clarendon in one of the last sittings of the Congress of Paris. But her Majesty's Government understand that proposal to have reference to a dispute between two Powers to be referred to the good offices of a friendly Power, but in no way to the assembling of a General Congress. Not being able, therefore, to discern the likelihood of those beneficial consequences which the Emperor of the French promised himself when proposing a Congress, her Majesty's Government, following their own strong convictions, after mature deliberation, feel themselves unable to accept his Imperial Majesty's invitation. You are instructed to give a copy of this despatch to M. Drouyn de Lhuys.—I am, &c., Russell."

The Court-Martial upon Colonel Crawley.—On Monday the proceedings were resumed for the eleventh time, when the cross-examination of Dr. Turnbull was finished. Colonel Shute, who commanded the regiment previous to Colonel Crawley, identified a letter which he wrote in testimony of the good character of Sergeant-Major Lilley, and some other testimony was given to the same effect. During the day two questions were referred to departments in town. In the first the Court, from a feeling of justice towards Colonel Crawley, decided that the condition of the Inniskilling Dragoons at the time the regiment passed into his hands must be taken as forming an integral part of the inquiry, but it was urged by the prosecutor that a letter written by Colonel Shute on the subject could not be produced without authority; and in the other they differed as to the terms upon which declarations by Mrs. Lilley as to the sobriety of her deceased husband were to be received in evidence, and therefore referred both matters to the Judge-Advocate-General for his opinion. On Tuesday nine of the non-commissioned officers and sentries who were placed in charge of Sergeant-Major Lilley were examined. Their testimony consisted, to a great extent, of a repetition of the same facts. They stated that they were inside the house, but not close to the bed-room, and could not see into it; that the sergeant-major was a sober, steady man, and never made any complaints of suffering inconvenience from the way in which the sentries were posted. On Wednesday several other non-commissioned officers and sentries who had been in charge of Sergeant-Major Lilley were examined. Their evidence was to a great extent a repetition of that given by their comrades, and tended to show the good character of the sergeant-major, and the small amount of inconvenience consistent with a state of arrest suffered by him and Mrs. Lilley. During the day it was announced that the Commander-in-Chief had decided that the letter addressed by Colonel Shute to the Horse Guards respecting the condition of the regiment, being a confidential communication, could not be produced. Colonel Crawley said that this letter was in the highest degree essential to his defence, but, as it was withheld by the prosecution, he should decline to cross-examine Colonel Shute. On Thursday another party of non-commissioned officers and privates, who had been placed as sentries over Sergeant-Major Lilley during his arrest, was examined, and gave the first direct evidence of his drinking habits. Two or three of the sentries deposed to having seen the sergeant-major drinking brandy out of a tumbler, and on some occasions desiring them to participate. None of them, however, deposed to having seen him intoxicated. Yesterday Lieut.-Colonel Fitzwygram of the 15th Hussars identified a letter he had written to the Deputy-Adjutant-General on the 15th ult., in which he stated that he knew Sergeant-Major Lilley when he first entered the service, and from that time continuously down to 1860; that he was one of the best men he ever met, and he believed it impossible that he could have been addicted to drink without his having some knowledge or at least suspicion of it. Some non-commissioned officers were then cross-examined by Colonel Crawley, to show the state and position of the rooms occupied by the sergeant-major, and to strengthen the evidence of the former witnesses as to his use of stimulants.

Foreign.

France.—M. Fould's financial statement was published on Thursday. It states that the total amount of the deficits is 972,000,000f. It is necessary to consolidate part of the floating debt. The produce of a loan will be employed to redeem the Treasury Bonds, and will put in circulation an amount corresponding to that which it will demand. M. Fould proposes to the Emperor to fix the amount of the loan at 300,000,000f. The expenses in Mexico will amount to 210,000,000f. at the end of 1863; and those in Cochin China to 60,000,000f. M. Fould says:—

"It was hoped that a Mexican loan would lead to the repayment of our advances. But, notwithstanding the confidence we have of seeing a regular Government re-established in Mexico at no distant future, we must not allow the security of our finances to depend upon the liquidation of the debt of Mexico to France. We hope for a day when, by the reduction of the expenses and an improvement in the receipts, it will be possible to resume the operation of the Sinking Fund. If in the future the equilibrium of the budget be maintained; if the generous efforts of the Emperor assure peace and the State prosper, our finances will permit us to reduce the taxes and realise the wishes of his Majesty."

The Emperor arrived at the Tuileries on Sunday and presided at a Council of Ministers on Monday morning. His Majesty gave audience to the Papal Nuncio and the Russian and Spanish Ambassadors, who handed in the replies of their respective Sovereigns to the invitation to the Congress. The Emperor returned in the evening to Compiègne, but will return to Paris on the 9th. It is stated that after a verification of powers the Chamber of Deputies will be adjourned. After the receipt of the reply of Earl Russell respecting the Congress, the Emperor addressed a letter to Queen Victoria. This letter will be published. The Moniteur says that the Government is entirely unconnected with the publication of the pamphlet entitled "Napoléon III. et le Congrès," to which several papers have alluded. The Paris papers almost unanimously condemn the conduct of the English Government in refusing to attend the Congress. The Constitutionnel contains an article signed by its chief editor, M. Limayrac, but attributed to an official personage, entitled "England and the Congress," of which the following is a summary :—

"By a refusal to attend the Congress, England would afford grounds to those who assert that her greatness and prosperity are founded upon the misfortunes and ruin of other nations. It causes grievous regret to see a policy parading itself for Liberalism inspired by sentiments of mean jealousy, and the rivalry of England continually putting back the friendly hand which we extend to her, and making obstacles to all that appears generous and opportune. It is not only at Rome but also at London that the Non possumus doctrine is made a political dogma. England refused to favour the national movement in the Danubian Principalities, to protect Montenegro, Piedmont, Mexico, America, and Poland, and yet the French Government has shown itself loyal and sympathetic towards England, and has received little in compensation. In the present state of things if France has reason to feel offended at the want of concurrence on the part of England, it is Europe that will be wounded in her most serious interests. Free from all personal ambition, France calls with good faith upon all the Powers. If troubles and conflagrations should arise in Europe, as it is only too easy to foresee, the entire responsibility would fall upon those who have rejected the work of peace and conciliation."

The Pays characterises the conduct of England in holding aloof from the Congress as selfish. The Siècle says that the egotism of the Cabinet of St. James's never manifested itself more openly; and that the narrow policy, which has no other rule than interest, has never shown itself with so much cynicism. M. Emile de Girardin, in another article, says that England forgets that she is an island, and that Napoleon I. proposed to annex her to France. He says that after her insolent refusal, she should be subjected to a diplomatic blockade. He says that the refusal of England preceding that of Austria, renders the meeting of the Congress impossible, and that the policy of France is about to be driven by the force of circumstances into a new path. The Nation declares that the reasons assigned by England for her refusal are excellent if considered in her own point of view, but detestable if regarded with respect to the general interests of Europe, which alone suggested the Emperor's invitation. The Temps says that Lord Russell was afraid that at the close of the Congress the Powers would be on worse terms with each other than when they first met; and that, so far as England and France are concerned, this result is not unlikely to be immediately attained. The Opinion National agrees with Mr. Bright in proclaiming the downfall of the "selfish aristocracy" which "oppresses the British people," but intimates that it is impossible "that sooner or later England should not bear the penalty of her selfishness." The Patrie summarizes in the following manner the replies of the different European Powers to the invitation to the Congress :—

"The replies of the States of secondary rank are all affirmative, and vary only in the terms in which they are expressed. Italy adheres purely and simply to the Congress. Spain congratulates the Emperor upon the initiative he has taken, and declares herself ready to co-operate in the great work of a general pacification. The reply of the Pope is as affirmative as possible. It speaks of the necessity for the peoples to gather round the Church. His Holiness deplores the unhappy time which the Church has passed through, and recalls the promises made to the Church, which should remove all fears for the future. The answer of Switzerland states that the Confederacy is ready to take part in a Congress which would again guarantee her neutrality. It makes no allusion to Faucigny and Chablais. The Russian reply agrees with the analysis of it already published by the journals. We have reason to believe that Baron de Budberg will endeavour, in concert with M. Drouyn de Lhuys, to remove the difficulties presenting themselves to the assembling of a Congress. Prussia replies in very friendly terms, expressing, however, the belief that a conference of Ministers would be preferable to a Congress of Sovereigns. In mentioning the treaties of 1815, Prussia states that certain articles have been violated, but that their bases must remain unchanged. Bavaria, Saxony, Hanover, and Wurtemburg express themselves in the same sense as Prussia. Austria congratulates the Emperor upon his project, which she considers noble, although expressing some apprehension of the Congress."

The Moniteur publishes a letter from Frankfort showing the excitement which prevails in Germany with regard to the Schleswig Holstein question. The Constitutionnel contains an article signed by M. Boniface, explaining the Schleswig-Holstein question, and stating that much excitement exists in Germany. M. Boniface expresses his astonishment that several newspapers, and especially The Times, should counsel not only England, but also the other Powers, to make war in favour of Denmark. He says :—

"No doubt, old sympathies attach France to Denmark, and to an alliance with that country; but Germany has also a right to our sympathies and respect. The will of a people and the rights of nationalities must likewise weigh in the balance of our resolutions. In view of so delicate a problem, the non-existence of a cordial understanding is to be regretted. If an understanding of the seven Powers does not suffice to insure a solution of the Danish difficulty, it would be logical to address all Europe."

The Gazette de France, in an article upon the Schleswig-Holstein question, maintains that France has no immediate interest in the question, and says :—

"The best thing to be done is to remain a spectator of the conflict, which, with many others, might have been settled by a Congress."

The Pays and the Nation of Thursday evening state that England and Russia in concert have demanded that Denmark should withdraw the royal patent of March 30. The French iron-clad squadron arrived at Cherbourg last week. The result of the experimental cruise is that, with some modifications in their armament, the spur ships may undertake a cruise; but the iron-clad frigates, which are covered from stem to stern, are unmanageable in a fresh breeze. With a moderate sea they roll to such an extent as to ship water overboard, while with head to sea, their pitching is so violent as to send the masts overboard. As for using their guns, except in smooth water it is impossible. Every device was tried to make them more steady; the guns and shot racks were shifted to the main deck, and then placed in a pyramid amidships; but this only made matters worse. They may be useful as floating batteries in smooth water, but nothing else. The superiority of the spur ships is ascribed to the absence of plating stem and stern, which makes them more buoyant. A large three-masted screw steamer, named the Rappahannock, arrived at Calais on Thursday week, having left Sheerness on the previous day. She bore the colours of the Confederate States, had two funnels, and was fore and aft rigged, and pierced for eight guns. The vessel was in an unfinished state, and had a number of carpenters and other work-people on board. She was at first detained by the French Customs authorities, but has now been set at liberty. It appears that she was formerly her Majesty's ship Victor, and was sold out of the service without any suspicion as to the purchasers, who stated that they wanted her for the China trade, and changed her name to Scylla. Orders were subsequently sent down to prevent her sailing from Sheerness, but she had then got away. On Tuesday the Military Tribunal of Paris tried the nephew of General Fleury, Lieutenant Fleury, of the 4th Regiment of Voltigeurs of the Guard, aged 28, on a charge of having murdered, on the 18th of August, a married woman, named Petit, a clearstarcher, who had a shop in the Passage de Cherbourg. The facts were perfectly clear, but the defence of hereditary insanity was pleaded in the prisoner's behalf. The Tribunal found him guilty of Wilful Murder, but with the benefit of extenuating circumstances, and unanimously condemned him to 20 years' hard labour, military degradation, and to be under the surveillance of the police for life.

SPAIN.—At the sitting of the Cortes on Monday, the reply of the Queen to the Emperor Napoleon's letter was laid upon the table. The Minister for the Colonies has resigned, and has been succeeded provisionally by the Marquis Habana. The building of ships of war in the various arsenals of Spain is proceeding vigorously.

PORTUGAL.—It is said that one of the chief objects of Portugal in accepting the Paris Congress is to obtain possession of the frontier town of Olivenca, which Spain has always held, although it was formally made over to Portugal by the Treaty of Vienna.

SWITZERLAND.—The Federal Council has replied to the Emperor Napoleon, communicating the conditions upon which Switzerland will consent to take part in the Congress. The Federal Council especially hopes that the Congress will also settle the questions relating to Savoy.

THE NETHERLANDS.—The company for connecting Amsterdam with the North Sea by a canal was constituted on the 28th ult. It is stated that the necessary funds have been furnished by English capitalists.

SWEDEN.—All the four Estates have unanimously granted the credits of 3,000,000 thalers for military armaments asked for by the Ministry, expressing at the same time entire approval of the policy of the Government. No dissenting speech was made. The King is suffering from a slight attack of bronchitis.

HAMBURG.—The office of the committee of the branch of the National Verein in Hamburg was closed on Friday by the police.

DENMARK.—The Government is about to ask the Rigsraad for an extraordinary credit of 15,000,000 rix-dollars. It is proposed to take 5,000,000 from the balance in the Treasury, and to raise the remaining 10,000,000 by loan. The Dagbladet and Berlingske Tidende state that after Denmark has been excluded from the Federal Diet the entrance of German troops into Holstein, whether called "Federal execution" or "occupation," will be regarded as a declaration of war.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—The Constitution voted by the Rigsraad shortly before the death of the late King has been officially proclaimed in Schleswig in the name of King Christian IX. The majority of the municipal councils of Schleswig have sent deputations to congratulate King Christian upon his accession to the throne; and most of the Schleswig officials have taken the oath of allegiance to the King. On Wednesday a note was addressed by Herr Sammers, the diplomatic agent of Prince Frederick, to Herr von Hall, the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs. In this note Prince Frederick required that the Danish troops should evacuate the Schleswig-Holstein territory, and that the Schleswig-Holstein troops in Denmark should return to the Duchies. Should the Danish Government not express its readiness to comply with these demands within 14 days, the Prince will take the necessary steps to uphold the rights of the legitimate Government. The note was forwarded by Herr von Mohl, the Baden Envoy to the Federal Diet, to Baron Dirckinck, the Danish Envoy, but returned unopened.

BRUNSWICK.—The Duke of Brunswick has recognised Prince Frederick of Augustenburg as Duke of Schleswig and Holstein.

WURTEMBERG.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Friday, Baron von Hügel, in reply to a question from Herr Seeger, made the following declaration :

"The Wurtemberg Government signed the London protocol in the year 1852, but does not now hold itself bound thereby on account of the violation of that treaty by Denmark during the last 10 years. The representative of Wurtemberg at the Federal Diet has received instructions to support the immediate occupation of Holstein and Lauenburg by Federal troops."

FRANKFORT.—Sir Alexander Malet on Friday received a despatch from Earl Russell on the Schleswig-Holstein question, which he immediately communicated to the Austrian, Prussian, and Bavarian Plenipotentiaries. The following is a summary of its contents :—

The support given to the hereditary claims of the Prince of Augustenburg to the Duchy of Holstein by several German Governments at the Diet has attracted the notice of the English Government. Earl Russell therefore hastens to inform Sir Alexander Malet of the views entertained upon the question by her Britannic Majesty. She would faithfully observe the stipulations of the Treaty of May 8, 1852, according to which King Christian IX. of Denmark possessed hereditary right to all the territories at that time united under the Danish Crown. The English Government expected that all the Powers who signed the above-named treaty, or subsequently acceded to it, would share this opinion.

It was reported in Paris on Wednesday, that conciliatory despatches in reply to this communication have left Berlin, Vienna, and Frankfort, and that all fears of war are now removed. In the sitting of the Diet on Saturday the President proposed that the credentials of Baron Dirckinck, the Danish representative, should be referred to a committee. Baron Dirckinck protested against this proceeding. A resolution was then passed, with only three dissentient votes, excluding Baron Dirckinck from the Assembly. A second sitting then took place, Baron Dirckinck not being present. The proposal of the Committee to suspend the exercise of a vote for Holstein was passed by a large majority. Saxony's proposal was afterwards introduced. The question of Federal execution was not touched upon. The Spenersche Zeitung of Sunday publishes the text of a declaration made in this sitting by Prussia and Austria. This declaration states that the position of both the Governments is fixed by the Treaty of London which they signed with the other great Powers in 1852, the preliminary conditions of that treaty having been settled with Denmark in the previous year by negotiation. The object of these negotiations was to establish the inseparable union which was determined by the Treaty of London. Both the Governments are ready to execute this treaty, provided that Denmark executes the preliminary conditions which she accepted. The succession of Lauenburg belongs to King Christian even if the Treaty of London were not valid. The admission of the representative of Denmark for Lauenburg cannot, therefore, be contested. As regards Holstein, he can only be considered its rightful representative when Denmark shall have fulfilled her engagements of 1851-1852.

PRUSSIA.—A despatch of Earl Russell on the Schleswig-Holstein question, dated the 23d of November, to Sir Andrew Buchanan, English Ambassador at Berlin, has been published. This despatch perfectly coincides with Earl Russell's despatch to Sir Alexander Malet. The Schleswig-Holstein question came on for debate in the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday. Count von Bismark read a declaration, containing the following passages :—

"However greatly the signature of the London Treaty may be considered to deserve regret, prudence and the dictates of honour forbid our permitting any doubt to be entertained of our fidelity to its stipulations. We require, however, its equal observance by Denmark. The Treaty of London and the arrangements of 1851 and 1852 must stand or fall together. Abnegation of their stipulations would remove Schleswig from the position she occupies in virtue of the treaty. The Government must reserve to itself the right to determine whether, and at what period, we may be placed in a position, by the universally undoubted non-fulfilment of her obligations by Denmark, to free ourselves from the London Treaty. It can neither leave the decision to the Federal Diet, nor enter into more explicit explanations upon the subject here. We have come to an understanding with Austria, which secures for the present our identical attitude with regard to the Treaty of London and its consequences. We consider that in the duchy of Lauenburg King Christian is entitled to the succession, independently of the treaty, but that his title to Holstein rests upon the London Treaty and the arrangements of 1851 and 1852, which we believe to be intimately connected. As long as the Treaty of London remains in force, the reasons for carrying into operation the Federal execution, determined by the resolutions of the 1st of October, continue to exist. Austria and Prussia have proposed to the Diet that this measure should forthwith be carried out, and will make the necessary military arrangements for the purpose. Bills will be laid before the Chamber to provide such funds as may be required."

In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Friday Herr Waldeck moved, in the name of 36 other members, the following amendment to the proposition of Herr Virchow :—

"The House limits itself to declaring that it is not the interest of Prussia or Germany that Christian IX. should be recognized by Prussia as Duke of Schleswig and Holstein."

In the sitting of Wednesday the debate on the Schleswig-Holstein question was continued. After seven hours' deliberation the House adopted by a majority of 231 to 63, the motion proposed by Herr

Stavenhagen and Dr. Virchow in the name of the Liberal fraction, viz.:—

"The honour and the interests of Germany demand that all the German States should support the rights of the hereditary Prince Frederick to the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein."

The voting took place by calling over the names of the members. The motion of Herr von der Heydt and the amendment of Herr Waldeck were each rejected by majorities of 268 to 37. The Poles abstained from voting.

AUSTRIA.—The Danish Admiral Irminger is expected in Vienna as the bearer of the notification of King Christian IX.'s accession to the throne. A conference of military officers has been held at Vienna with reference to the question of Federal execution in Holstein. The Municipal Council of Vienna held a sitting on Friday, at which an address was voted to the Emperor, expressing the wish of the Capital for the maintenance and realisation of the rights of Holstein, and requesting the Austrian Government to use its influence to cause the most energetic interference of the German Confederation in favour of Holstein. A request addressed to the police for permission to hold a public meeting in favour of the Duchies has been refused. A meeting of citizens appointed to be held at Linz on Wednesday on the same subject, has also been prohibited by order from Vienna. It is said that the idea of a loan has been abandoned by the Government, on account of present circumstances being unfavourable to such a measure.

POLAND.—The arrests of superior officials in Warsaw continue. 200 public functionaries are said to have been already arrested in that city, and condemned to deportation to Siberia. Dobrowolski has been shot in Warsaw by order of the Russian authorities. The number of women lately arrested is said to be 987. Six hundred persons, including several ladies, and Luszczewski, the Director of the Department of the Interior under the Grand Duke Constantine's administration, have been transported to Siberia. Another convoy, among whom was Madame Nieniachewska, has been sent into the heart of Russia. The number of transported persons last week amounted to 1,000. The Russians openly acknowledge their intention of depopulating the country by transportation. The Archbishop's Palace has been again searched, but without result. The Journal de St. Petersbourg publishes a very detailed plan, dated March 1, 1861, and signed General Mieroslawski, for the organisation of the present revolution in Poland. This document is stated to have been found in Zamoyski House, Warsaw, after the attempt on the life of General Berg. In consequence of the searches ordered in the churches and convents of Kalisch, the city had been surrounded, and all communication with the environs interrupted. Small detachments of insurgents were appearing throughout the country, well-armed and completely equipped in winter uniforms. The insurgent leaders Kruk, Cwick, and Rudski have united their bands. The insurrection is increasing in Samogitia, and in the Lublin and Sandomir governments. It is especially reported to have been reinforced by the peasants. Three thousand insurgents, under Dubois and Nowicki, are said to occupy the government of Plock. On the 25th ult. Bossak assaulted the town of Opatow, in the government of Radom, and drove out the Russians. Engagements have also taken place near Lukow and Ussienice, in the government of Lublin, and near Warta, in the government of Kalisch.

ITALY.—In the Chamber of Deputies on Friday, the Minister of Commerce, in reply to the members adverse to the Treaties with France, stated that it was probable that the diminution which they would cause in the revenue during the first year would be 1,000,000 lire—a diminution which would soon be recovered. After speeches on this subject from several members, the general debate was closed. In the sitting of Saturday, several amendments proposed by the Opposition having been lost, the Treaties of Commerce and Navigation with France were passed, without alteration, by 157 against 49 votes. On Thursday the Senate was occupied with the national taxation. A Royal decree issued on Tuesday states that the commercial treaty concluded between Italy and Great Britain henceforward comes into force. The treaty of commerce between Italy and Holland was signed last week. On Sunday last the Pope addressed a letter, replying to the Emperor Napoleon's invitation, by accepting the Congress. His Holiness at the same time expressed his conviction that the Congress will be regulated by justice, and will respect his rights to the Pontifical provinces occupied by Piedmont.

GREECE.—Advices from Athens state that the English and French Ambassadors had presented their credentials to King George I. The French Ambassador had also delivered to His Majesty an autograph letter from the Emperor Napoleon. The National Assembly had passed a resolution that no proposition should be allowed to be made for the restoration to office of the six Ministers of the ex-King Otho.

CIRCASSIA.—Letters from the Caucasus state that the insurrection is spreading considerably. The Circassians have shot several Russian officers occupied in surveying the routes leading to Tehafki, where 15,000 insurgents are assembled. The Vienna journals publish news from Constantinople announcing the arrival in that city of some Circassian delegates, who intend visiting London and Paris to ask for assistance against Russia.

TURKEY.—The telegraph convention between Turkey and Persia has been signed. Special advantage is conferred upon the new telegraph line to India. A rumour is current of the death of Abd-el-Kader at Mecca.

DANUBIAN PRINCIPALITIES.—The members elected to form the Committee on the address all belong to the Opposition. The Nation lately published the project of a constitution which, it is stated, had been submitted by Prince Couza to the great Powers. This intelligence has been officially contradicted.

MADAGASCAR.—The French papers state that the king has taken refuge in the north of Madagascar, and has written to the Emperor Napoleon requesting his Majesty's support to enable him to re-enter his capital. The draught of a treaty with France was in progress. The Tanquin had been abolished, and liberty of worship granted. The French Consul would reside in Madagascar. Commerce would be permitted as a proof of friendship, and French vessels would be allowed to anchor in the military ports. The Customs' duties had been re-established. The Queen will have the power of passing laws.

INDIA.—The following telegram from the Bombay Government has been received by the Secretary of State for India, dated November 15:—

"The following message to your address, dated November 13, has been received from Sir R. Napier, from Calcutta:—'Lord Elgin has become so dangerously ill that he has thought it necessary to communicate with Sir William Denison, and a steamer is in readiness to proceed to Madras, if necessary.'"

The Paris papers publish the following telegram, dated Suez, Nov. 25:—

"Intelligence has been received here from India stating that the Governor-General, the Earl of Elgin, is very ill of dropsy in the heart, and that his condition is such as to occasion great uneasiness. On this account his Lordship is said to have resigned, and to have requested the Queen to nominate his successor."

Subsequent accounts to 4 P.M. of Nov. 14, stated that Lord Elgin was daily becoming weaker, and that Sir William Denison had in consequence been appointed to act as Viceroy. Another telegram was received yesterday at the India Office, stating that up to the 17th ult. no news had been received of Lord Elgin's death, though the event was daily expected. The place where his lordship was taken ill is some distance from a telegraph station. Much fighting has taken place on the frontier, with considerable loss to the British troops. Colonel Norman telegraphed from Meean Meer on the 12th November, that in an affair on the frontier on the 9th we had about 60 men killed and wounded. Major Harding, 2d Sikh Infantry; Lieut. Murray, 71st Highlanders; and Lieut. Douglas, doing duty with the 71st Highlanders, who were killed; Lieut. Oliphant, 5th Goorkhas, and Lieut. Battye, Guide Corps, were wounded. The Commander-in-Chief reached Lahore on the evening of the 12th.

CHINA.—Advices from Pekin, to the 3d of October, state that the General-in-Chief of the Imperial troops received from the Emperor an order to strange himself, and obeyed. From Shanghae we learn that Major Gordon is within 1800 yards of the walls of Soochow, and might assault the place at any moment, the city being closely invested on the east side.

JAPAN.—The Paris papers of Thursday evening publish intelligence from Japan, stating that Prince Satsuma asserts he inflicted severe losses upon the English in the late engagement.

UNITED STATES.—General Lee's army is reported to be intrenched between the Rapidan and Orange Court House. General Meade visited Washington on the 15th, and after a conference with Mr. Lincoln returned to the army. The Federal cavalry have since advanced to the Rapidan, and it is reported that General Meade will shortly assume the offensive, and attempt the passage of the river, all the fords of which General Lee has strongly fortified. Sharp skirmishing has already taken place upon the Rapidan, in which the Federals were driven back. General Longstreet's army crossed the Tennessee River on the 14th ult, General Burnside fell back before him, his rear guard skirmishing. On the 16th General Burnside formed a line of battle at Campbell's Station, where a fight ensued, which lasted from noon till dark, when Burnside checked the Confederate advance, and fell back during the night, reaching Knoxville on the morning of the 17th. On the 19th General Longstreet opened fire on a fortification in front of the city, and afterwards desperately charged the Federals, who abandoned the position, falling back to the defences of the town. Gen. Longstreet has since completely invested the city. Burnside's loss is estimated at 450; that of the Confederates is stated to be 1400. Private despatches from General Burnside to the 19th, represent his position as secure, but state that communication with Cumberland Gap is interrupted. Despatches from Parson Brownlow to the 19th, however, state that there was fighting all around Knoxville, and a great battle was expected. The report of General Forster superseding Burnside is doubted. At Chattanooga the Confederates continue shelling the Federal position in Racoon Valley, along the river, and around the city. No serious casualties are reported. General Thomas's corps has reinforced Grant's right. General Bragg has also been heavily reinforced. The Federals have made a movement from the right to the left of Bragg's position, with the view of making a diversion in order to attack Lookout Mountain or to send troops to Burnside. General Banks's expedition landed on the 2d ult. at Brazos de Santiagen, on the Texan coast, nine miles from the mouth of the Rio Grande, and occupied Brownsville on the 5th without opposition. He has since occupied Brazos Island, Bienville and Point Isabel. It is said that on the arrival of the expedition the Confederate authorities burnt Fort Brown and the greater portion of Brownsville, notwithstanding strong resistance on the part of the inhabitants. The New York Herald asserts that the principal object of this expedition is to break the contraband trade between Mexico and the South. The Confederates, not believing that Banks would land on the Rio Grande, had scattered their forces in other parts of Texas. Banks inaugurated his command by issuing stringent orders against disloyal persons. After Banks's arrival the Mexican General Cubors crossed from Brownsville to Matamoras, and endeavoured to raise a revolution in favour of the French, but was defeated by General Cortious, who now occupies Matamoras with Juarez troops. Cortious has placed four steamers at the disposal of Banks. A revolution in favour of the French was feared at Matamoras, and as the American Consul was apprehending personal violence, a portion of Banks' troops were in readiness to go to his protection if necessary. The United States Marshal has seized all the cotton in New Orleans. The negroes in that city have petitioned to be allowed to vote. General Butler has left for North Carolina, after enlisting and organising negroes. In his department (Virginia) it is reported that all Confederate prisoners will be placed under his jurisdiction. Since his arrival at Norfolk a merchant has been condemned to six months' hard labour for smuggling whiskey. Accounts from Charleston to the 17th, viâ Richmond, state that two of the Monitors which had been engaged in the bombardment of the ruins of Sumter were not in sight on that morning. Reports from Moultrie asserted that on the previous day one of the Monitors had her funnel and turret perforated by the Confederate shots. On the 17th four Monitors passed up the channel, but as they did not participate in the firing it was believed that they were sounding to ascertain if there was passage for vessels of a certain draught. The bombardment of Sumter continued; 25 shells were thrown into the city from Fort Gregg, doing no serious damage. One of the Federal guns burst at the last discharge. Indications of more extensive operations on the part of the Federals were apparent. The Confederate expedition in Canada is said to have been planned by the Confederate Government, who sent 36 Confederate officers to Halifax in the steamer Robert Lee, and provided them with funds for carrying out the scheme. The Canadian Prime Minister has arrived at Buffalo, and had an interview with General Dix concerning the conspiracy. The bounties offered to soldiers in New York now amount to 700 dollars. The World asserts that the Secretary for War proposes an exchange of prisoners, in order that their burden may weaken the Confederate resources. Mr. Wendel Phillips has made a speech asserting that President Lincoln had informed him that the greatest folly of his life was the issuing of the emancipation proclamation. The Tribune denies that Mr. Lincoln made such a declaration, but the Herald asserts that Mr. Lincoln has on many occasions expressed this opinion. Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Seward, and the Corps Diplomatique were present at the dedication of the Gettysburg battle-field as a national cemetery. Mr. Edward Everett made a long oration on the occasion. The Rev. H. W. Beecher has received a welcome at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. He declared that the great intelligent minds and labouring classes in England favoured the North; the upper classes wished well to the South. He recommended America to observe a friendly policy towards England. He mentioned the Duke of Argyll, Earl Granville, Lord Carlisle, and Messrs. Bright and Cobden, as influential friends of the North. A large meeting has been held at Brooklyn to raise volunteers. The Union ticket has been elected in Delaware. The Democrats withdrew from the contest, and issued a protest, stating that the military intimidation was such as to prevent a fair election, and that they would petition Congress to declare void an election controlled by powers unknown to the constitution. It is reported that an effort will be made to annul the Maryland election on the same grounds. The Richmond papers of the 18th announce the arrival at Wilmington of the steamers Dundee, Flora, Banshee, Syren, Alice, A. D. Vance, Hausa, Antonica, Dispatch, and General Scott. The Confederates have given permission to the Federal Government to send stores for the Federal prisoners in Richmond. President Davis has officially acquitted Bishop Polk of mismanagement at the battle of Chickamauga. The Richmond Examiner urges a forced loan as a remedy for the inflation of the currency.

MEXICO.—Advices from Vera Cruz to the 1st inst. state that the army, under the command of General Bazaine, had left Mexico city for a campaign against Juarez.

WEST INDIES.—The island of Jamaica has been visited by another earthquake, more severe than either of those which have been reported during the year. On Sunday evening, November 8th, at 8.5 p.m., the first shock was felt, lasting about 40 seconds, rapidly succeeded by a loud rumbling and a shock that sent numbers into the open air for safety. Bottles, candlesticks, &c., were shaken from their stands, and great alarm was visible on all sides. Up to the departure of the mail on the 9th, however, no particulars could be obtained beyond the city of Kingston.

SAN DOMINGO. — The steamer Prince Alphonso arrived on Wednesday at Cadiz, having left Havannah a fortnight ago. It is rumoured that she brings news of fresh disasters at San Domingo. The number of the insurgents is estimated at 14,000.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY.—The anniversary of this Society was held on Monday at Burlington House. The President, General Sabine, delivered his annual address on the scientific prospects and results of the year, and then presented the medals to the gentlemen to whom they had been awarded. The Copley medal was given to the Rev. Professor Sedgwick for his observations and discoveries in the geology of the palæozoic series of rocks, and more especially for his determination of the characters of the Devonian system, by observations of the order of superposition of the Killas Rocks and their fossils in Devonshire. One of the Royal medals was given to the Rev. Miles J. Berkeley, for his researches in cryptogamic botany, especially mycology; and the other Royal medal to Mr. J. P. Gassiot, for his researches on the voltaic battery and current, and on the discharge of electricity through attenuated media.

UTILISATION OF THE SEWAGE.—A special meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works was held on Tuesday to consider the various plans proposed to them for the utilisation of the metropolitan sewage. Some discussion took place on the different plans; and the members appeared to be unanimous that none of the plans before them were sufficiently worked out for practical adoption. Mr. Richardson moved that none of the tenders were sufficiently explicit to warrant the Board at present in accepting either of them; and that, with the view of obtaining further information, the tenders be referred to the Main Drainage Committee. Mr. Bidgood seconded the motion. Mr. D'Iffanger then moved the following amendment:—

"That inasmuch as the Board was bound by various provisions of the several enactments under which their works are carried on, so to conduct them as not to cause a nuisance, and that the profitable employment of sewage, under the schemes proposed in the tenders, may involve its application to the surface of the land on an extensive scale, they cannot be parties to any agreement for such application, unless they have clear information on the localities, nature, and extent, of the land to be so dealt with, and satisfactory assurance that the processes to be employed are such as not to cause a nuisance. That none of the tenders received are sufficiently clear on this point; the Board, therefore, refer them generally to the main drainage committee, in order to obtain essential and detailed information, and to confer with the several promoters as to other conditions of the advertisements upon which their proposals are neither full nor explicit, and generally to consider as to the utilisation of the sewage."

Mr. Phillips seconded the amendment, and after a long discussion it was adopted by 17 to 13.

THE SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN QUESTION.—A crowded meeting of Germans was held on Saturday evening at the London Tavern, Mr. Heintzmann in the chair, to consider the question of the Danish Duchies in relation to Germany. The proceedings were entirely in German. Dr. Kinkel moved the first resolution, that at present, according to all old treaties, as well as the natural right of freedom, the union between Schleswig-Holstein and Denmark is dissolved; that Christian IX., as present King of Denmark, in separating Schleswig from Holstein, and uniting it with Denmark by the constitution signed on the 18th Nov., has committed a new violation of the rights of the people of Schleswig-Holstein, and a new attack on the rights and honour of the German nation, which was agreed to. The motion having been agreed to it was resolved, that it is the duty of the German people to re-establish the independence of Schleswig-Holstein, which was annihilated by an unexampled treachery in 1851. Dr. Zerffi moved, that in the sight of the bearing of the majority of the German Governments, and in view of the necessity for bringing about a union of all the Powers by the simple watchword "Independence of the country," it is most expedient to form a provisional government, assisted by every German patriot, to call out volunteer troops immediately, but leave the country itself to decide upon its future constitution by freely elected representatives of the people, after having obtained its independence. The resolution having been carried, Dr. Schurges moved, that the present committee be a permanent one, and that the meeting pledge itself to assist it by all means in its power in obtaining the objects in view. This resolution was also unanimously carried.

SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION.—The council of this association has unanimously resolved to hold their meeting next year in the city of York. The executive committee was at the same time authorised to carry out a proposed union between the association and the Law Amendment Society. Arrangements are in progress calculated greatly to increase the activity and efficiency of the departments, and to secure more definite results from the discussions at the annual meetings.

CITY IMPROVEMENTS.—The Court of Common Council have unanimously agreed to appropriate ground in Victoria Street, and to erect dwellings thereon for the labouring poor, at an estimated cost of 20,000*l*.

HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN.—This Hospital has received an especial mark of Royal favour in the kind consideration of her Majesty for that most helpless class of her subjects—sick children. A quantity of toys of all descriptions has been sent by command of the Queen; with similar presents from the Princess Helena and Prince Alfred.

THE CITY REMEMBRANCER.—The committee of Common Council, to whom the subject was referred for consideration, have recommended to the Court to fix the salary of the vacant office of Remembrancer at 1500*l*., with an annual allowance, not to exceed 400*l*., for office expenses. Mr. Tyrrell, the last holder of the office, had a salary of 1000*l*., which, added to his professional charges for business done by him in respect of funds granted by Act of Parliament, produced, on an average of the last 10 years, a net income of 2020*l*. He had also an allowance for office expenses of 250*l*. The committee have reported against a suggested amalgamation of the office of Remembrancer, partly with that of the City Solicitor, and partly with that of the Town Clerk.

WESTMINSTER PLAY.—The "Adelphi" of Terence will be performed by the Queen's Scholars on Thursday, December 10, Tuesday, December 15, and Thursday, December 17. The prologue and epilogue will be given, as usual, on the second and third nights.

THE CHURCH IN THE CITY.—The Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the living of St. Magnus on the late Dr. M'Caul's third son and curate, the Rev. Alexander Israel M'Caul, M.A. of St. John's College, Oxford, and divinity lecturer in King's College.—Three new ecclesiastical districts have been formed out of the parish of Shoreditch, St. Columba, to the incumbency of which the Rev. Samuel Wareing Mangin, M.A., of Wadham College, Oxford, late minister of St. Matthias, Stoke Newington, has been appointed; St. Augustine, to the incumbency of which the Rev. George Hervey, M.A., of Clare College, Cambridge, curate of West Hackney, has been appointed; and St. Chad, to the incumbency of which the Rev. William Robert Sharpe, M.A., late Fellow of St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, and perpetual curate of St. Gregory's, Norwich, has been appointed. The churches for these districts will be commenced with the least possible delay.

NEW BRIDGE OVER THE THAMES.—Notice has been given of an intended application to Parliament for an act to construct a new bridge over the Thames between the Chelsea railway bridge and Fulham, for carriages and foot passengers, forming a communication between Wandsworth and Fulham, from the York Road on the Surrey side, to Britannia Road, Fulham, on the Middlesex side. It is intended to form several new roads in conjunction with the bridge, one of which will extend to the high road from Wandsworth to London, and the high road from Wandsworth to the new station of the Crystal Palace and West-end railway; and the other from the Britannia Road to Fulham.

DESTRUCTIVE STORM.—On Wednesday and Thursday a storm swept over London, which was one of the most severe which has occurred for many years. Some idea of the force of the hurricane will be gathered from the fact that, at 11 o'clock on Thursday morning, the anemometer on the Royal Exchange registered a pressure of 30 lb. on the square foot. During the day several people were literally blown away, branches of trees were broken off, and the trees themselves uprooted, laden barges were sunk in the river, houses were unroofed, and several stacks of chimneys blown down. One of these, in a small street near the Elephant and Castle, fell on the roof of the house, smashed in the ceiling, and killed one of four children that were in the room, the others being seriously injured. The railway trains were considerably delayed by the violence of the storm. The wind swept along the Thames with great fury, and almost stopped the navigation for the larger classes of ships. In some of the lower reaches there was almost as much sea as could be seen below the Nore, and several disasters were caused by vessels driving from their anchors. The gale was also severely felt in the provinces. At Peterborough, one of the pinnacles of the Cathedral was blown down into the garden of the Bishop's Palace. In Windsor Park several trees were blown down, and in the exposed district round Aldershott the trees for miles were rooted up by hundreds. At all the outports numerous accidents occurred, and several disastrous shipwrecks are reported.

LAW REPORTING.—A meeting of the Bar, convened in compliance with a requisition to the Attorney General, was held in Lincoln's Inn Hall on Wednesday, to consider the subject of a reform in the present system of law reporting. The Attorney-General presided. Mr. Daniel moved, "That in the opinion of this meeting the present system of preparing, editing, and publishing the reports of judicial decisions in this country requires amendment." Sir F. Kelly seconded the motion. Mr. Webster moved, as an amendment, "That the whole subject of law reporting, without prejudice to the present system, should be taken into consideration by a committee of the whole Bar." This amendment was negatived. Another amendment was then proposed by a barrister in the body of the hall, declaring the present system "liable to objection," instead of affirming that it "required amendment." This amendment having also been negatived, the original resolution was carried by a large majority. Sir H. Cairns then moved "That a committee of members of the Bar be appointed to consider the best means of improving the system of preparing, editing, and publishing the reports of judicial decisions, and to report thereon to a public meeting of the Bar." Mr. Malins seconded the resolution, which was carried with scarcely a dissentient, and a committee of 9 gentlemen of the Inner and 12 of the Outer Bar was then nominated, the name of Mr. Denman being subsequently added.

Threatened Destruction of Tooting Common.—An application has been made to the Inclosure Commissioners by the proprietor of Tooting Common to build upon a part of it a number of villa residences. One of the Assistant Commissioners has opened an inquiry in the village on the subject, and on the result of his report the destruction of the Common, which has so long been a source of enjoyment to the inhabitants of the southern suburbs, appears to depend. It is stated on behalf of the proprietor that the present scheme does not involve an occupation of the whole tract, but is only an application for "permission to build round the outskirts of it," under obligation "to keep the remainder for the public inviolate." But the lineal measurement of the outskirts is only about a mile and a half, and taking at only 60 yards the depth which would be required for each house and its private plot, together with the necessary roadways, there would actually remain for the benefit of the public not one-third of the present open land.

Total Destruction of Kilburn Mills.—On Thursday evening a fire broke out in the extensive windmill belonging to Mr. Charles Hale, farmer, situate in the Kilburn Road, and was not subdued until the mill and all it contained was burned to the ground, and the upper part of the dwelling burned out. The books were saved, and the loss will be partially covered by an insurance.

The Fall of a House at Islington.—The inquest on the bodies of the men who were killed by the fall of the house at Islington was opened on Monday, when the jury made a minute inspection of the ruins. The bodies were then identified, and some evidence was given as to their being taken out of the ruins, after which the inquest adjourned.

The Public Health.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the number of deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, November 28, were 1442, which was nearly 100 less than the corrected average for the last 10 years. During the week the births of 1011 boys and 927 girls—in all 1938 children—were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1901.

Provincial.

Aberavon.—The investigation into the cause of the explosion at Morfa Colliery was resumed and concluded on Monday, when, no further discoveries having been made which tended to throw light on the subject, the jury returned an open verdict—That the deceased had died from the effects of the explosion, but there was no evidence to show how it had been caused.

Canterbury.—Miss Hales, the owner of the Hales Place Estate, on which the show of the Royal Agricultural Society was held in 1860, entered a French convent some time ago. She has, however, been allowed to return home on the understanding that she will build a convent on her estate, and at her own expense. The site, 30 acres in extent, has been marked out, and plans of the conventual buildings have been prepared by Mr. Pugin, of Ramsgate. The proposed buildings, which consist of a church, convent, farm buildings, &c., are to be enclosed within a high brick wall. The contract for the buildings alone is 34,954*l.*

Deal.—The Mayor and Corporation of this town have approved of the plans proposed by Mr. Alfred Giles, C.E., for constructing a harbour in the Downs. Mr. Giles proposes to construct a basin of 30 acres in extent on the waste ground near Sandown Castle, to be connected with Sandwich by a canal 100 ft. wide, through which the water of the river Stour can be diverted when necessary, to flush out the entrance to the basin. The estimated cost of the works is 200,000*l.* There will be an outer harbour always open, with 10 feet of water at the lowest spring tides, and the entrance to which will be protected with two arms or piers. The works will not interfere with the drainage of the marshes, and the waters of the Stour will be so seldom required for flushing the basin that the river above and below Sandwich will not be injuriously affected. It is intended to apply to Parliament next Session for powers to construct the works. Joint committees of the promoters in Deal and Sandwich have been appointed to bring the matter before the public, and it is expected that the project will be liberally supported by the shipowners and underwriters in the metropolis.

Droitwich.—Miss Amelia Huband, a young lady living with the Rev. J. E. Vernon, curate of Himbleton, near this town, and who was niece of his wife, died in October last after a short illness. She was buried on the certificate of a surgeon that the cause of death was bilious cholera and syncope. Rumours, however, got abroad that she had come by her death unfairly, and the coroner recently ordered the body to be exhumed. A post mortem examination then disclosed the fact that deceased was five or six months pregnant, and an analysis of the stomach proved that she had died from arsenic, which had been taken in quantities sufficient to have destroyed half a dozen persons. It appeared from the evidence at the inquest that she had lived for 12 or 13 years with Mrs. Vernon, who had always considered her well conducted, and had no suspicion of her pregnancy. She had however become acquainted with a carpenter in the village, called Cole, whom she used to admit into the back kitchen at night after her uncle and aunt had gone to bed. After this intimacy had gone on for three years and a half, she found herself with child, whereupon Cole offered to marry her, but she said that such a connection would be altogether against the wishes of her family. She then appears to have poisoned herself with arsenic, a large packet of which was found in a cupboard at her uncle's house. After her death, Cole applied to Mrs. Vernon for a ring and other articles which he had given to deceased, and they were returned to him through the post. The jury returned a verdict that deceased was several months pregnant, and died from the effects of arsenic, but whether taken by herself or given to her by any other person there was no evidence to show.

Guildford.—The inquest on the body of Elizabeth Waterer, the young woman found in a bedroom at the Coachmakers' Arms beerhouse in North Street, was resumed on Monday in the presence of Sergeant Mahaig, of the 3d Regiment, who was found lying by her side with his throat cut. He was exceedingly weak, and looked much dejected. The evidence showed that the woman purchased a packet of "Butler's vermin and insect killer" at the shop of a chemist in High Street, on the Tuesday before the discovery of the bodies. She gave her own name, and stated that she wanted it for the purpose of killing rats, which infested her master's kitchen from the outhouses of his farm. The paper labelled with the name of the poison was found in the room. Mahaig, whose character in his regiment is described as good, before leaving Aldershott wrote a letter to his mother, bidding her good by, and stating that he should not be long in this world. The letters found on the table in the bedroom and in the pockets of the man and woman showed they had both agreed to take the poison, and a letter written by the man to the coroner stated that the girl had previously endeavoured to strangle herself with a rope. The jury returned a verdict that Elizabeth Waterer destroyed her own life on or about the 4th of November, while in a sound state of mind, and that Joseph Mahaig was guilty of aiding and abetting in the same. The witnesses were then bound over to appear at the next assizes in the prosecution of Mahaig on the charge of Wilful Murder.

Leeds.—On Monday morning, while the girls were employed on the sewing machines in the fourth story of Mr. John Barran's wholesale clothing establishment in Alfred Street, Boar Lane, the floor of the story above them, which was in course of being rebuilt, gave way, and a large quantity of building materials fell upon five of the girls and buried them in the ruins. They were extricated without loss of life and removed to the Infirmary, but one of them was so dangerously injured that her life is despaired of.

Manchester.—At the weekly meeting of the Central Executive Committee on Monday, the Earl of Derby in the Chair, the hon. secretary reported that 2635*l.* had been received during the week, and that the balance in the bank was 245,818*l.* Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported that on the 21st inst. there was an increase of 863 in the number of persons receiving parochial relief in the 27 unions of the district, as compared with the number relieved in the previous week. He added that pauperism was not only again increasing, but the high price of cotton rendered the position of the manufacturers extremely perilous, and little work was done by them, except to order. If a hard winter should arrive, with four or five weeks of frost, not a single able-bodied man would be found at work upon the public works; and as those now employed on them had had no opportunity of saving, they must in such a case all fall upon the rates. In reply to Mr. R. Gladstone, he said that, supposing the whole of the money set apart by parliament for public works were granted, employment might ultimately be found for 30,000 persons upon such works. He did not expect that this Act would fully come into operation till next spring. Colonel W. Patten asked whether the 800 increase arose from the stoppage of factories or other causes. His impression was that the number employed in the mills had not decreased. Mr. Ashworth said that in Rochdale, the increase of unemployed was 300, according to the guardians' relief returns, and nearly the whole of that number arose from the stoppage of mills. Mr. T. Ashton said that in Hyde they had a large increase of the unemployed, without the stoppage of a single mill, the manufacturers being compelled to stop portions of their machinery. After some discussion, Colonel Patten moved that the chairman be requested to call the attention of the Home Secretary to the complaints made of the delay and expense attending applications for loans under the Public Works Act of last session, and to submit to his consideration the suggestion made to this committee that the balance accruing to Government in raising money under the provisions of that Act affords a means of relieving parties borrowing, from the expenses complained of. Lord Egerton, of Tatton, seconded the resolution, which was carried.

Masborough.—A shocking accident took place on Monday morning in the Thryberg Hall Colliery, at Kilnhurst, about four miles from this town. The day hands, numbering about 240, assembled at the pit's mouth at the usual hour, and after the underground steward and his deputies had made their usual examination of the mine, commenced descending in parties of half-a-dozen at a time. When about 120 of them had been sent down, a party of six men and youths got into the chair. It was suspended from the sides by no less than six chains, meeting upon a hook in the centre, which was attached to the strong winding rope. The steward was superintending the descent of the men, and saw that they were all properly placed. While, however, watching their descent, he was startled by a loud cry coming from the shaft. The engine was instantly stopped, when it was found by the state of the rope that the cage was stuck in the shaft. The steward and others went immediately down the second shaft, and on arriving at the bottom found that the men had descended about 140 yards in safety, when the cage suddenly tipped on one end, and they were all precipitated to the bottom, not less than 150 yards below the spot from which they fell. One of the men fell across one of the timber "stays" that brace the sides of the shaft. His body was cut in two, one half remaining on the stay, and the other falling to the bottom. His head was also cut off. The others were so mangled as to be almost unrecognisable, and it was found necessary to provide boxes to carry away their remains. The cause of the cage slipping in the shaft is at present unknown.

Oxford.—The vacant canonry of Christ Church, with the Professorship of Ecclesiastical History attached, vacant by the promotion of Dr. Stanley to the Deanery of Westminster, has been conferred on the Rev. W. W. Shirley, of Wadham College, son of the late Dr. Shirley, Bishop of Sodor and Man, and heir presumptive to the earldom of Ferrers.

Salisbury.—A fatal accident occurred on Saturday evening to the Hon. Henry Nelson, youngest brother of Earl Nelson, of Trafalgar House, Downton. Mr. Nelson had been riding, and was returning to Landford House, in the parish of Plaitford. He was mounted on a very young horse, and at the Earldom's Gate, Landford, the wife of the gatekeeper, perceiving that the animal was restive, inquired the reason. Mr. Nelson told her that he thought it had been frightened by a threshing-machine. The woman endeavoured to hold the horse while Mr. Nelson tightened the girths, but the animal broke away from her and started off in the direction of Plaitford. Mr. Nelson retained his seat for about half a mile, but was eventually thrown, and, it is believed, dragged for a considerable distance. The butler to the Dowager Countess Nelson, who was waiting with the carriage at Landford House, was attracted by the galloping of the horse, and on going into the road he discovered the unfortunate gentleman lying insensible. He was immediately removed into the house, where he became conscious for a few minutes, but he rapidly sank, and died about a quarter past 8 o'clock. At the inquest on Monday, it was shown that death had resulted from concussion of the brain, and a verdict of Accidental Death was accordingly returned. The deceased gentleman was 28 years of age, and was greatly respected in the neighbourhood. —A large number of Roman copper coins of very ancient date and of different reigns have been discovered in the vicinity of Old Sarum, on property belonging to Mr. John H. Campbell Wyndham, of the College, Salisbury. One jar contained no less than 218, another 159, and a third 140, the whole, together with the jars, being in a good state of preservation.

Sandringham.—The Prince of Wales spent the last day of his recent visit to Sandringham in riding over the estate, and making himself personally acquainted with the state of the cottages. His Royal Highness, accompanied by the new steward, inspected the rooms in the cottages, and gave orders for immediate improvement in the extent of accommodation. The prompt and personal interest which the Prince has manifested will, it is hoped, lead to practical steps being taken generally in the county of Norfolk for the impro vementof labourers' cottages.

Windsor.—The interior of the new Royal Dairy at Frogmore is decorating in a very beautiful manner. The walls are lined with white and coloured tiles, designed in a rich and tasteful style, and bearing representations of the seasons of the year depicted in a series of selections from agricultural life. The windows are filled with coloured glass, and when the decorations of this beautiful little building are entirely completed, it will afford one of the most striking examples of what taste and refinement can do towards elevating even one of the commonest and simplest operations of rural life.

Yarmouth.—Robert Hales, known as the Norfolk giant, died at this town on Sunday week. He was born at West Somerton in 1820, and was therefore only 43 years of age. He came of a family remarkable for their great stature, his father, a farmer, being 6 feet 6 inches in height, and his mother 6 feet. An ancestor of his mother was said to have been that famous warder of Henry VIII., who stood 8 feet 4 inches in height. Of such parents the progeny were worthy; the boys averaging 6 feet 5 inches, and the girls 6 feet 3½ inches each. Robert stood 7 feet 6 inches, and weighed 452 lbs. One of his sisters, with whom he exhibited some years ago, was 7 feet 2 inches, but she died in 1842, being then only 20 years of age. He was stout in proportion to his height, though somewhat clumsily put together. When in his prime he was 64 inches round the chest, 62 round the waist, 36 across the shoulders, and 21 round the calf of the leg. During his career he visited several continental capitals, and was presented to Louis Philippe while King of the French. He was introduced to the Americans under the auspices of Barnum, and 28,000 persons flocked to see him in 10 days. On his return to this country he had the honour of being exhibited at Court, when her Majesty gave him a gold watch and chain, of which he was particularly proud, and wore to the day of his death. During last summer he visited Yarmouth for the benefit of his health, which had been very much impaired by the close confinement of the caravans in which he exhibited. He seemed to rally under the genial summer weather, but as autumn wore on he gradually declined, and at length died of consumption.

Ireland.

Scotch Farmers in Ireland.—A shocking outrage has been committed in the King's County, showing a feeling among the lower classes which baffles every attempt at improvement. A Scotchman in 1857 took as a farm the lands of Mullagherew, near Blue Ball, consisting of 153 Irish acres, which for some time previous had been nearly all in grass, no tenant evicted, nor any such cause of irritation. In 1860 the landlord's interest, being a fee farm at a small rent, was bought in the Landed Estates' Court by another Scotchman, Mr. Richardson, who arranged with the former man, and went into occupation of the land. He immediately began to farm the whole land upon the most improved system of tillage—large fields, rotation of crops, heavy manuring, large proportion of green crop feeding, early sowing, early harvesting, and heavy crops, and, as a consequence, abundance of employment. But in order to carry out this system successfully and to gather around himself the best labourers, he gave his men 2*d.* a day more than the usual wages in the country. On Saturday week he gave a harvest home, with dancing and music, to the workmen employed by him during the last year, and their wives and families. While the amusement was going on, 15 men armed with guns and pistols rushed into the house, broke all the windows, fired a shot at Mr. Richardson himself, and then dragged him out and beat him, almost before the very eyes of his own labourers and servants, not one of whom raised a hand to protect him. Believing that Mr. Richardson had been shot dead, the ruffians then went into another room and took possession of some bottles containing whisky, after which they decamped. The police are making every exertion to bring the perpetrators to punishment; but it may be death to any one who will give evidence which may lead to conviction.

Scotland.

The Alleged Confederate War Steamer in the Clyde.—A correspondence took place lately between the Government and the Glasgow Emancipation Society with reference to the screw steamer Pampero, recently launched from the building-yard of Messrs. Thomson. The Pampero is at present lying at Lancefield Quay, Broomielaw. A large number of workmen are employed on board in completing her fittings, and it is expected she will soon be ready for sea. Meanwhile instructions have been received from Government that the vessel must be detained; and her Majesty's gunboat Bullfinch is moored opposite Lancefield Quay to prevent her escape. The owners of the Pampero deny that there are any war fittings about her, and allege that she differs little, if at all, from those merchant ships of which so many are built on the Clyde every year.

Law.

Court of Queen's Bench.—Symm v. Fraser and Andrews.—This was an action brought before the Lord Chief Justice and a special jury, by an elderly woman, the widow of a tradesman lately residing in Camden Town, against two medical men practising in that neighbourhood—Dr. Fraser, a physician, and Dr. Andrews, a general practitioner, for "assaulting" and "ill-using" her, and putting her under personal restraint. The ground of action laid was not mere negligence or ignorance, or want of due care and skill, but that they were so utterly without the least pretence for what they did or advised that they were downright tresspassers and wrongdoers. The case, as observed by the counsel for the plaintiff, is of some interest, as illustrating the risks and responsibilities to which medical men are exposed in the course of their practice. Dr. Fraser is a physician of more than 30 years' standing, and Mr. Andrews a member of the College of Surgeons and a general practitioner who has been nine years in practice. A day or two before Christmas they were both sent for to see the plaintiff; first one of them, and then the other, and then both together, by day and by night, sometimes several times a day, and each of them once so late as three or four in the morning, on Christmas Eve and on Christmas Day, and the day after Christmas Day, and so on for all the Christmas week. They found the plaintiff living with an imbecile brother and a female companion, without any servant, in a parlour where she was passing night as well as day, labouring, as they considered, under the influence of drink; both her person and her room being in a state they described as filthy and offensive almost beyond description. The smell, they said, was noisome to the last degree; and to one of them so much so as "almost to make him vomit." In this room they had during the Christmas week to pay a good many visits, and according to their account their visits were not pleasant. At every visit they found, they said, traces of the same indulgence; they learnt on inquiry of her companion, that she was drinking, and they warned her again and again, but in vain. They told her that if she did not abstain it would be a serious case—that delirium tremens would set in; and after two or three days, as they both declared, they found all the symptoms of the earlier stage of that dreadful disease—excitement, restlessness, distressing want of sleep, heat in the throat, and oppression of the chest and a sense of choking and suffocation, a terrified look, and wild, suffused eyes, a thick voice and a "rambling way of speaking," and at length traces of that which marks the last and worst stage of the disease—delusions and hallucinations. She was, they said, rolling and falling about, always crying out for wine, and Dr. Fraser described her as staggering on her knees before him, screaming out, "A hundred pounds for a bottle of wine!" That they believed her to be suffering from this disease was clear, for they treated her for it, and gave her morphia. On the 26th, the day after Christmas Day, she became much worse and very excited. They became anxious, and had a consultation with a physician with whom she was acquainted, Dr. Barnes, who agreed with them as to her state, and approved their treatment. In the meantime the doctors kept, as they said, directing that she should be kept from drink, which, it appeared, her imbecile brother continued to get for her, and which Mrs. Hill, her only companion, declared herself unable to prevent her getting. In the course of the 26th the necessity for a nurse and a male attendant was discussed. The plaintiff herself appeared to have suggested the one, and a friend of hers, a Mrs. Taylor, the other. In the course of that day it appeared, as Mrs. Hill was going away, declaring that "she could stand it no longer," the plaintiff herself begged the doctors to recommend her a nurse, and though they declined at first, yet, at her earnest entreaties, they referred her to some one who did so. Mrs. Taylor, a sister of Dr. Barnes, who had casually made her acquaintance, and who was then staying in the house, what with the condition of the plaintiff herself, and what with her imbecile brother and a dog belonging to him, seems to have become uneasy, and asked them to recommend some man to stay in the house a few nights until the plaintiff was better. Mr. Andrews being thus pressed, was induced to do so, and the man came, and was engaged, as it appeared, by Mrs. Taylor. The male and female attendants were there only two or three nights, during the worst part of the plaintiff's attack, and when she was better were removed. Towards the close of the week two friends of the plaintiff—a Mr. and Mrs. Bennett—saw her, and the doctors, as she complained of the attendants, got them sent away. They were paid by the plaintiff, and she in a few days went down suddenly to Bath, leaving the house deserted and unprotected, so that the police made inquiries about her, and some one got in at the back to look after her. In a few weeks she came back, and accompanied by a friend, a person named Burge, went to the doctors and reproached them with having put the persons into her house to take care of her. They both denied having done so, but declared that whoever had done so, she ought to be obliged to them, for that at the time she was unable to take care of herself. She paid them for their attendance, and for a whole year they heard no more of it. In January, however, they found themselves made defendants in an action at law, in which the "declaration" charged "that they, with divers other persons as their servants and at their commands, entered her dwelling house and made a great disturbance therein, and stayed there a long time, and assaulted and beat her, and imprisoned her, and put her under bodily restraint, under the false and unfounded pretence that she was a person of unsound mind, incapable of taking care of herself and unfit to be at liberty, and kept and continued her so imprisoned for a long time, and prevented her friends from having access to her, and kept her without proper food and sustenance, and forced her to take and swallow noxious drugs and compounds, and thereby injured her and impaired her health." To which they pleaded "Not Guilty," and that all they did was by the plaintiff's leave and licence as her medical attendants. The evidence in support of the case was that of the plaintiff herself, whose statements were slightly supported by the evidence of a friend, Mr. Bennett, while several witnesses deposed that they had never seen her the worse for drink, and that, so far as their knowledge went, she was a person of decidedly abstemious habits. For the defence both the defendants were called as witnesses, and stated that the plaintiff was suffering from delirium tremens when they were called in, and that they treated her according to the recognised method for that disease. Their evidence was confirmed by Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Young, and by the statements of Mrs. Bennett and Mrs. Taylor, neither of whom could be called as witnesses, one being dead, the other of them abroad. Further, the case for the defence was confirmed by the evidence of the police, and a police-sergeant, who had been called in by Mrs. Hill, swore that he saw the plaintiff—twice in a few minutes—drink tumblers half full of sherry, and that in their judgment she was drunk during the week in question. Mr. Barnett, a surgeon of Bath, who had been called for the plaintiff, deposed that during the whole of the time he was attending her in that city after her illness at Camden Town, he was under the impression that she indulged in drink. A physician, who also attended her at Bath about the same period, had a suspicion that she was suffering from excitement caused by drink, though he might have mistaken the symptoms for those of "travelling gout." The trial, after lasting five days, was brought to a close on Tuesday, when the Lord Chief Justice summed up, and the jury, after a few minutes' consultation, without leaving their box, returned a verdict for the defendants.

Railways.

Opening of the Charing-Cross.—The short line from London Bridge to Charing-Cross, the forerunner of the many schemes now known under the general name of metropolitan extensions, was provisionally opened on Wednesday with all the pomp and circumstance which could be imparted by the visit of a large party of directors and officials, though the opening to the public will probably not take place before the 1st of January. Although scarcely more than two miles in length, this line has occupied three years in construction, and in an engineering point of view is one of the most remarkable works in or near London. Between London Bridge Station and the Belvidere Road no less than 15 gigantic iron bridges span the various thoroughfares intersected by it; and finally the Thames is crossed by a bridge which has already become celebrated as a specimen of the lattice-girder system of construction. The deflection on passing over this bridge was very slight, and on entering the Charing-Cross Station, which now occupies the site of old Hungerford Market, the engineer and contractors were warmly congratulated on the successful termination of their labours. The directors and their guests afterwards partook of a déjeûner at Morley's Hotel. It may be mentioned that the purchase of the land for this railway and for the Cannon Street extension has involved an outlay of more than two millions sterling, and although it traverses one of the most densely populated districts of London, not more than 250 houses have been required to be pulled down.

Metropolitan Railway Projects.—The notices of intended applications to Parliament in the ensuing Session for railway bills are very numerous, exceeding 300 for Great Britain, including about 30 for the metropolis. The importance of the latter may be imagined from the fact that there is scarcely a district of London which they do not propose to deal with, either underground or overground, demolishing houses and streets in all directions, appropriating the squares for railway stations, throwing bridges over some of the great thoroughfares, and crossing others, including in one case such a street as the Strand, on a level. It may also be remarked as showing the enormous amount of property affected by these projects, that every mile of railway occupies about 11 acres of land, including stations, that land in the metropolis is worth from 100,000*l.* to 1,000,000*l.* per acre, and that the Charing Cross Railway and City branch will cost nearly 1,500,000*l.* a mile, although passing through probably the least valuable property in the metropolis. Five of these schemes are underground lines connected with the Thames embankment, from Westminster to Blackfriars, and the new street from New Bridge Street to the Mansion House, viz., the London Low Level, the London Union, the Victoria Station and Thames Embankment, the Metropolis District, and the Metropolitan Grand Union. The London, Chatham, and Dover Company seek for power to vest the Ludgate Hill portion of their Metropolitan Extension, from Earl Street to the Metropolitan, in the Great Northern Company, either wholly or partially. The Great Northern are to have power to run from their main line at King's Cross over the Metropolitan and London, Chatham, and Dover to the New Station fronting the Crystal Palace, and also to run to and from the Victoria Station, Pimlico. The Metropolitan Company propose to make a junction line with the Midland near the Euston Road; to extend their extension line from near Finsbury Circus to Trinity Square, Tower Hill; and also at the other end, from Paddington to Notting Hill, Kensington, and Brompton. A new company will ask for power to extend the Metropolitan from Baker Street Station to St. John's Wood and the Finchley Road Station of the Hampstead Junction. The Great Eastern Company propose to extend their main line from near Tap Street to Wormwood Street, Bishopsgate, running for the greater part of the distance alongside of the City Extension of the North London, having a Station in Wormwood Street. They also propose to extend their line northwards from near Tap Street to Tottenham and Edmonton. There are two schemes—the East London and the Thames Tunnel—to carry railways through the Tunnel, to make suitable approaches, and to connect the railways north and south of the Thames in that direction. Charing Cross appears to be a very favourite point of convergence. A company proposes to make a line from the London and North-Western at Willesden and the Great Western near Bishop's Road, Paddington, to the Charing Cross. The Hampstead, Midland, North-Western, and Charing Cross Companies propose to make a line from Hampstead Heath, the Midland at Upper Park Road, and the London and North-Western near the Primrose Hill tunnel, to the Charing Cross. The Charing Cross Northern Company propose to make lines from the Great Northern and Midland near King's Cross to the Charing Cross. The Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Company propose to make a line from St. John's Church, Holloway Road, forming junctions in its route with the London and North-Western and Midland near Euston Road, terminating by a junction with the Charing Cross near the northern end of the bridge over the Thames. The North and South Junction (high level) propose to make lines from Moorgate Street and Swan Alley to the South-Eastern and London and Brighton, with a branch to St. Helen's Place. Another company proposes to make a line from the Blackwall, near Cannon Street Road to the Great Northern near the Seven Sisters' Road Station, and to the Midland at Kentish Town. The Tottenham and Farringdon Street Company propose to make a line from Tottenham, Stoke Newington, Islington, and Clerkenwell to the north side of Ludgate Hill. The Victoria Station and Thames Embankment Company propose to make a line from the Victoria Station, Pimlico, passing through and under Victoria Street, the Broad Sanctuary, New Palace Yard, Bridge Street, and the Thames Embankment to Blackfriars Bridge. The Thames Viaduct Company propose to make a line from the third pier of Westminster Bridge to the second pier of London Bridge, city side. The Oxford Street and City Company propose to make a line underground from Park Lane through and under Oxford Street, New Oxford Street, High Holborn, Greville Street, and Charles Street to Farringdon Road, near the Metropolitan Station. The Mid-London Company propose to make a line from the West London Extension at Kensington to the Victoria Station, Pimlico, passing under Cromwell Road, Hyde Park Corner, to the centre of Coventry Street, near the Haymarket, and thence to York Terrace, Adelphi. Then another line from Victoria Station, Pimlico, passing along and under Victoria Street, Scotland Yard, along the foreshore of the Thames to New Bridge Street, to the Chatham and Dover in Skinner Street, also a branch from New Bridge Street, under the centre of New Earl Street to Bread Street, Gracechurch Street, and the Fenchurch Street Station. A line from the London and North-Western at Gloucester Road, Regent's Park, to the above mentioned line in the centre of Coventry Street. A line from Leicester Square to the Adelphi. Lines from Kensington to the Metropolitan Railway at Paddington. Some of this Company's lines are intended to be carried over ground, and some underground. Of the 37 lines proposed by this company, they intend six to be made by the Metropolitan. The London Low Level Company propose to start with a line from the Victoria Station, Pimlico, passing along and under Victoria Street, part of the Thames Embankment, along and across sundry streets to Dowgate Hill. Branches from Scotland Yard to the Charing Cross, from the main line at Blackfriars to the Metropolitan in Farringdon Road; and a branch from this underground branch near Ludgate Hill to the main line, where it is intended to cross Printing House Square. The main line is proposed to be extended to the Metropolitan at Finsbury Circus. They also propose to make four new streets. The London Union Company propose to make lines from Hendon to Chelsea, several junction lines with the South-Western and London, and Chatham and Dover; a line from Westminster Bridge, along the foreshore of the Thames, to the Inner Temple, Blackfriars, Snow Hill, and Charlotte Row, Poultry. The London Main Trunk Company propose to construct their underground system from the Great Eastern at Old Ford Road to Mile End Old Town and the Metropolitan Extension at Finsbury Circus; a line from this point to the Chatham and Dover at Blackfriars, regardless of an existing and authorised line for that purpose; a line from Labour-in-Vain Square to Ludgate Hill; sundry branches to Whitechapel, Fenchurch Street, and Cannon Street; and a line from Labour-in Vain Square to the Bridewell, Whitefriars, Inner Temple, and Westminster Bridge. The Metropolitan District Company propose to construct an inner circle of railways within London north of the Thames, and also an outer circle round the metropolis north and south of the Thames, including 34 railways and junctions. The main outer circle is proposed to commence at Wandsworth by a junction with the Chatham and Dover, passing to Battersea, Old Brompton, Notting Hill, Kensington, Paddington, Kilburn, Finchley Road station and Seven Sisters Road, Stamford Hill, Stratford, New Cross, making junctions with the Great Western, the London and North-Western, the Midland, Great Northern, Great Eastern, and all the railways in its route. The inner circle is proposed to start from Brompton, thence to Cannon Row, Westminster, to Cannon Street, City, and the Blackwall, Fenchurch Street. The Metropolitan Grand Union propose to make lines from the West London at Kensington to the Inner Temple and to the Blackwall, near Christian Street, from thence to the Metropolitan at Finsbury Circus; from Kensington to the Metropolitan at Paddington; a line from the South-Eastern in Bermondsey to the city branch of the North-London; and about nine branch or junction lines with railways in its route. The projects for accommodating the suburban districts are not numerous. The Great Northern and Victoria Station Company propose to make a line from the Great Northern at a point about a mile and a half from Barnet, passing near Finchley, Hendon, Willesden, and Kensington to the West London. The Edgware, Highgate, and London Company propose to make an extension from Hornsey to the Alexandra Park. The Wood Green and Enfield Company propose to make a line from the Wood Green Station of the Great Northern to the Great Eastern at Enfield. The Watford and Edgware Junction Company propose a line from Watford to the Edgware, Highgate, and London at Edgware. The Tottenham and Hampstead Junction propose to make an extension to the Alexandra Park from the main line near St. John's Church, in the Holloway Road, to Muswell Hill, near the Green Man, skirting the Alexandra Park, and passing in its route through a district which is practically inaccessible to omnibuses, to the Colney Hatch Station of the Great Northern. The North London Company propose an extension of their City branch northwards from Kingsland to Tottenham.

Obituary.

VISCOUNT MIDLETON died suddenly on Wednesday evening, at his seat, Pepper Harrow Park, near Godalming, in his 72d year. Charles Brodrick, sixth Viscount Midleton, Baron Brodrick of Ireland, and Baron Brodrick of Great Britain, was son of the late Archbishop of Cashel, by the daughter of Bishop Woodward, of Cloyne. He was born at Cahirmone in 1791, and married in 1825 the third daughter of the 22d Lord le Despencer, by whom he leaves two daughters—the Hon. Mary Emma Brodrick, born in 1826, and the Hon. Olbinia Frances, wife of Mr. A. S. Leslie Melville. His lordship was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1812. He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1819, and succeeded his cousin in the peerage in 1848. His lordship is succeeded in the title and estates by his brother, the Hon. and Rev. William John Brodrick, Dean of Exeter, who was born in 1798, married first in 1824 the eldest daughter of the sixth Earl of Cardigan, and relict of the Hon. John Perceval, and, secondly, in 1829, his cousin, the daughter of the fourth Viscount Midleton, by whom he has a son and other children. His lordship was rector of Bath from 1839 to 1854, is one of the Chaplains to the Queen, and was appointed to the Deanery of Exeter in the present year.

SIR THOMAS GEORGE SKIPWITH, BART., died on the 20th ult., at Leamington Spa, in his 60th year. He was the eldest son of the 8th Baronet, and was born in 1803. He married, first, in 1840, the daughter of Mr. Thomas Hatton, of Liverpool, and secondly, in 1853, the second daughter of Mr. Herbert B. Moore, of Anaghbeg, Galway, by whom he leaves a young family. His eldest son, now in his 7th year, succeeds him in the baronetcy.

REAR-ADMIRAL SIR JAMES HANWAY PLUMRIDGE, K.C.B., died on the 29th ult., at Hopton Hall, Suffolk, in his 76th year. He was educated at the Naval Academy, Chelsea, and entered the navy in 1799. He served in Egypt in 1801, and at Trafalgar in 1805. In 1806 he was made a lieutenant, and commanded the boats of the Melpomene frigate at the capture of a Danish war cutter in 1809. He was first lieutenant of the Menelaus at the taking of the Isle of France. He was aide-de-camp to the commander-in-chief at the capture of Genoa in 1814, and for his services was promoted to be commander in 1814. Subsequently he commanded vessels on the Indian, St. Helena, and Irish stations, and was made post-captain for his services against smugglers on the coast of Ireland. He was captain of the Magicienne, frigate, in India for several years, and was captain-superintendent at Falmouth for five years, when he was appointed Storekeeper-General of the United Kingdom. From 1841 to 1847 he represented Falmouth and Penrhyn in the House of Commons. In 1854 he commanded the flying squadron in the Gulf of Bothnia as rear-admiral, and three years afterwards succeeded to the second command in the Baltic Fleet. He served at the capture of Bomarsund, and subsequently commanded two detached squadrons. He was appointed Admiral-Superintendent of Plymouth Dockyard in 1855, and became Rear-Admiral of the Red in 1856. He was married three times—first, in 1821, to the daughter of Rear-Admiral Hart; second, in 1835, to the daughter of the Right Hon. Hugh Elliott; and third, 1849, to the daughter of Col. Skinner, of the Royal Artillery.

THE REV. CANON MALTBY, canon residentiary of Durham, and third son of the late Bishop Maltby, died at the College, Durham, on the 24th ult. He graduated of Caius College, Cambridge, and in 1842 was presented by his father to the living of Eaglescliffe, near Yarm, in Yorkshire, valued at 1080*l*. In 1852 he was collated to a stall in Durham Cathedral, worth 1000*l*.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Dec. 5.

All kinds of produce in season are abundant. Pine Apples are unusually well supplied; prices for them are lower than last week. Imported Grapes realise 8d. to 1s. per lb. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Nelis d'Hiver, Glou Morceau, Monsieur le Curé, and Beurré Diel Pears. Good English Apples are getting somewhat scarce. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin and Cox's Orange Pippin Apples may still be obtained. Kent Cobs are good and plentiful. New St. Michael Oranges realise from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Primroses, Mignonette, and Roses.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

MONDAY, Nov. 30.

We have a very short supply of Beasts, and favourable weather causes a considerable demand. Prices are higher for all kinds. The number of Sheep is about the same as on Monday last. Trade is more active, and a clearance is readily effected at higher rates. Good Calves are scarce and dearer. From Germany and Holland there are 1660 Beasts, 6040 Sheep, and 263 Calves; from Spain, 60 Beasts; from Ireland, 500; and 2260 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

THURSDAY, Dec. 3.

We have a very short supply of Beasts, and a fair demand, consequently Monday's quotations are well maintained, and a good clearance effected. The number of Sheep is unusually small; they are readily disposed of at fully late rates. Good Calves are scarce, and dearer; prices have advanced a little on all descriptions. Our foreign supply consists of 470 Beasts, 1170 Sheep, and 155 Calves. Milch Cows, 35.

MARK LANE.—MONDAY, Nov. 30.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was very small, and disposed of at an improvement of 1s. per qr. upon the prices of this day se'nnight. The attendance was good, but business in foreign Wheat limited; on the sales effected, however, an advance of 1s. per qr upon last Monday's prices was established. Malting Barley brings last week's quotations; grinding 6d. per qr. cheaper. Beans and Peas were 1s. per qr. dearer. The Oat trade was steady, and good corn 6d. higher in value. Good American Flour is scarce, and 6d. per barrel dearer.

Friday, Dec. 4

The weather from the 27th to the 30th ult. was very fine, with frost. On the 1st it was again mild with heavy showers, and gale from the S.E., and has since blown heavily; to-day fine and calm. The Wheat trade during the week has continued to improve, and a further rise in prices of 1s. per qr. has been general. The farmers' supplies of Barley have again been very large, which has caused a decline of about 1s. per qr, throughout the kingdom, the finest malting qualities excepted. No quotable alteration has occurred in the value of Beans, but the prices of Oats and Peas have been firm, with an upward tendency. Since Friday last 29 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been active during this week; Wheat has advanced 6d. to 1s., Maize 6d. per qr., but Barley is a trifle lower. Paris, Dec. 3.—Flour has remained firm, but there was little doing; yesterday, however, the market was more active. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 32s. 6d. per 280 lbs.; the present stock is estimated at 4500 cwt. Wheat is unaltered, but the large offers from the farmers make the trade inanimate. The arrivals of English grain this week have been small, of all descriptions of foreign as well as Flour moderate. To-day's market was unusually thinly attended. Both English and foreign Wheat were held at Monday's prices, which, however, must be considered nominal, as the business transacted was of a most trifling character. Spring Corn was steady at Monday's quotations.

Liverpool, Dec. 1.—We have had rather a fair attendance of millers and dealers at to-day's market, and Wheat must be quoted 1d. per cental dearer than on Friday, but the demand is scarcely so brisk as then, either for speculation or to hold over. Flour is held firmly for an advance of 6d. per barrel and sack. Indian Corn is offered quite sparingly, and the small business doing is at 6d. per qr. over late rates. Oats and Oatmeal extremely dull. Beans have improved 6d. per qr. Peas and Barley remain stationary.

Larger sizes of any of the above.

By an improved and new action of the handle, this Pump is so constructed that a great deal of friction is avoided; an air vessel is secured, and by introducing a brass lining into the barrel, with brass bucket and sucker, many of the objections to iron pumps are overcome. By this Pump ONE MAN WILL FORCE THE WATER in a continuous stream TO A HEIGHT OF 50 FEET. When mounted on a barrow it forms a cheap, useful, and portable Fire Engine or Garden and Field Irrigator. The simplicity of its construction enables it to be offered to the public at a less price than any other Pump of equal capabilities.

IMPROVED
KOH-I-NOOR LAMP,
HYDRO-CARBON OILS.

No. 12. No. 1.

J. WARNER and SONS have much pleasure in informing the public that they have produced a Superior LAMP for Burning any Description of Hydro-Carbon or Mineral Oils, and can, with great confidence, recommend the same as the best Lamp yet offered for the purpose.

The LAMP is easily Trimmed, the Wick requires Cutting but seldom, and a beautifully Brilliant and White Light is produced without either Smoke or Smell, combustion being more perfect than in Lamps with the common Flat Wick.

The LAMP is introduced as a Pillar Lamp for the Dining or Drawing-room, as a Bracket and Hanging Lamp for the Hall, or Public Assembly Rooms.

They are Ornamental in appearance, Strong, and of First-class Workmanship.

THE ABOVE FIRST-CLASS LAMPS TO BE OBTAINED OF ANY LAMP DEALER.

Drainage of Land.
MR. C. F. HUMBERT, F.G.S., of Watford, Herts, and formerly Senior Surveyor to the Tithe Commission, a Land Surveyor and Land Agent, more than 20 years established in practice, undertakes works of Drainage either at a contract price, or to lay out and overlook the same at a commission of 5s. per acre; and he has at his command a staff of experienced workmen. His custom is to charge merely the expenses out of pocket in making the preliminary Survey and Estimate where the works are not carried out.

News of the Week.

THE KING of DENMARK published a proclamation on Monday, withdrawing the Royal Patent of the 30th March, which was supposed to be the chief pretext for the threat of Federal Execution in Holstein. Notwithstanding this conciliatory measure, the German Governments appear determined to proceed to Federal Execution. In the Austrian Reichsrath on Friday, Count RECHBERG made a formal declaration on the subject of the Danish Duchies, which mainly corresponded with that made last week by Count VON BISMARCK to the Prussian Chamber. He said that Austria is not prepared without mature consideration to countenance the claims of Prince FREDERICK of AUGUSTENBURG, but is ready to maintain her share of the Treaty of London, if Denmark will fulfil her engagements under the same treaty. At the same time, she is ready to join Prussia in at once taking steps to carry out Federal execution. The Federal Diet on Monday adopted, by a small majority, the resolution for Federal execution in Holstein, reserving to itself the settlement of the question of the succession; and the PRESIDENT subsequently notified to the Danish Government that if within three days Denmark did not comply with the demands of the Diet, Federal troops would enter the Duchy. The Prussian Government on Wednesday demanded of the Chamber of Deputies a loan of 12 million thalers to meet the expense of the proposed execution, and the Austrian Government are about to demand from the Reichsrath an extraordinary credit of 15 million florins to meet the expenses of the expedition. In the Wurtemburg Chamber of Deputies on Thursday an address to the Government was adopted, requesting them to propose in the Federal Diet the immediate occupation of Schleswig, and the proximate recognition of Prince FREDERICK'S rights of succession; and a subsequent motion for a solemn protest against the maintenance of the London Treaty was carried by 78 to 3. The latest news states that an Austrian regiment left Prague on Thursday for Theresienstadt, where the execution troops are to assemble preparatory to their departure for Holstein, and that the whole of the Austrian contingent will march on the 15th inst. Meanwhile we learn from Copenhagen that the Danish Council of State resolved on Saturday to regard any occupation of Holstein as a declaration of war, while the majority of the municipal councils and nearly all the officials of Schleswig have testified their loyalty to King CHRISTIAN by congratulatory addresses, or by taking the oaths of allegiance to HIS MAJESTY.

The Swedish Diet was closed on Tuesday with a Speech from the Throne, in which HIS MAJESTY expressed his anxiety for the maintenance of peace in Europe, and his sympathy for Denmark. A subsequent despatch from Copenhagen states that Sweden has since withdrawn from the Danish alliance, on the ground that as the quarrel between Denmark and Germany concerns the London Treaty, Sweden cannot separate herself from the other Powers who signed that Treaty.

Accounts from Corfu state that great excitement has been caused by the proposal to demolish the fortifications of that Island, and that the Ionian Parliament and Municipalities have sent delegates to Athens to present to the King a protest against the stipulations of the Treaty providing for the destruction of the fortifications and the neutralisation of the Ionian Islands.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies on Thursday, after several days' debate, adopted by a majority of 206 to 52 a motion approving the conduct of the Government in regard to Sicily.

From the United States we learn that the Confederates, under General BRAGG, have sustained a severe defeat at Chattanooga in a series of battles, which took place on the 23d, 24th, and 25th of November. General GRANT, having attacked the left and right of the Confederate position, General BRAGG weakened his centre for the purpose of supporting his wings, upon which General GRANT suddenly attacked the centre in great force, and drove it back. This movement necessitated the retreat of the right and left wings, leaving the Federals in possession of Look-out Mountain and Missionary Ridge. The result was the total rout of General BRAGG'S army and its retreat towards Dalton, hotly pressed by the Federals, who captured from 50 to 60 guns and several thousand prisoners. The Northern accounts, indeed, go so far as to say that BRAGG'S army was entirely destroyed. Meanwhile General BURNSIDE'S army is still shut up in Knoxville, and General LONGSTREET has pushed his rifle pits up to the Federal works, though he has not yet made any assault upon the city. It is said, however, that General GRANT has followed up his victory by detaching General SHERMAN'S corps in order to operate against LONGSTREET, and thereby create a diversion in BURNSIDE'S favour. Accounts from Charleston state that the Federals had been repulsed in a demonstration of rafts against Fort Sumter, though the sea-wall of the fort had been destroyed. General MEADE having received positive orders to attack General LEE crossed the Rapidan with his whole army on the 26th and 27th ult. without opposition. On the 28th heavy cannonading was heard all day near Orange Court House, but no particulars of the engagement had been received at New York at the departure of the last packet.

A telegram from Suez in anticipation of the Overland Mail states that affairs were quieter in Japan; that General CAMERON has successfully attacked the position of the Maories in New Zealand, and that Major GORDON has had some successes over the rebels in China.

We regret to state that the worst anticipations respecting the Earl of ELGIN have been realised. A private telegram reached London yesterday evening announcing that his lordship died at Dhurmsalla on the 20th of November.

Home News.

THE COURT.—The Queen and Royal family continue at Windsor Castle. On Friday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Louisa, walked and drove in the grounds. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia came to London. Pomari, the Maori chief, with his wife and infant child to whom the Queen has been graciously pleased to be godmother, had the honour of an interview with her Majesty, previous to their return to New Zealand. The Earl and Countess of Clarendon, and Lady Constance Villiers, left the Castle. The Earl of Malmesbury arrived on a visit. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. On Saturday morning the Queen, accompanied by the Crown Princess of Prussia, drove in the grounds. The Earl of Malmesbury and Lord Sydney left the Castle. Sir Charles Wood had an audience of the Queen, and presented Sir John Lawrence, on his appointment as Governor-General of India. Lord Wodehouse and the Right Hon. W. E. and Mrs. Gladstone arrived on a visit. Lord Wodehouse had an audience of the Queen. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. On Sunday morning the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Prince Leopold, and the Princess Hohenlohe attended Divine service in the private chapel. The Rev. C. Tarver preached the sermon. On Monday morning the Queen walked and drove in the grounds. Princess Louisa took a carriage drive. The Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia came to London. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Princess Beatrice, and the Princess Hohenlohe, drove to the New Lodge, and honoured the Belgian Minister and Madame Van de Weyer with a visit. On Tuesday her Majesty held a Privy Council, at which the Prince of Wales, by command of the Queen, was introduced, and took his place at the Board. Sir William Gibson Craig, Bart., Lord Clerk Registrar and Keeper of the Signet in Scotland, by command of the Queen, was sworn a Privy Councillor. Earl Granville, the Duke of Somerset, and Lord Palmerston had audiences of Her Majesty. Mutu Coomara Swamy, a native of Ceylon, and Member of the Legislative Council, was presented to the Queen at an audience by Earl Russell, to deliver a book which he had received permission to dedicate to Her Majesty. The Duke of Brabant arrived on a visit to the Queen. The Lord

Chancellor arrived at the Castle, and had an audience of the Queen. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. On Wednesday morning the Duke of Brabant left the Castle for Frogmore House. On Thursday morning the Queen walked in the grounds. Her Majesty and the Princesses honoured Mr. Frith with a final sitting for the marriage picture.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—On Friday morning the Prince went out hunting with the harriers. In the afternoon the Princess drove out. On Monday morning the Prince arrived in town, accompanied by the Prince of Prussia, and visited the Cattle Show. His Royal Highness afterwards went to Marlborough House, and visited the establishment of Mr. C. Hancock, in Bruton Street. In the evening the Prince, accompanied by the Crown Prince of Prussia and the Duke of Brabant, honoured the performance of "Bel Demonio" at the Lyceum Theatre. The Princess dined with the Queen at Windsor Castle. On Tuesday morning the Prince went out hunting with the harriers. On Wednesday the Prince honoured Mr. R. Dowling, commissioned by the Tasmanian Government, with a sitting for his portrait. Mr. Morton Edwards, commissioned by the corporation and town of Toronto, was also honoured with a sitting for a bust of his Royal Highness. In the evening the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia dined with the Prince and Princess of Wales. On Thursday morning the Prince presided at a meeting of the Council of his Royal Highness, held at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall. The Duke of Brabant left Frogmore House for the Palace Hotel, Buckingham Gate.

PRINCE ALFRED, accompanied by Prince William of Hesse, dined with the Countess Dowager of Morton at Dudingston House on the 2d inst., and on the following day dined with the Lord Provost of Edinburgh at his private residence. On Sunday Prince Alfred attended Divine service in Old Greyfriars' Church, Edinburgh, and Prince William of Hesse attended Divine service in the German Church, in Upper Queen Street Hall.

THE CROWN PRINCE AND CROWN PRINCESS OF PRUSSIA are expected to leave Windsor on the 15th inst., on their return to Berlin through Brussels and Carlsruhe. Their Royal Highnesses will probably reach Berlin on the 20th inst.

DEPARTURE OF SIR JOHN LAWRENCE.—Sir John Lawrence, the new Viceroy of India, and suite left London on Wednesday evening for Marseilles, where his Excellency will embark for Alexandria, on his way to Calcutta.

THE INDIAN COUNCIL.—Sir George Russell Clerk, late Governor of Bombay, has been appointed to the seat in the Indian Council vacant by the appointment of Sir John Lawrence to the Viceroyalty of India.

SPECIAL MISSION TO DENMARK.—Lord Wodehouse has been appointed to proceed to Copenhagen, to congratulate King Christian IX. on his accession to the throne. His lordship, who left town on Wednesday for Copenhagen, has also been furnished with instructions from Her Majesty's Government on the affairs of the Danish Duchies.

COLONIAL APPOINTMENT.—The Queen has appointed Arthur Edward Kennedy, Esq., C.B., to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Vancouver Island and its dependencies.

THE CHANNEL FLEET.—The eastern division of the Channel fleet, comprising the Edgar, 74, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Dacres; the Warrior, 40, iron frigate; and the Resistance, 16, iron frigate, was expected to sail from Spithead yesterday for Plymouth, where it will be joined by the western division, and receive sailing orders for the next cruise. At Plymouth the Resistance will be detached from the squadron and proceed to the Mediterranean, where, according to present orders, she will complete her term of commission.

THE DEANERY OF WESTMINSTER.—The Rev. Dr. Wordsworth, one of the canons residentiary of Westminster Abbey, has issued a long statement in the form of a protest against the admission of the Rev. Dr. Stanley to the deanery of Westminster, on the ground that his published writings tend to unsettle the faith in the truth and inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. The following are extracts from this document:—

"For Dr. Stanley personally I entertain the most sincere regard. Nearly 30 years ago I had the opportunity of seeing the proofs of his abilities, and have a pleasing recollection of being instrumental at that time, together with a learned and honoured friend, in adjudging to him the highest intellectual distinction which the great public school where he was educated had to bestow, and in common with many others I have rejoiced to see the promise of his early years fulfilled by the literary fruits of his riper years. If picturesque gracefulness of style, and attractive charms of manner, were adequate qualifications for admission to the highest offices in the Church of England, few would have better claims to them than Dr. Stanley. But this is not the case. Other gifts are requisite, and if intellectual gifts are associated with erroneous opinions concerning the fundamental truths which the Church of England is commissioned to teach, then those intellectual attainments render the errors with which they are associated more dangerous. It cannot be disguised that Dr. Stanley has given scandal to many by statements in his recently-published writings, tending, in their opinion, to unsettle the faith in the truth and inspiration of the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament. It is also true that when persons holding erroneous opinions on such subjects as these are promoted to high stations in the Church, the Church itself has to endure injury and insult at the hands of those who do not love her. They taunt her with cowardice and indifference to the truth. They assert that while she professes to be zealous for the faith, she has not boldness to maintain it, nor courage to suffer for it. Therefore, they allege, her claims to be recognised as the national teacher of the Christian faith are vain boastings and idle pretences. The melancholy consequence is that many of her children are thus tempted to fall away from her communion, and to lapse into that of another Church, which is ever ready and eager to exaggerate her failings and to exult over her sorrows. It is with a deep and solemn conviction that I have a duty to perform, however painful it may be—a duty to the divine head of the Church—a duty to the Church of England—a duty to the Church of Westminster, in which I have been permitted to minister for 19 years, and a duty even to him who has now been designated to the highest office in that church, that I write these words. The church of Westminster is losing the presence and counsel of one who has ruled it with wisdom, piety, and love for seven years. And now, as canon in residence, I find myself charged with the principal duty of officiating in the sacred services of this church till the end of the present year. It seems, therefore, that if there is a call upon anyone to speak in this matter, that person is myself. I am not, also, without some hope that, by the blessing of God upon what is said, some offences may be removed which otherwise might be fatal to many; some explanation may be given which may calm troubled consciences, and some preparations may be made for the better maintenance of the truth, and also for the preservation of peace in this venerable institution within whose walls I now write. In reply to what I have said concerning the distress caused to many devout minds by certain passages in Dr. Stanley's published writings, it may perhaps be objected that I am only echoing the vague rumours and ill-defined charges of certain religious partisans. It is, therefore, my duty to avow that I share those feelings which I have ascribed to others." Dr. Wordsworth concludes by stating, with much detail, the terms on which a person is admitted to the place of dean in the church of Westminster—viz., on his publicly declared assent and consent to the formularies, and on his subscription to the Articles of the Church of England. "In Dean Stanley's case," he continues, "that assent and consent may, we would fain believe, be charitably construed into a public retractation and recantation of whatever in his writings can be shown by fair and reasonable demonstration to be at variance with those formularies and Articles of the Church."

THE COURT MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.—The Court at Aldershott re-assembled on Monday for the sixteenth time. A good deal of time was consumed in the earlier part of the day in discussing the legality of admitting as evidence certain statements made to Surgeon Barnett by Mrs. Lilley with regard to the drinking habits of her husband. That evidence, it may be remembered, was warmly objected to by the prisoner on a former occasion, and it was ultimately agreed to refer the question to the Judge Advocate General as to its legal admissibility. The remainder of the sitting was taken up with the cross-examination by the Court of Sergeant Mills and Lieutenant Fitzsimon, the former of whom gave evidence of his having seen the Sergeant-Major intoxicated on several occasions in England, in the Crimea, and in India. On Tuesday the medical officers were again examined with reference to the consumption of brandy in the quarters of Sergeant-Major Lilley. Colonel Horsford then announced the close of the prosecution, whereupon Colonel Crawley said that he would only supply a few missing links in the evidence, which was substantially as much the case for the defence as for the prosecution, and after this he would request an adjournment for the preparation of his address. On Wednesday a long historical memoir of the 6th Dragoons, from the pen of Sir Hugh Rose, written for the information of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, was read after a long discussion with reference to the reception as evidence of written documents. Colonel Crawley then called his witnesses, one of whom, a Parsee merchant, produced his accounts to show that he supplied a considerable quantity of liquor to Sergeant-Major Lilley, and that he was in the habit of drinking freely. On Thursday the Court decided on not receiving evidence to test the credibility of the native merchant. Colonel Crawley then requested an adjournment, to afford him time to prepare his address. The Court acceded to this request, and adjourned the inquiry to Thursday next, on which day several officers of distinction will attend to give evidence of Colonel Crawley's reputation and character, after which his written address will be read to the Court.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor arrived at the Tuileries on Saturday afternoon from Compiègne. M. Drouyn de Lhuys was immediately summoned and had a long interview with his Majesty. On Sunday the Emperor presided at a Ministerial Council, and afterwards returned to Compiègne. It is said that the Emperor and Empress have determined to prolong their stay there until the 20th inst., and that a fifth series of invitations have been issued, one of which is addressed to Count Kisseleff, late Russian Ambassador to the Court of the Tuileries. The reading of the draught of the Address, in reply to the Imperial Speech, took place on Tuesday in the Senate. The following is a summary of its contents:—

After speaking of the devotion of France to the Imperial family, it says respecting Mexico that the primitive object of the expedition was not to create an empire under the sceptre of a foreign Prince, but to defend our honour and our interest, both of which were menaced. It expresses a hope that the war indemnity to be paid by Mexico will cover the advances made. It eulogises the initiative taken by the Emperor on the subject of the Congress, and says that, though England has decided that she will abstain from taking part in the Congress, her exceptional position allows her, perhaps, to be less sensible than his Majesty of the dangers of the status quo, but the other Governments can only gain by establishing a state of things which will no longer be menaced nor misunderstood, whatever happens. In conclusion, it says that the country will not disavow the words of his Majesty, "I speak in the name of France."

The debate will commence on Monday. The Moniteur has published the answers of the Emperor of Russia, the Emperor of Austria, the King of Saxony, the King of Wurtemberg, the King of the Belgians, the King of Italy, the King of the Netherlands, the King of Prussia, the King of Hanover, the King of Bavaria and the Pope, to the letter of invitation to the Congress The following is an abstract of these documents:—

"The Czar in his letter claims for himself the original idea of concert between the Sovereigns intrusted with the destinies of nations as the best means of putting an end to the general disquiet of Europe. In proof of his good intentions he appeals to all he has already done in reducing his armaments, abolishing compulsory enlistment throughout his empire, and introducing other important reforms. If he has suspended these beneficial measures, or reverted to the ancient system, it was owing to the events which menaced the tranquillity and even the integrity of his States. He asks for nothing better than to be allowed to resume the reforms upon which he had entered; and the moment for doing so can only be hastened by the subsidence of agitation in Europe. He says that while the repose of the world does not consist in immobility, it is not to be attained by 'the instability of political combinations, which each generation would be called upon to undo, and to recommence according to the passions and the interest of the moment, but rather by the practical wisdom which imposes on all respect for established rights.' He would, of course, feel very happy if the Emperor Napoleon's plan led to a frank understanding among the Sovereigns; but that can only result from the assent of the other Powers, and that assent depends on the Emperor's laying before them the precise questions they have to examine, as well as the bases on which the understanding is to be established.—The Emperor of Austria says that if the questions to be discussed be indicated beforehand, and the Powers agree upon the tendency of the deliberations of the Congress, unforeseen accidents, which might overthrow everything, would be less to be feared. The French Government, however, should point out the improvements it considers desirable, for certain remedies might be more dangerous than the evils themselves. The programme of the Congress must fulfil all the conditions for the maintenance of peace, which is the principal object to be attained.—The King of Saxony in his letter says that he would be delighted to assist in the realisation of the Emperor's magnanimous designs if the Cabinets of Europe agreed to do the same; if Germany, 'and above all, its two great Powers, as the leaders,' associated themselves in the work.—The King of Wurtemberg writes that he is struck with admiration of the 'noble intentions' of his Imperial brother, and would endeavour to promote the favourable disposition of the Congress towards the projects of his Majesty, 'unless such of the Powers of Europe whose co-operation must be considered indispensable to the settlement of the questions to be laid before the Congress should, after more precise information from the Tuileries, raise obstacles of a nature to cause the project of an European Congress to be abandoned." His Majesty politely thanks the Emperor for his offer of hospitality in Paris, and assures his "good brother" of his high esteem and inviolable friendship.—The King of the Belgians writes that, without at present expressing an opinion upon the means of coming to an understanding with the different States interested to attain without a collision so noble an object, he is happy to assure his Majesty that his Government would be quite inclined to join in it in so far as it could do so.—The King of Italy says that he adheres with pleasure to the proposal, that his concurrence and that of his people are assured to the realisation of the project, which will mark a great progress in the history of mankind; and that as soon as the international Conferences take place he will take part in person, or at least send a representative.—The King of the Netherlands writes that he responds to the generous idea of his Majesty, and is willing to join all the other Sovereigns of Europe in realising the noble object his Majesty has in view."—The King of Prussia declares himself ready to participate in a Congress in order to effect any necessary modification in the Treaties of 1815, which no longer form the foundation of the political edifice on which Europe rests. He thinks, however, a previous accord upon the principle of the Congress should be established among the Powers, in order to smooth away, by prudent negotiations, difficulties which might bring forth germs of discord in a work altogether devoted to conciliation and peace.—The King of Hanover hopes that Germany, especially Austria and Prussia—who in this question have interests from which he cannot separate those of the Kingdom of Hanover—will be enabled to afford her support to the task his Majesty has imposed upon himself, and in that case it will give the King real pleasure in co-operating, as much as possible, in the realisation of the work which the Emperor has undertaken.—The King of Bavaria adheres to the proposition on the supposition and belief that the proposal, followed by subsequent explanations on the subject, will be received by the Powers directly interested in the solution of these questions in the manner which is indispensable to assure its success.—The Pope concurs in the project, in order that justice may be re-established, violated rights vindicated, and the pre-eminence of the Catholic faith may be re-established, especially in Catholic countries.

The Presse publishes a long letter signed Emile de Girardin, and addressed to Earl Russell, in reply to his letter of the 25th ult. M. de Girardin admits the force of the objections to a Congress ante bellum, on condition that a mere efficaciously practical means be proposed; "but," he adds:—

"You propose absolutely nothing. Assuredly you will not be charged with having ruined yourself by the luxuriance of your imagination. You have deserted a thoroughly English policy in rejecting the proposition of France. You will regret it bitterly. Looking at the haste you have made to take a path opposed to that of Lord Clarendon, the world will say that some jealousy has slipped in between you and your predecessor or rival."

The Mémorial Diplomatique remarks upon a statement of the Frankfort Europe that a conference of the four great Powers and Sweden is proposed in London to settle the Dano-Germanic question, and says that—

"France is quite decided not to take part at present in any other Conference than an European Congress. As for Austria and Prussia, their firm resolution of immediately proceeding to Federal execution in Holstein excludes all idea of their participation in a Congress."

The Pays and the Nation state that it was on the demand of England and Russia in concert that Denmark has withdrawn the Royal patent of March 30. Three ships are now being armed to form a small naval division to blockade the coasts of Mexico as far as Acapulco. It is said that the Bank of France has not yet been affected by the action of the Bank of England. The cash balance of the former was 211,000,000f. on Wednesday morning, being a rise of 1,000,000f. since Tuesday. First-class bills were discounted at $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. A decree has been published suspending the Progrès, a Lyons paper, for two months, on account of the summary it has given of the proceedings in the Corps Législatif. The Nation has received a first warning for an article signed by M. Dupont, entitled, "Where are the friends of the Government?" The reason given for the warning is that the article insults and calumniates the Government of the Emperor.

Spain.—The Gazette publishes a decree organising the financial administration of the Antilles. Disunion prevails among the members of the Opposition, and the position of the Ministry has been thereby strengthened. The Bank of Madrid has contracted a loan with the house of Rothschild for 100,000,000 reals in silver ingots. The Minister of Finance has stated that provision has been made for the payment of the half-yearly dividend of the home and foreign debt. The Correspondencia denies that the question of the settlement of the coupons of the foreign debt will be brought before the Cortes. The war steamer Alava has been lost near the Canary Islands.

Portugal.—Marshal Forey landed at Lisbon on the 3d inst., and paid a visit to his Majesty Dom Fernando on Friday. He was to leave on Sunday for St. Nazaire. Serious election riots have taken place near Oporto.

Sweden.—The Diet was closed on Tuesday with a speech from the throne. His Majesty said:—

"Our interests are not yet immediately threatened, but they are connected with the maintenance of peace and the rights of nations in Europe. The Swedish nation feels deep sympathy and sorrow for the dangers which impend over the King and people of Denmark."

A despatch from Copenhagen, dated yesterday states that Sweden has since withdrawn from the alliance with Denmark. The reason put forward, according to the Dagbladet, is that, as the quarrel now pending between Denmark and Germany concerns the London Treaty of 1852, Sweden cannot separate herself from the other Powers who signed the treaty.

Denmark.—The Nation of Wednesday evening asserts that King Christian is indisposed, and that his Majesty's condition inspires uneasiness. It was resolved in the Council of State on Saturday to regard any occupation of Holstein as a declaration of war. The mortal remains of the late King Frederick VII. have arrived in Copenhagen, and have been deposited in the church of St. Saviour, where they will remain in state till Wednesday, the 9th. King Christian IX. was to leave on the 22d, with all the Princes of his family, for Roskild, and the funeral ceremony was to be performed on Christmas Day with great pomp. The body of the late King will be consigned to the vaults, and his heart placed in the church of Roskild, where a magnificent mausoleum of white marble will be erected to his memory.

The Danish Duchies.—The Danish Government has withdrawn the Royal patent of the 30th of March. The proclamation to that effect was officially published on Monday. The Dagbladet strongly censures the Government for having yielded on this point. According to the Dagbladet, Count Moltke's demand that the Constitution should be declared provisional has been rejected by the King. It is said that King Christian has sanctioned the electoral law proclaimed by the constitution of the 18th November. The official Gesetzblatt publishes a Ministerial rescript referring to the oath of allegiance refused by the public functionaries. The Ministry is awaiting reports and proposals from the Holstein Goverment on that question. The import of arms and munitions into Holstein is prohibited. The following proclamation of King Christian IX. to the Holsteiners was published on Sunday:—

"The order of succession to the Danish monarchy was intended to be a labour of peace, undertaken by us without personal ambition, in the sole hope of serving the country. It has been accepted as public European law, because the integrity of the Danish monarchy was recognised as being a necessity to European peace. Opposition, under the mask of unfounded hereditary claims, has, however, been raised against the measure, purposing the dismemberment of the Danish monarchy. This opposition has also gained ground in Holstein, calling forth excitement and doubt. The maintenance of the monarchy is one of our most important duties as a ruler. We cannot suffer officials to foster opposition, and are resolved to put down insurrectionary movements with armed force. The endeavours of many years to bring about an understanding upon the constitutional relations of the entire monarchy have not been attended with success. While, however, we intend to give to the territories belonging to the German Confederacy an independent position in the kingdom, as has already been accomplished with the remaining portions of the monarchy, we hope that when Holstein finds herself contented in constitutional freedom, and the pretext for foreign interference is thus removed, she will voluntarily incline to nearer connection with the remainder of the country"

The nobility and peasantry and the Legislative Assembly of the duchy of Lauenburg held a meeting on Friday, and passed a resolution declaring their intention to remain faithful to Denmark and to recognise King Christian. A Royal proclamation has been issued to the Lauenburgers, thanking them for not having been led away from their duty as subjects in spite of overtures from without. The Finance Minister of the Duke of Augustenburg has issued bonds for a loan bearing no interest, and the amount of which is not fixed. The bonds are for 25 thalers each. The Minister proposes to submit to the Holstein States the mode in which the loan is employed. The bonds circulate at Frankfort, a citizen of which town has subscribed for 20,000 florins.

Frankfort.—At the sitting of the Diet on the 3d the representatives of Austria and Prussia pressed for execution in Holstein. The other German Governments represented in the committee desired simply occupation of the Duchy. In the sitting of Monday the representatives of Weimar and Saxe-Meiningen introduced a proposition that neither the King of Denmark nor the Duke of Augustenburg should be recognised as the Sovereign of Lauenburg, but that the Federal Diet should take that duchy under its own administration. This proposition was referred to the committee. The Bavarian representative then insisted on the motion for the occupation of Holstein, as distinguished from Federal execution, being passed by the Diet. After a long discussion, the Diet passed by a small majority the resolution for Federal execution in Holstein, reserving to itself the settlement of the question of the succession. The order for the advance of troops into the duchy is said to have been immediately despatched. It has since been stated that the President has notified to the Danish Government that if in three days Denmark does not comply with the demands of the Diet, Federal troops will enter Holstein.

Wurtemberg.—At the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies at Stuttgart, on Thursday evening, it was unanimously resolved to forward an address to the Government, requesting it to propose in the Federal Diet the immediate occupation of Schleswig, and the dismissal of the Federal contingent of Holstein and Lauenburg troops to their homes. The address is also to include a request for the proximate recognition of Duke Frederick's right of succession, and that the Government will advocate such recognition by the Federal Diet by every means in its power. An additional motion by Herr Seegers for a solemn protest against the maintenance of the London protocol was carried by 78 to 3.

Prussia.—In the Chamber of Deputies on Wednesday, the Finance Minister brought in a Bill authorising a loan of 12,000,000 thalers to meet the expense of extraordinary military measures caused by the present state of things in Schleswig and Holstein. The Minister requested the speedy deliberation of the Chamber on the measure.

Austria.—In the sitting of the Lower House of the Reichsrath on Friday, Count Rechberg made the following statement:—

"Austria and Prussia would not be at once released from the obligations of the London protocol—at any rate, not in their quality of European Powers, by the mere fact that the German Confederation had not been invited to accede to the protocol. The engagements of Denmark must also be taken into consideration for the true understanding of the Holstein question. If, relying upon the Treaty of London, Denmark appeals to Austria and Prussia, both Powers are entitled to reply that Denmark must first fulfil the conditions upon which the legal obligation claimed is based. This case has now occurred. Austria and Prussia owe it to themselves, in view of the provocations of Denmark, to proceed without delay to carry into effect the execution already determined. With this measure the express reserve of the right to examine the hereditary succession may be unhesitatingly combined. At the first notice from Frankfort, Austria is ready to order the advance of the required number of troops upon the Lower Elbe. The point of right in the succession question is not clearly and plainly visible. The subject needs thorough legal investigation, the matter in dispute depending upon a formal judicial decision. The deliberations of a Conference cannot, then, extend beyond the boundary of the Federal territory, and the decision of a tribunal must not be anticipated by a one-sided proceeding against the de facto possessor. The Dukes of Augustenburg raised claims not only to Schleswig and Holstein, but also eventually to the countries under the rule of the House of Oldenburg. The possibility was therefore not excluded that Germany might plunge into an European war simply that an Augustenburg Duke might reign instead of a Glucksburg. The Government attached the utmost value to the combined action of Austria and Prussia. It was resolved to maintain respect for rights and treaties intact, and not less firmly determined to uphold the interests of Germany and of German kindred in the north with all its strength within legal limits."

Count Rechberg's reply was unfavourably received by the House, and in the sitting of the next day several members declared that it was not satisfactory, and that the time had now come to realise in acts the words advocating German unity and reform lately spoken by the Emperor of Austria at Frankfort. Count Rechberg, in reply, said:—

"He did not consider the London protocol as the legal basis of the relations of the Duchies to Denmark, but only in so far binding as Denmark also fulfilled her engagements. Had Austria wished to make a demonstration of armed strength she would have been long since involved in war. He then detailed the negotiations which had taken place in the Polish question, showing that Austria had been guarded by a wish to maintain peace and to defend the integrity of the Empire. No Government acknowledged the grandeur of the idea of an European Congress for the preservation of peace more fully than Austria, but she also considered it necessary to be prepared for opposite results. An agreement of the Powers upon the questions to be discussed was a necessary preliminary. He concluded by observing that it was impossible to speak more frankly upon foreign affairs than he had done. The Italian policy of Austria was also the preservation of peace, but more friendly relations with Turin than existed could not be established so long as the desire was not mutual."

Vice-Admiral Irminger, the Danish Extraordinary Ambassador charged with the notification of the accession of King Christian IX., left Vienna on Tuesday without being received by the Emperor. On Thursday the 18th Regiment of Chasseurs left Prague for Theresienstadt, where the Execution troops are to assemble preparatory to their departure for Holstein. The whole Austrian corps will march on the 15th inst. It is said that an extraordinary credit of 15,000,000 fl. s to be asked of the Reichsrath, to meet the expenses of the Schleswig-Holstein expedition, and the establishment of troops in Galicia. A deputation from the Municipal Council of Vienna presented a petition to the Emperor on Monday relative to the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein. The Emperor, in reply, said he did not deem it necessary to assure them that on this question he should fulfil his duties as a Prince of the German Confederation, and strive with all his power for the preservation of the constitutional rights of the Duchies. His Majesty stated, however, that the Municipal Council would do much better if, instead of discussing high political questions, they would direct their activity more to communal affairs.

Croatia.—The Obergespans, Chiefs of the Public Administration of Croatia, have met at Vienna, and resolved that Croatia shall send deputies to the Council of the Empire, provided that the February Constitution be modified in a manner guaranteeing to the Croats the maintenance of their autonomy, the integrity of their territory, and the disposal of the direct taxes and revenue of Croatia.

Russia.—The Invalide of St. Petersburg publishes a document, purporting to be a plan of the revolution in Poland, signed by Mieroslawski, in 1861, and found among the papers seized in the Zamoyski Palace. Although this document fills half a page of the Invalide, it is written on a piece of glazed paper so small that it might be concealed in the case of a watch-spring. The contents of this document so exactly correspond with what has happened during the last 10 months in Poland, that the reader is compelled to ascribe to M. Mieroslawski a most extraordinary gift of prophecy, or to suppose that the whole thing was written down long after the events occurred, and in some mysterious manner was concocted in the cabinet of Count Zamoyski, where it was fonnd. The writing is only legible through a magnifying glass, but still enough has been picked out to confirm the declarations made by Prince Gortschakoff in his despatches relative to the cosmopolitan character of the insurrection.

Poland.—The system of depopulation still continues in Poland, and the accounts received from Warsaw announce that fresh arrests are daily taking place in that city. 103 persons, including several of the higher officials, such as Gliszczynski, Moravski, Dzierzanowski, the advocates Deminski, Zielinski, and Ludwig Zulewski, and Prince Subimirski, the president of the chief institution for the relief of the poor, have been arrested in Warsaw. M. Enoch, the Secretary of the State Council, has fallen into disgrace and been deprived of all his functions. The learned historian, Bartoszeuricz, and Kucz, the chief editor of the Kuryer Warszawski, have been transported. Padlewski (father of the well-known insurgent leader) and Ratsowski have been shot. Count Ostrowski, a Pole, late Director of the Interior at Warsaw, has been superseded by the Russian General Gecewi. The chief railway station in Warsaw has been surrounded by troops, and 20 of the railway officials have been arrested and conducted to the citadel. Mouravieff is extorting addresses in the government of Augustowo, praying for union with the Russian Empire. The Russian Colonel, Ehrenroth, had imposed an address expressive of loyalty on the inhabitants of Czenstochowa, under threat of levying a contribution. The insurgents under Krysinski, Eminowicz, Kudzki, and Kozlowski have had several engagements with the Russians in the governments of Lublin and Podlachia. A battle has also been fought near Jadow, in Masovia. A sanguinary encounter has taken place near Ociesanki, in the government of Cracow, between the Poles, under Bossak, and the 10 companies of Russians, who lost 150 men. The insurgent chief, Sawa, has been victorious at Dobejki and Uzpole, in the district of Wilkomiz, in the government of Lithuania. The fresh bands of insurgents appearing in Lithuania are observed to be well equipped in winter clothing. Numbers of wounded Russian soldiers were brought into Warsaw on the 28th ult. Chmielinski has defeated three companies of Russian infantry near Szozekociny, in the palatinate of Cracow. The Czas of Cracow has been suspended for three months, on the proposal of the Imperial Procurator, by reason of its attitude on the Polish question.

Italy.—A Royal decree issued on Tuesday states that the commercial treaty concluded between Italy and Great Britain henceforward comes into force. The treaty of commerce between Italy and Holland was signed last week. In the Chamber of Deputies on Friday Signor Oades moved for a Parliamentary inquiry into certain recent proceedings of the Government in Sicily with regard to military enlistments, especially measures referring to refractory soldiers and criminals under police surveillance. The Minister of War and General Govone defended the steps of the Government with regard to the army, and also stated that the measures taken for public safety had been attended with excellent results. General Bixio proposed an order of the day directly approving the measures of the Government, at the same time expressing a wish that all provinces of the kingdom should contribute to the conscription in an equal ratio. On Monday Signori Laporta and Bruno spoke against the Ministry. Signor Peruzzi, the Minister of the Interior, stated that disorders had occurred and were much to be regretted, but that they did not exist throughout the island, for Messina and Catania were in the best possible condition. He defended the authorities of the island, and said the prevailing insecurity was to be specially attributed to the old Bourbons, who at the moment of their fall opened the prisons. He also defended the legality of the application of the law on brigandage in all the Southern provinces in which the law was necessary. In the sitting of Tuesday the Minister of the Interior continued his speech, and stated that the measures taken were necessary to re-establish public safety in Sicily, and requested the Chamber to judge the conduct of the Government frankly. Signor Mordini considered that a Parliamentary inquiry would be useless, and protested against military abuses. Signor Bertolami, a Sicilian member, supported the Ministry, and commended its energy. In the sitting of Wednesday, General Bixio made a speech, stating that the duty of the Left would have been to support the Government on this question. Cries of "Question" were raised by the Opposition, and much excitement was manifested. In the sitting of Thursday the President of the Council of Ministers said that neither the Constitution nor the spirits of the law had been violated. Severe measures had become urgent. He awaited with confidence the judgment of the Chamber upon the acts of the Government, whose object had been to restore public safety in Sicily and to carry out the conscription laws. The Minister's speech was received with applause. The following motion was then adopted by 206 against 52 votes:—"The Chamber, approving the conduct of the Government, passes to the order of the day." A Bill has been introduced for the repression of brigandage and for public safety in the Neapolitan and Sicilian provinces. The Government has exempted from the land-tax those landed proprietors who have suffered by the late inundations at Messina. Accounts from Naples state that seven brigands belonging to the band of Caruso have been captured, including, it is believed, Caruso himself. The Pays announces that 35 members of the municipality of Naples have resigned. The steamboat Flavio Gioja on Friday morning in the Gulf of Genoa ran aboard the French steamer Mozambie, which foundered. All on board were saved.

Greece.—It is said that there is no truth in the statement published in La France, that the Assembly has rejected a motion for a vote of sympathy on account of the death of the late King of Denmark. The Stampa of Turin publishes intelligence from Athens confirming the statement that great agitation has been caused by the treaty stipulating the demolition of the fortifications of Corfu. King George has written a letter to his father in answer to the official announcement of his accession to the throne of Denmark, in which he addresses him in the regal form of "Monsieur mon frère." It is said that King George has expressed his regret to a deputation of the National Assembly on the decision come to with regard to the Ministers of King Otho, and hoped that the resolution would be withdrawn.

Ionian Islands.—A despatch from Corfu, announces the departure for Athens of the delegates charged to present to the King a protest from the Ionian Parliament and the municipalities against the treaty, stipulating for the destruction of the fortifications at Corfu, and the neutralisation of the Ionian Islands. The despatch says that the excitement at Corfu is very great.

Turkey.—The Vienna journals publish news from Constantinople stating that the Sultan's reply to the letter of the Emperor of the French had not yet been despatched. It was stated to have been withdrawn.

The Black Sea.—News had reached Constantinople from the Black Sea that numerous arrests had been made at Odessa. Great armaments were in preparation at Kieff and Nicolaieff.

Danubian Principalities.—The debate upon the Address was to commence on Sunday. The Ministry appears to have a majority. The Chamber promises its assistance to the Government to establish credit institutions and construct railways.

Egypt.—It is rumoured that the Bedouins in the neighbourhood of Mecca are giving trouble. A great number of travellers have arrived at Cairo lately on their way up the Nile, among others the Duke of Rutland, the Earl of Scarborough, Lady Herbert of Lea, and Earl Spencer.

India.—The Bombay papers of the 14th November contain but few details respecting the illness of Lord Elgin. The Times of India says that his lordship was on the 12th Nov. dangerously ill in the Punjaub, and no hopes were entertained of his recovery. He had been making double marches to reach the frontier at an early date. He over-exerted himself at the Rotaug Pass, which he crossed almost the whole way on foot. The severe fatigue rendered him so unwell that he was obliged to halt at Dhurmsalla. It was at first thought that he might proceed by slower stages, and he was expecting to enter Sealkote on the 3rd, with great pomp and display. His indisposition, however, rapidiy increased, and had assumed a very serious aspect by the 6th. Telegrams from Lahore and Agra, dated 10th and 12th ult., state that his lordship was sinking, and that no hope was entertained of his recovery. The sad intelligence has been telegraphed to every part of the country, and has everywhere cast a gloom over society. Sir William Denison, Governor of Madras, was summoned to the Punjaub by telegraph on the 9th ult., to sssume the viceroyalty. Letters from General Chamberlain's field force state, that on the 26th October a bold attack was made by the Banair people, to the number of several thousands, in company with a portion of the Hindostanees, on the strong picket commanded by Colonel Vaughan. The action lasted for several hours. The hill men suffered very severely, their loss being estimated at 170 killed and many wounded. Our loss was very much less, being 22 killed and 56 wounded, but two officers, Lieutenants Richmond and Clifford, were killed, and two others wounded. A loss of upwards of 80 killed and wounded, including officers and men, in an encounter with hill tribes, is said to be something unheard of in our border warfare. A letter from the Rev. Dr. Caldwell, missionary in Tinnevelly, says that all over the southern provinces the people are expecting the advent of a native king and the expulsion of the English in 1865. A written prophecy to this effect is being copied out and sent from village to village, and every copy of the prophecy is worshipped as a document of Divine authority. All that is known of this king is his name, Vassanta Raja, King Vernal.

Madagascar.—Letters from Réunion to the 7th of November state that nothing certain was known relative to King Radama, but the rumour that he was still living gained ground. The Queen had morganatically married the Prime Minister. Letters from the Mauritius add that the Prime Minister was said to have been strangled, after a violent outbreak raised by the nobles and great dignitaries. The France, of Wednesday, says that the Prime Minister had prepared a decree, at the request of Mr. Ellis, prohibiting strangers from staying in the island more than three months.

Australia.—Accounts from Melbourne of October 24 state that the transportation question is causing intense excitement.

New Zealand.—General Cameron has successfully attacked the position of the Maories. Her Majesty's ship Curaçoa has arrived at New Zealand.

United States.—The Confederate situation in the south-west is considered very unfavourable, if not disastrous. Advices from Chattanooga announce that on the 23d ult. General Thomas made a reconnaissance to ascertain the Confederate position and obtain possession of two elevations in front of the Federal left, half way between the Federal lines and Missionary Ridge. He found that General Bragg had commenced a retrograde movement, and moved his heavy artillery. On this intelligence General Granger moved forward at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and remained in line of battle for three quarters of an hour in view of the Confederates. He then engaged the Confederates, whilst artillery in the Federal forts opened upon the Confederate rifle pits and camps behind the line of fighting. The Confederates did not reply, having no artillery at that part of their entrenchments. Granger then occupied the elevations, upon which he directed his attack, carried the rifle pits in front, and moved through the forest before him, driving in the Confederate pickets. He halted his advance on reaching further rifle pits in his front, where the Confederates awaited an attack, which he did not make, his object being to obtain the heights on the Federal left, in order to secure from a flank attack any column moving to turn Missionary Ridge. On the night of the 24th Bragg evacuated Look-out Mountain, moving south. On the morning of the 25th Hooker occupied Lookout, and was expected to intercept the Confederates in the vicinity of Rossville and in the region east of it. At the same time Sherman assaulted the north-east of Missionary Ridge, and was repulsed with heavy loss, but being reinforced, he renewed the assault, and reached within 20 yards of the summit, but was flanked and compelled to retire to his reserves. The Confederates then massed heavily on Sherman's right, but Grant started two columns, which broke up the Confederate centre and gained possession of the Ridge, the Confederate main force being driven northward towards Sherman, who opened upon them, driving them disordered down the western slope of Missionary Ridge and across the western ridge of the Chicamauga. General Hooker now holds Look-out on the right, Palmer and Granger hold the centre between Look-out and Missionary Ridge; and Sherman holds the left with his right on Missionary Ridge, and his left on Chicamauga Creek. The Federals estimate their captures at 5000 to 10,000 prisoners and 40 guns. Their loss was much greater than at first reported, General Thomas's division alone having lost 500 killed and wounded. Grant reported as follows from Chattanooga on the evening of the 24th inst.:—

"Sherman carried the end of Missionary Ridge to-day. His right is now at the tunnel, and his left at Chicamauga Creek. Troops from Look-out Valley carried the point of the mountain, and hold the eastern slope and the point high up. Hooker reports 2000 prisoners taken, besides a small number fallen into our hands from Missionary Ridge."

On the 27th General Grant reported as follows:—

"Bragg's route is most complete. He abandoned cannon, caissons, and waggons, which are everywhere to be found. I think his loss will reach 50 guns. The pursuit will continue in the morning to Red Clay, for which place I start immediately."

On the 26th Hooker, Palmer, and Sherman were nearly 10 miles from Chickamauga, pursuing Bragg, who was retreating towards Dalton, burning the bridges and destroying all behind him. His army is represented as entirely destroyed. It is estimated that the Federals have captured 7000 prisoners, and it is reported that Sherman cut off 2000 Confederates on the 26th. The New York Times asserts that 2,000,000 bales of cotton are said to be stated at Atlanta, which General Bragg will have great difficulty in removing before General Grant reaches the city. Federal cavalry have destroyed the East Tennessee railroad, 15 miles above and below Cleveland. This is said to isolate Longstreet from Bragg. Cincinnati despatches represent Confederate cavalry as being between Cumberland Gap and Knoxville. General Longstreet has not yet assaulted Knoxville, but has placed his batteries in a position commanding the city. A Federal column of 6000 men is moving to relieve General Burnside, who had received orders from Grant to hold Knoxville, and had informed the inhabitants that he should do so. It has since been rumoured that General Longstreet has captured Burnside's army at Knoxville, but nothing authentic to that effect has been received. The latest news from Washington says that General Foster has temporarily superseded General Burnside, who will retire on a short leave of absence. General Meade having been directed to advance with 10 days' cooked provisions, moved his army across the Rapidan on the 26th in three columns, by three different fords, although the river was much swollen by the rain. General Lee, whose army is estimated at from 50,000 to 60,000 strong, offered no resistance to the passage of General Meade, who advanced by three different routes converging on the Orange Court House road. Heavy cannonading was on the following day heard near Orange Court House, the head-quarters of General Meade, lasting from morning till night, but no particulars of the engagement have been received. The Confederates have evacuated Fredericksburg heights. General Ewell is ill, and has been superseded by General Early. President Davis reviewed General Lee's army on the 25th ult. Advices from Charleston state that the sea wall of Fort Sumter had been destroyed, and that the Confederates were constructing bomb-proofs on the ruins. General Gilmore's batteries threw 21 shells into Charleston on the 17th, and 15 on the 19th. The Monitor, Lehigh, grounded, but was got off, considerably damaged. On the 20th the Federals made a demonstration on rafts against Fort Sumter and were repulsed. During the day and night of the 21st, 36 shells were thrown into Charleston, killing one coloured woman and injuring one white person. The Richmond papers emphatically assert that the prisoners at Richmond receive full rations of bread and meat. Surgeons returned from Richmond however report the Federal prisoners as dying at the rate of 50 per day. The Confederate guerilla General Morgan has escaped from prison in Ohio, and guerillas have captured 100 negroes on a contraband farm six miles from Norfolk. The New York Tribune affirms that President Lincoln will announce in his Message a plan for restoring the States to union, which will be in accordance with the furtherance of the emancipation proclamation. General Grant's victory has created great exultation throughout the North, and as the news arrived on Thanksgiving day, the bulletins from the seat of war were read in almost all the churches by way of text to the sermons. In order also to enliven the solemnity, a negro regiment, the first ever seen in New York, was paraded along the streets. The Copperheads called them "gorillas in regimentals," and the Irish were by no means friendly in their comments, but their appearance gave rise to no disturbance. A portion of the Russian fleet has left for Fort Monroe to winter. The New York Times states that the number of negroes who have been armed and mustered into the service of the Federal Government amounts to 40,000. No less than 5821 men are advertised in New York as not having reported themselves for service in the Federal army, though their names were drawn from the ballot box as drafted men. It is rumoured that the privateer Georgia had been sunk by the Federal steamer Saint Louis.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE METROPOLITAN BOROUGHS.—At the Court of Common Council on Thursday Mr. Lawley gave notice of the following motion, to be taken into consideration at the next court:—"That this corporation, highly appreciating the municipal institutions which they have enjoyed for so many centuries, and believing that the time has arrived when the privileges of self-government should be extended to those portions of the metropolis not yet entrusted with the management of their own local affairs, and desiring to aid in the accomplishment of this result, is prepared to contribute the sum of 5000*l.* as the nucleus of a borough fund to each of the parliamentary boroughs of Southwark, Westminster, Marylebone, Lambeth, Finsbury and the Tower Hamlets, to be paid to them when those boroughs shall have obtained their charters of incorporation under the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Act, 5 and 6 Wm. IV., cap. 76." The notice was received with loud cheers.

A UNIVERSITY FOR WALES.—The first meeting of a provisional committee for the establishment of a university and colleges for Wales, on the plan of the "Queen's Colleges" and University in Ireland, was held on the 1st inst. at the Freemasons' Tavern. Mr. W. Williams, M.P., presided, and the meeting was attended by a number of influential gentlemen interested in the Principality. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—1. That considering that the Principality of Wales, which contains about a million and a quarter inhabitants, is the only portion of the United Kingdom destitute of high class academical institutions, Ireland possessing the University of Dublin and the Queen's University and Colleges, and Scotland possessing four great Universities; considering, moreover, that the commercial, manufacturing, and mining operations of the country are rapidly expanding, presenting new facilities, and creating new demands for educated talent; and that while common schools for the labouring classes are daily multiplying, no adequate efforts are made to provide for the pressing claims of the middle and upper classes; it is desirable to seek the immediate establishment of a university, whose course of education shall be comprehensive and complete, and whose degrees and distinctions shall be of standard value among educated men. 2. That a university for Wales should be a truly national institution, located in the country, presenting accessible means of liberal culture at a moderate cost, and commanding by reason of its national character the fullest confidence of the people; that in order to confer as a national institution an impartial benefit upon all, it should maintain the completest freedom from all ecclesiastical preferences, and, while holding the Holy Scriptures as the ultimate authority in all religious matters, leave all teaching properly theological to the religious instructors of the different churches, and aim in its own department of labour at uniting all ranks of the community in the work of promoting the mental culture and development of the nation. 3. That with a view of securing from the Government the aid required for so great an undertaking, it is desirable that the people of Wales should themselves show an adequate interest in the question, and should form a national fund to meet in part the necessary outlay. A committee was appointed to make all necessary arrangements, and resolutions were adopted gratefully recognising the Chairman's munificent contribution of 1000*l.*, and appointing him treasurer of the fund to be raised.

SANITARY STATE OF BETHNAL GREEN.—In consequence of the numerous deaths which have recently taken place in this district from typhoid fever, and the medical evidence of the great extent of disease arising from want of ventilation and cleanliness in the neighbourhood, a special meeting of the vestry was held a few days since to consider the necessity of providing further means for sanitary inspection and the removal of nuisances. After a lengthened discussion it was resolved to appoint a superintending inspector, at a salary of 80*l.* a year, retaining the present inspector in the situation he holds. It was further resolved that the number of the Nuisances Removal Committee be enlarged, so as to embrace all the members of the vestry; that the operations of the committee should be comprised in four sections, corresponding with the wards of the parish; that the members for each ward should act in each respective subdivision, and that the general committee should meet weekly. It was likewise resolved that the surveyor should take the necessary steps for compelling the owners of houses along the main intercepting sewer to construct drains into it. In the course of the discussion it transpired that there are 44 miles of streets in the parish, and that since the passing of the Metropolis Local Management Act in 1856 there have been 17 miles of street drained by the vestry at a cost of 12,856*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, making, in addition to the drainage previously existing, 30½ miles. Plans have been prepared by the surveyer, under directions of the vestry given two years ago, for completing the drainage of every street in the parish. Those plans have been approved by the Metropolitan Board, but the delay in executing the works has arisen from the incomplete state of the main intercepting sewer. The vestry have recently obtained the sanction of the Metropolitan Board to borrow the sum of 7000*l.* for the purpose of defraying the cost of the proposed drainage works, and the vestry clerk intimated that the negotiations for effecting that loan were on the point of being closed, so that there would be no further delay.

LANCASHIRE RELIEF FUND.—The Lord Mayor on Monday received a letter from Bombay, enclosing a check on the Bank of England for the handsome sum of 7012*l.* 10*s.*, being a contribution from the Committee of the Relief Fund in that presidency, in addition to other munificent donations previously transmitted. By the same mail the Lord Mayor received a balance of 116*l.* odd from the Kurrachee Chamber of Commerce. These donations make the fund still at the disposal of the Mansion House Committee about 59,320*l.*

NEGLECT OF VACCINATION.—Mr. Simon, the medical officer of the Privy Council, has recently presented his fifth report, in which he calls attention to the neglect of the laws compelling vaccination. From the inspection of 190 different unions, containing altogether 900 vaccination districts, he is of opinion that the intentions of the Legislature are very imperfectly fulfilled; and that the public defences against small-pox are in great part insufficient and delusive. He points to the utter and universal failure of the intended register of vaccination, and says that, although such failure deprives inquiry of any source of accurate measurement, still the inspectors have come upon cases where, quite apart from the register, there was conclusive evidence of extreme local neglect of vaccination. Among the elementary schools which they visited, numerous cases were found where the unvaccinated proportion of scholars was from 20 to 30 per cent. of the whole; in more than a few cases it was from 30 to 40 per cent.; in some it was from 40 to 50 per cent; and in one case (that of Penn, in Buckinghamshire), it was as high as 55½ per cent. So again, among the young in workhouses, though under the very eye of boards of guardians, the inspectors found similar evidence that vaccination was not duly performed; for among 38 workhouses there were eight where the unvaccinated proportion of children ranged from 20 to 38 per cent.; and among 74 other workhouses there were 20 where the unvaccinated proportion of children was from 20 to 34 per cent. The less exact evidence furnished by the registers of vaccination justifies a conviction that in many cases the local neglect is greater, even very considerably greater, than those figures would suggest. Mr. Simon refers to several instances of districts remaining for considerable periods, and in one case as long as three years, without a single vaccination being performed by the publicly appointed medical officer. He states that thoroughly good gratuitous vaccination is by no means uniformly given by those authorities whom the Legislature has made responsible for giving it. And under these circumstances it would, he argues, be manifestly unjust to punish for non-compliance with the law parents whose children are not vaccinated. "I have therefore," he says, "had no alternative but to submit for their lordships' consideration that the laws now in force for the purpose of extirpating small-pox are not likely to accomplish their object, and that the system established by law for the provision of public vaccination works in an unsatisfactory manner.

UNWHOLESOME FOOD.—Mr. Simon's annual report to the Privy Council, as its medical officer, on matters relating to the public health, has recently been issued, and among the subjects with which it deals is that of the consumption of the flesh of animals slaughtered while in a state of disease. It appears that Mr. Gamgee, Principal and Professor of the Edinburgh Veterinary College, was requested last year to investigate this subject. He reports that disease prevails very extensively in the United Kingdom among cattle, sheep, and swine; that in very many instances the diseased state of an animal leads the owner to have it immediately slaughtered for consumption as human food, and that, in fact, as much as a fifth of the meat of the country comes from animals considerably diseased. As regards meat infested with parasites, our animal food is for the most part, says Mr. Simon, exposed to so high a temperature before it is eaten that any parasites which had their home in it are killed; but it is probable they may outlive the processes by which meat is commonly cured, and may thus get swallowed alive by persons who eat uncooked sausage, ham, or bacon, and we know that meat infested with parasites may become a source of human disease. Or, by means of dogs and other animals eating the raw offal of slaughter-houses, the eggs of the tapeworm may, and must often find their way into sources of drinking water, or on to various low-growing vegetables or fruits, which are consumed in an uncooked state by man; and being swallowed, the egg is hatched, and the animal burrows through the wall of the stomach or intestines, migrates to some other part of the body, and there grows to its development as a cystic entozoon. In Iceland a fifth part of the human mortality is ascribed to hydatid disease. Mr. Gamgee is confident that there are between 40,000 and 50,000 measly pigs in Ireland, most of which come to Great Britain for consumption, and his impression is that for every measly pig in the kingdom there is at least one human being with tapeworms. These parasites may not directly kill, but may favour the development of fatal disease. It has also been discovered quite recently that a microscopical threadworm, the trichina spiralis, brings the muscular flesh of swine into a state in which a small quantity of it eaten raw will suffice to destroy life. As regards the possible ill effects from consuming in a well cooked state the flesh of animals afflicted with anthrax or carbuncular fever, evidence is still imperfect, but it seems clear that human life may be endangered by it. But in respect to this, and also the effects of consuming the flesh of animals which have been suffering from infectious fever, until public attention is drawn to the subject it must be difficult to trace to their true causes any ill effects thus occasioned, especially those of a chronic character, which may, perhaps, result from febrile meat being a considerable element in diet. An opinion is sometimes expressed that boils and perhaps other like affections are caused in the human subject by the consumption of such meat. Mr. Gamgee says that at a convict establishment where diseased cattle are eaten in large quantities, and especially cattle afflicted with lung disease, as many as 40 and 50 cases a month of boils and carbuncles occur among 1,500 convicts. In some cases also meat may be injurious in consequence of the animal having been excessively drugged during life, as, for instance, with arsenic or strychnia; but generally it might be expected that no drugging of an animal in doses not sufficient to poison it could render its flesh capable of acting as a poison on man. Some notice is taken in these papers of the effect of the milk of diseased animals. In this country the most important question is as to the wholesomeness of milk from animals afflicted with aphthous eruption, a malady which never was more prevalent than in the year 1862. On some occasions when aphtha has been prevailing among cattle, the human population in the same place has suffered from the same or some similar disorder; and it seems certain that under some circumstances the human affection may be caused by the consumption of milk drawn from a diseased animal. Mr. Gamgee avows his belief that a very large proportion of the disease now habitually prevailing among live stock, and which he estimates as proving fatal to them to the immense pecuniary amount of more than 6,000,000*l.* a year, might by proper measures be prevented. The epidemic diseases are due entirely to contagion, probably foreign, against the introduction and spread of which sufficient precautions are, in his opinion, not taken; and the most destructive endemic diseases are due partly to dietetic mismanagement of stock, and partly to local malaria, which improved land drainage would dispel. His estimate is that of animals in the United Kingdom there die annually of disease about 375,000 cattle—nearly 5 per cent. of the whole number, and of the money value of above 4,000,000*l.*; of our (supposed) 40,000,000 sheep not less than 4 per cent., of the value of 1,600,000*l.*; and of our 4,300,000 pigs not less than 3 per cent., of the value of 1,200,000*l.* He considers that if enzootic disorders, which depend on peculiarities of soil, climate, and system of culture, were prevented, as they might be, thousands of acres would be worth much more than they are, and that attention to this subject would for many years to come add more to the resources of the kingdom than the reclamation of land does.

EXPERIMENTS AT SHOEBURYNESS.—An important target trial took place on Tuesday at Shoeburyness, the target representing a portion of Mr. E. J. Reed's ship Bellerophon about to be constructed in Chatham Dockyard. Great interest was felt in the trial, and an unusual number of visitors went down from London. The Prince of Prussia was present during the whole day, and appeared to watch the effect of every shot with as much interest as any artilleryman present. Admiral Grey, Sir John Hay, General St. George, General Hay, Dr. Percy, Mr. Pole, C.E., Mr. Whitworth, Mr. Fairbairn, Admiral Robinson, and the representatives of the Millwall Iron Works, the builders of the target, were also present. The guns were laid at the customary 200 yards' range, Colonel Taylor, as usual, carefully superintending all the arrangements for the firing. The first rounds were merely routine—a 68 solid shot, with a 16lb. charge and a 110-pounder Armstrong shortened to a weight of 66½lb., fired with the same charge. Both these struck the upper plate, and made the usual indent of nearly two inches deep, but effected nothing more than that which they always do—that is to say, show the quality of the iron-plates against which the guns have to contend. On this occasion the iron was literally perfect, and throughout the rest of the experiments the opinion was universal that better plates had never been tested at Shoeburyness. Even under the heaviest shot, though indented deeply, they showed scarcely any perceptible symptom of buckling out; and though struck on the edge and around the bolt-holes, it was almost impossible to crack them. A salvo of two 68-pounders and two 110-pounder Armstrongs, with shot shortened to 66½lb., was next fired, but of these four guns one missed the target altogether, one touched it so slightly on its upper edge that, as far as damage was concerned, it may also be called a miss; the remaining two struck close together, one on each side of a bolt, so that the bolt itself was squeezed up like putty, and projected slightly outwards, but still held firm. Two shots coming so close were a hard trial for any plate, but it stood it perfectly, without any sign of crack or ragged edges. The back of the target was absolutely unhurt, and so perfect was the workmanship of the whole mass, that from the commencement to the end of the day scarcely a rivet was started. A cylindrical, round-headed 66lb. shot was next used, but effected nothing, and then the Whitworth 70-pounder muzzle-loading gun was loaded with a steel shell, charged with 2½lb. of powder, and fired with a 12lb. charge. As regarded the target, this effected nothing, though its indent at once showed by its severity the immense superiority of steel projectiles against armour plates over the old gray cast-iron shot. The indent made by this shell, though only 2 lb. heavier than the 68-pounders, was at least 40 per cent. deeper, and its fragments cut into the mass of iron as if it had been so much wood. Mr. Whitworth's 150-pounder was next tried. In consequence of there being a slight flaw in this fine piece, Mr. Whitworth reduced its firing charge from 27 lb. to 23 lb., the shell, of homogeneous metal (which is only a hard name for soft steel), weighing 151 lb., with 5 lb. of powder as a bursting charge. Much was expected from this formidable shot, but, unfortunately, it failed—the shell from some mysterious cause bursting about 20 yards from the muzzle of the gun, and sending its fragments in all directions screaming hoarsely through the air. The Armstrong rifled gun was then tried with a spherical cast shot of 151 lb., fired with 35 lb. of powder. This struck, with the rather high velocity of 1570 feet per second, on the edge of the upper plate, making an indent of 3½ in., breaking one bolt, slightly bulging the inner skin of the target, and therefore starting the ribs of the ship itself just enough to be perceptible. Beyond this, however, it effected nothing of importance. The plates still remained as tough and unbending as ever, there was no sign of cracking in them, and every rivet, to the astonishment of all on the ground, stood fast. A steel spherical shot of the same weight was fired from the same gun with the same charge, and this, rather unfairly for the target, struck between the slightly parted edges of the upper and lower plates. It completely buried itself, and must have passed through the entire plate, but, strange to say, though two bolts gave way, all the rivets held on; and, although the immense mass was bedded in the substance of the target, it produced scarcely any effect worth speaking of on the inner skin, which, as far as fighting purposes are concerned, remained as good as before it was fired at. A shot from a 7-inch muzzle-loading gun of the Ordnance Select Committee was fired with a 120 lb. steel shell loaded with 2 lb. of powder. This accomplished absolutely nothing, though it might have done a good deal more than it was intended, inasmuch as one of its fragments flew back to the guns and buried itself 2½ feet in the ground, close to where some of the visitors were standing. A shot from the rifled 300-pounder (a cast iron projectile), fired with 35 lbs. of powder, did very little, in spite of the weight of the mass hurled against the target. It made an irregular dent of 3¼ inches deep, and bent back the upper plate a little more than 2 ins., making the first real crack in the plate at the point we have mentioned as being where the two shots struck on the bolt-head. From this spot there was now, for the first time, seen a perfect crack, nearly a foot long, and extending quite through the plate, apparently; but this was all. The last shot fired was from Mr. Whitworth's 150-pounder, loaded with a steel shell and 5 lbs. of powder. This struck the lower plate, and exploding, buried itself deeply; but though it had evidently penetrated the plates, it had failed to make any perceptible impression on the inside of the target itself. This terminated the day's trial, and showed that the target had repelled both Armstrong and Whitworth shot and shell, and that there had been no complete penetration of the iron skin and teak backing.

CAPTURE OF AN ESCAPED DARTMOOR CONVICT.—Late on Thursday night George Ball, who escaped with two others from Dartmoor prison on the 1st of August, 1860, was captured at Woolwich. At the time of his escape he had served between two and three years of a transportation of 15 years, for a burglary committed at Lewes. The names of the two other convicts who escaped with him were John Robinson, undergoing 30 years' transportation, and Joseph Hampshire, undergoing 20 years' transportation, both of whom were captured a short time after their escape. Ball, after escaping, made his way with his companions to Bridgwater, where they parted. Ball proceeded to Cardiff, and in a few days after sailed for America, where, until within the last few months, he served as captain of a company of Southern guerillas, but was taken prisoner by the North, and sent home. Immediately on his arrival in England he made his way to Woolwich, where he enlisted as a gunner n the Royal Artillery band, in which he has served for the last two months. On Thursday night he became embroiled in a drunken row, and fell into the hands of the police. While locked up at Shooters-hill station, Inspector Bell made the discovery that he was an escaped Dartmoor convict, having "G. T." marked on his left arm, and was labouring under the delusion that Prince Albert was his personal enemy. He is now 28 years of age, and six years ago broke out of Bedlam Hospital twice, on one occasion taking with him a lunatic murderer. Yesterday he was taken before the magistrate sitting at Woolwich, and was identified by the Dartmoor authorities, who were telegraphed to shortly after his capture. He states that a few years ago he came into possession of 4,000*l.*, left him by his father, and that he has a brother a barrister.

PROPOSED WIDENING OF MANSION HOUSE STREET.—At the meeting of the City Commission of Sewers on Tuesday, a report from the Improvements Committee was read relative to a proposal to widen the eastern end of the Poultry by removing part of Messrs. Lubbock's old bank opposite the Mansion House. It was stated that the projected improvement may cost 17,500*l.*, or at the rate of more than a million and a half per acre. After some discussion it was resolved that the project should be carried out if the Metropolitan Board would share the expense.

THE LATE STORMS.—As anticipated last week the accounts from the coast have furnished a fearful addition to the long list of disasters which happened in almost all parts of the country during the recent storm. Upwards of 150 wrecks and casualties were reported on Saturday and Monday, the largest number ever received in so short a period of time. On the Dutch and French coasts there has also been a great loss of life and property.

THE LATE ACCIDENT AT ISLINGTON.—The adjourned inquest on the two men who lost their lives by the falling of the Three Wheatsheaves Tavern at Islington, whilst in the course of re-erection, was resumed on Monday. A great deal of evidence was given as to the way in which the construction of the house was conducted, the nature of the materials, and the strength of various parts, but nothing very important was elicited. The inquiry was ultimately adjourned to Monday.

SUPPOSED MURDER IN THE LEA.—A private soldier in the 14th Hussars named De Carx has been apprehended at Manchester on a charge of being concerned in the murder of Mr. Driscoll, an engineer, who had arrived in London in October last from Spain to make arrangements for lighting the town of Corunna with gas. On the 31st of that month he went out for a walk, and was never again seen alive by his friends. A few days since his body was found in the River Lea, and 18*l.* in gold, which he was known to have with him at the time, was missing. There was also found a military glove, which has since been ascertained to belong to the prisoner. He admits that he was in Mr. Driscoll's company on the evening before the murder; but he says that Mr. Driscoll was alive when he last saw him, and gives an account of the circumstances under which they parted. The inquest was opened on Saturday, and adjourned to allow time for further inquiries.

MUTINY AT SEA.—An Admiralty despatch from the River Plate has been published, stating that 14 men had landed there, whom one of them declared to be the crew of the ship Flowery Land, which sailed in July last from Gravesend for Calcutta. They are charged with having mutinied, murdered the master and officers, scuttled the ship, and compelled the one who gave the information to navigate the boat in which they left her to South America.

SUICIDE AT KING'S CROSS.—On Friday morning about 10 o'clock, a shocking case of suicide took place at King's Cross. A respectably dressed middle aged man, who was standing on the foot pavement, when one of Pickford's vans laden with iron was passing, suddenly dropped a parcel, walked out on the road, and deliberately laid his head in front of the wheel. His head and arm were crushed to atoms, so that death must have been instantaneous.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, Dec. 5, were 1376. The average number in the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1460. The present return is therefore 84 below the average. During the week the births of 941 boys and 854 girls, in all 1795 children were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1867.

AMESBURY.—At a meeting of the clergy and lay consultees of the rural deanery of Amesbury, the following points were considered in reference to the dwelling-houses of the labouring poor—namely, 1. The great need of improvement generally in the accommodation provided in the houses rented by labourers; 2d. That this matter was not to be regarded as a question of profitable investment, but as a question of morality, affecting the well-being of the nation; 3. That while the home of the labourer continues to be what so many of their houses now are, it is very doubtful what good can be done by the most careful teaching in church or school; and it was resolved to communicate with the Bishop of Salisbury with the view of obtaining a better consideration of the subject throughout the diocese.

BIRMINGHAM.—At a meeting of the Town Council, on Tuesday, Mr. William Holliday, the Mayor, read the following letter, which had been received by the late Mayor, but circumstances prevented that gentleman laying it before the Council prior to his retirement from office:—

Windsor Castle, Nov. 4.

Sir,—I have had the honour to lay before her Majesty the Queen the correspondence which accompanied your letter to me of the 23d of October. The Queen regrets very much to hear that there exists a possibility of the people of Birmingham losing the enjoyment of Aston Park as a place of healthy exercise and recreation. In such a hive of industry an open area for relaxation and amusement after toil must be most valuable. Her Majesty had hoped that this requirement had been permanently provided for. Her Majesty is still unwilling to believe that in a locality in which so much wealth is found in proximity to the hard labour by which it is produced, funds can be wanting to secure to the population an enjoyment, the value of which they have been taught to estimate by the temporary use of Aston Park, and of which it would be very injudicious and undesirable now to deprive them.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servant, C. B. PHIPPS.

Charles Sturge, Esq.

On the motion of the Mayor, the foregoing communication from her Majesty was received, and ordered to be entered on the minutes. In all probability some action will be taken upon it at a special meeting of the Town Council. The "correspondence" referred to in the foregoing letter has since been published. It appears from it that the greater portion of the purchase money of that park which her Majesty came specially to this town to open in 1858, remains unpaid, and that unless it is paid for by a rate which the Town-council may levy there is no prospect of the purchase being completed, so that the hall and park may pass back to Messrs. Greenway, the bankers, of Warwick, who are the owners. The price is, in round numbers, 40,000*l.*, of which not more than 7,000*l.* or 8,000*l.* has been paid. The late Mayor wrote to Lord Leigh, the Lord Lieutenant, asking him to induce the magistrates of the county to contribute 8,000*l.* towards the amount due; but as most of them had already subscribed, and considered that the affair concerned the town of Birmingham and not the county at large, they declined to do so. The original plan was to purchase the estate by means of shares and donations; but, although the names of some gentlemen of station are to be found on the council, the active business of carrying out this part of the scheme fell into the hands of a class in whom the public could have little if any confidence; hence this discredit brought upon the town by the revelation which has been made to her Majesty.

Brighton.—On Thursday the 25th ult., as some boys were proceeding along the beach beneath the cliffs towards Rottingdean, they discovered the body of a young woman, about 30 years of age, dressed in a black corded silk dress, having on her left hand a black kid gauntlet glove, and three gold rings. The body was removed to the White Hart Inn, Rottingdean, and on being searched, a purse containing gold and silver was found in the dress pocket, and with it a letter carefully wrapped in waterproof silk, showing that the drowning was intentional. Inside the packet was the likeness of a middle-aged man, and on a piece of paper accompanying it was written: "To my false and perjured husband, Louis Adolphus, New Ship Hotel, Brighton, or Moses and Sons', Minories." The police authorities on inquiry ascertained that the person referred to is a foreman in the employ of Messrs. Moses, and that he parted with deceased at the London Bridge Railway Station, on the 8th November, when she appeared much distressed on his telling her that the connection which had subsisted between them must cease. It appeared also that she had been living at Camden Town with a Captain Bruce, and that she called herself Mrs. Bruce. The jury at the inquest, after several adjournments, returned a verdict of Found Drowned.

Derby.—The grand jury, at the Assizes on Thursday, ignored the bill against Mr. James Clifford, of Shardlow, in this county, who was charged with stealing, in or about the year 1804, a leaf from the register of the parish of Longford, containing an entry of the baptism of William, son of Mary Tatlow, of Bentley, dated the 8th November, 1727.

Durham.—The colliers' strike in this county continues without any indications of drawing to a close. The evictions also continue, and on Tuesday 45 families were ejected from their homes at Oakenshaw. On Wednesday evening a meeting of the men was held at Willington, but beyond the discussion of their grievances nothing was done.

East Dereham.—James Naylor, who was awaiting his trial for the murder of his wife at Elsing, two months since, died in Norwich Castle last week, after two or three days' illness. The murder was attended with circumstances of great barbarity; but as he did not appear to have been in a thoroughly sound state of mind, it was doubtful whether, assuming that he had been convicted, the extreme sentence of the law would ever have been carried out.

Falmouth.—A horrible case of cruelty has just been brought to light by the efforts of Dr. Byrne, of Durham. While residing near this town for the benefit of his health he heard that for 20 years past some person had been kept in close and solitary confinement by his relatives in a small room at the back of a house in the village of Flushing. It was reported that during the cold nights of winter heartrending cries and howls were heard to proceed from this mysterious room; but though the sympathy and curiosity of the neighbours were aroused, none of them took any proceedings to clear up the matter. Dr. Byrne communicated with the Commissioners of Lunacy and the Secretary of State, and on Thursday week two of the Commissioners were sent down from London to investigate the case with Dr. Byrne. The house in question was occupied by a man called Porter, a mason, who is said to be in comfortable circumstances. On arriving at the house they found that the tenant was absent from home. They, however, made their way to the back of the premises, and, ascending a flight of steps, discovered a door concealed from view by the projection of a corner or abutment of the building. The door was opened, and a sight presented itself which Mr. Hodges, Secretary of the Cornwall Polytechnic Society, states to be "too revolting to be described with all its horrid details." In a letter to the Times he says:—

The den in which they found themselves consisted of four bare wet plaster walls, with a small window on one side. A doorway opposite, formerly communicating with the house, was plastered up so as to cut off all communication with it except by the door through which they had entered. In one corner of the room was a wretched truckle bedstead, with cross pieces of wood, rotten with filth, about six inches wide, and the same distance apart. On these bare boards crouched a being more resembling a baboon than a man, drawn and cramped from long exposure and suffering out of all form of humanity, stark naked, and with only two old rotten bags for a coverlet. I have said like a baboon, from the peculiar form into which the limbs were drawn. The knees almost touched the chin, and were pressed close upon the chest, apparently for warmth; the feet close together, and bent down one over the other, also apparently for warmth; the hands clenched and brought close to the chin; the arms closely pressed against the sides. The knee and hip-joints were anchylose; the elbow joints were also stiffening. The floor and the walls were one mass of accumulated filth—the floor rotten with it; the stench horrible; and there are other circumstances of the case too dreadful for publication. For upwards of 20 years the tender mercies of his nearest relatives have consigned him to this living tomb, not a rag to lie upon, not even a wisp of straw—nothing but the naked boards, and the two old bags to cover him. The unfortunate man is simply imbecile—a most mild, benevolent expression of countenance, a childlike submission to all that is done to him, no symptom of anger or even violence of any kind, and strong indications of intelligence, even after these weary years of neglect and cruelty."

On the 6th inst. a sketch of the remarkable position in which he had remained for so many years having been taken, arrangements were made for his removal. He was washed and dressed by two keepers from the county asylum, and taken away to the establishment at Bodmin. Hundreds of persons collected to witness his removal. One of the keepers carried him in his arms like a child, and placed him in the vehicle prepared for his conveyance. Many among the crowd who had known him "when he was a strong intelligent youth," came forward to greet and congratulate him, exclaiming, "Good God! can that be a man?" The Commissioners of Lunacy have directed an indictment to be preferred against the brother Samuel Porter, for neglect and cruelty.

Holyhead.—During the storm of last week 16 vessels were driven on the rocks in Holyhead harbour, of which three were total wrecks, and seven dead bodies were washed ashore. It is calculated that 150 vessels were at anchor in the harbour and roadstead. Had the sea run high, every vessel driven ashore would have been a total wreck. These disasters are considered to prove that Holyhead cannot be depended upon as a harbour of refuge.

Liverpool.—The Mercantile Marine Association of this town last week memorialised the Board of Trade in favour of Captain Stone, whose certificate was suspended for six months, on account of the stranding of the Cunard steamer Africa, near Cape Race. The Board of Trade, in reply, has announced to the memorialists that it sees no ground for interference with the suspension of the certificate.

Maidenhead.—This town was the scene of an attempted murder and suicide last week. A young man 22 years of age, named George Hooper, a native of Burnham, was employed as coachman and groom to the Rev. Mr. Gresley, incumbent of All Saints' Church, Boyne Hill. He was attached to a girl named Lydia Eliza Baker, a housemaid in the service of Captain Fyfe, adjutant of the Berks Rifle Volunteers, residing at Folly Hall, but the young woman repeatedly told him that she was determined to have nothing to do with him. This seems to have determined him to take revenge upon her, and on Tuesday week he purchased a pistol in this town, and having loaded it with powder and shot, which he obtained from the butler at Boyne Hill, he went in the evening to the house of Captain Fyfe, and obtained an interview with Lydia Baker in the presence of one of her fellow servants. Some conversation took place between them, and Hooper begged her to reconsider her refusal of him, but she repeatedly declared that she would have no more to do with him. He then asked her to accompany him to the front gate. This, however, she refused, and having wished him good night, was about to return into the house, when Hooper, exclaiming "Then take that," discharged the contents of the pistol into her neck. She immediately fell back into the cook's arms, and for some time it was supposed that the wound was fatal. Hooper decamped instantly, and went to the Red Lion Hotel, where he asked the landlord for a bed, which, however, he was unable to obtain, the house being full. In the meantime, the superintendent of the borough police had been apprised of the circumstances, and at once proceeded to Burnham, the residence of Hooper's father, thinking to find him there. Not succeeding in doing so, he returned to Maidenhead, and there learned that the body of the murderer had been found on the moor, a piece of waste ground near the town, where he had literally blown out his brains. On the following morning a letter was received by his father giving minute directions for the disposal of various articles belonging to him, and avowing his intention to kill Lydia Baker, and afterwards himself. The jury at the inquest found a verdict of felo de se, and the coroner issued his warrant for the interment of the body without any funeral ceremonies, between the hours of 9 and 12 at night. The wounded girl is progressing favourably, but her medical attendant states that she has still about 100 shots in her neck and shoulder, and is by no means out of danger.

Manchester.—At the weekly meeting of the Central Executive Committee on Monday, the Earl of Derby in the chair, the Honorary Secretary reported that 149*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* had been received during the week, and that the balance in the bank was 237,849*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* The Chairman read a letter he had received from Sir George Grey, the Home Secretary, in answer to the resolution passed at their last meeting respecting the expenses entailed on the advancement of money to bodies applying for loans under the provisions of the public works loan commissioners. In this letter Sir G. Grey stated that there is every disposition on the part of the commissioners, as well as of the Government, to reduce the expense to the lowest amount compatible with the obligation on the commissioners to take full security for the payment of the advances; and that the solicitor to the commissioners and the legal advisers of the Poor-law Board have been directed to confer together, in order to ascertain whether the legal proceedings hitherto taken in respect of advances under the act can be in any way abridged, and especially whether any means can be devised of dispensing with a separate deed for each instalment without lessening the security for repayment. The number of operatives out of work in the last week of November was reported to be 159,117, being an increase of 4898 over the corresponding week of October. Sir J. K. Shuttleworth moved a series of resolutions in reference to the factory operatives to be employed on public works, which after a long discussion were agreed to.

Melton Mowbray.—An inquest was held at Waltham, near this town on Friday last, on the body of Mrs. Hutchins, the wife of an innkeeper in the village, who was said to have given her poison on the pretence that it was magnesia. It appeared from the evidence that deceased and her husband had lived a most unhappy life, and that the latter was a very intemperate man. He was arrested on the charge, and the inquest was adjourned for further evidence.

Norwich.—Messrs. Miller and Bugg, solicitors, of this city, have announced that by an indenture of trust and settlement, dated Nov. 24, Mr. W. F. Windham, late of Felbrigg, has assigned to trustees all his real estate and property whatsoever, for the payment of his debts to such creditors as shall execute or assent in writing to the same indenture within three months from the date thereof.

Ryde.—On Wednesday morning a man named Robert Hallett, a labourer, murdered a woman named Philips, and afterwards attempted to commit suicide. The murderer and the deceased had been cohabiting for some years. Both had been married previously; he had been separated from his wife, and she from her husband, in consequence, it is said, of her dissolute habits. The murderer's age is upwards of 50, the woman's was upwards of 40. They lived in a small tenement belonging to Hallett, who possessed some property in Ryde a few years since, in St. John's Road, near the Roman Catholic Cathedral. On Tuesday evening Hallett had received, or borrowed, some money from a person in Ryde, and, returning home with it, appears to have had a drinking bout in his house in company with the woman Philips, her reputed father, a fisherman named Sanders, and a youth, a son of Sanders. All four slept in the house that night. During the night Sanders heard the woman cry out, "Father, father!" but he seems to have taken little or no notice, quarrels between them being of frequent occurrence. In the morning the son got up, and on leaving the house looked into the room in which the man and woman slept, and saw both lying on the floor and covered with blood. He gave the alarm and medical aid was procured, when it was found that the woman's head had been cut off, and that the man had a frightful gash in his throat, but was still living. A large carving knife was found on the floor. It was at first believed the murderer would not recover; but, later in the day, the medical men who had been called in were of opinion that there was a possibility of his recovery.

Saffron Walden.—The famous Danish grave-mounds known as the Bartlow Hills, after having been spared by the plough and the harrow for more than 1000 years, have at length been condemned to destruction in order to accommodate a trivial feeder of the Great Eastern Railway. In so flat a district as the borders of Cambridgeshire and Essex a slight deviation would, it is thought, have been easily practicable; but so wantonly has the new line been adjusted that, as actually staked out for immediate operations, it will bisect two adjacent tumuli of the curious and picturesque group. The subject having been brought under the notice of the council of the Archæological Institute, that body at once addressed a remonstrance to the railway directors; and it is to be hoped they will succeed in preserving these interesting vestiges of antiquity, which are among the most singular relics we possess of a very early and obscure period in the history of this country.

Stafford.—On Thursday afternoon William Barrows, Esq., sole surviving partner of the well-known firm of Barrows and Hall, of the Bloomfield and other ironworks, Tipton, died suddenly at the railway station, Stafford. He had been at Stafford during the week, apparently in good health and displaying his ordinary activity. At one o'clock on Monday he left the witness-box, having given evidence in a case of embezzlement at the Assizes, to all appearance without any change of health. He went to the railway-station to proceed home, and asked for a basin of soup at the refreshment room. In a few minutes he fell off his chair, and before a surgeon could arrive was dead. He was a magistrate of Stafford and was highly respected. His two sons are Lieut.-Col. Barrows, of the 4th Battalion of Staffordshire Rifle Volunteers; and Capt. Barrows, of the Tipton Company.

Sunderland.—In September last the captain and crew of the French ship Jantalina were charged before the borough magistrates with the murder of a Hartlepool fisherman, named Wilkinson, on the high seas. Wilkinson and a boat's crew were engaged in herring fishing off Seaham, when their coble was run down by the French vessel. The boat did not sink immediately, and the Englishmen in attempting to save their lives leaped aboard the Frenchman, when they were forced back by the crew, who drove them over the side by handspikes and bludgeons. Wilkinson being stunned by a blow, fell into the sea and was drowned. The other men escaped the same fate by getting into English cobles. As the offence was committed on board a French vessel on the high seas, the captain and crew were sent to France to be tried. The captain has just been sentenced by the French Courts to 21 years', and two of the crew to 12 years' confinement in the hulks for the offence.

St. David's.—In consequence of the dangerous condition of the cathedral it has been inspected by Mr. Gilbert Scott, the architect, who has prepared a report in which he estimates the cost of its restoration at 30,000*l.* This report has recently been laid before a county meeting at Carmarthen. The bishop of the diocese presided, and there were present also Lord Dynevor, Dr. Llewellin, Dean of St. David's; Mr. Scourfield, M.P., Mr. Pugh, M.P., Colonel Sir J. J. Hamilton, and other county gentlemen. Lord Dynevor moved the first resolution,—"That the state of the Cathedral of St. David's, as described in Mr. Scott's report, renders it desirable that steps should be immediately taken with a view to its repair and restoration." His lordship said that a portion of the tower of the cathedral, which was 700 years old, was crushed and only supported by the wall which abutted against it, two of the four supports of the tower being wholly untrustworthy. He thought that they might confine their yearly expenditure to 3000*l.* or 4000*l.*, and so extend the subscriptions over a number of years, the subscribers paying by instalments. This resolution having been seconded by Mr. Pugh, M.P., Mr. Scourfield moved,—"That the portion of the work to be undertaken in the first instance include the repairs of the tower, and parts immediately in connection with it, and the restoration of the choir or eastern arm of the cathedral." This resolution having been carried, Colonel Sir J. J. Hamilton suggested the erection of a new cathedral in a more central position in the diocess. He would contribute 100*l.* towards the restoration of the cathedral as a parish church, and for the erection of a new cathedral in Carmarthen he was prepared to do a great deal more. Mr. Gilbert Scott then addressed the meeting, explaining the state of the cathedral, which, he said, was at present not only in a dangerous, but a disgraceful condition, while the tower was imminently dangerous. A committee was then appointed, including the bishop, the dean and chapter, the archdeacon of the diocess, the members for the counties and boroughs, Earl Cawdor, Lord Dynevor, Mr. Beresford Hope, M.P., and other gentlemen. Some large subscriptions were announced, including 1000*l.* each from the bishop and the dean and chapter, 500*l.* from Lord Dynevor, and 300*l.* from the Rev. Sir Erasmus Williams, in addition to 200*l.* included in the dean and chapter's donation.

Truro.—The local papers state that certain landed property in the counties of Cornwall and Dorset, called Rialton and Gillingham, which belonged to the Queen, have just been conveyed to the Prince of Wales, for the sum of 97,920*l.*

Windsor.—A number of deer, selected from the fine herds belonging to the Queen in the Great Park, have been lately forwarded to Sandringham, in order to stock the park there. The herds in Windsor Park are at present very strong, and have a number of very fine animals among them.

Worcester.—At the county petty sessions, held at the Shire Hall on Monday, Mr. Thomas Clutterbuck, a solicitor practising in this city, was charged with abduction. The girl Barbara Hopkins, aged 13, had, in consequence of her mother's death, lived with her grandfather and grandmother since she was three years of age. They sold milk, and she carried it round to the customers, among whom was the defendant. About Christmas last he asked the grandmother to allow the girl to stay with his servant while his daughter was out. In October, when the child was one day in his dining room, defendant, who is a widower, asked her if she would like to go to London with him and the servant, and she said she would. On the 13th ult. defendant was at the grandfather's house on business, and asked the grandmother to allow the girl to go to London, but she would not give her consent. He offered her 1*l.* to buy clothes, and she refused it, but handed it to her grandchild. On the 21st ult. defendant went to the grandmother's house, and showed her a letter from a Mrs. Child in London, saying she had apartments ready for him. He asked the grandmother to sign a paper allowing the girl to go, but she refused to do so. While the grandmother left the house for a short time defendant told the girl that he had paid 10*l.* to Mrs. Costello, a dressmaker in Worcester, to take her as an apprentice, and induced her to consent to meet him at the railway station on the following Monday. The girl then joined him and accompanied him to London, where they slept three nights in the same bed. On their return to Worcester on the 1st inst. the girl was taken possession of by her father. The grandfather and father swore before the magistrates that they had not consented to the girl going to London. The magistrates committed the defendant for trial at the assizes, but admitted him to bail.

Pastoral by Archbishop Cullen.—Dr. Cullen has addressed a pastoral to the Roman Catholic clergy and laity of the diocese of Dublin respecting the approaching festival of the Immaculate Conception. After adverting to the mysterious dignity by which the Virgin was exalted, and the happiness of Catholics in being able to implore her intercession, the archbishop remarks:—

"During many long years our poor country has suffered severely from famine, pestilence, bad seasons, and other visitations of heaven. To these are to be added the evils occasioned by that false and anti-Christian political economy, which would destroy those beings that have been made to the image of God, and redeemed by the blood of Christ, to make room for the brute beasts of the field; and which, in order to provide for the manufacturing and material interests of another country, would rob Ireland of the privilege of being an island of saints in order to make her the mother of herds and flocks. Our past afflictions have been great indeed, but are we not still menaced by other evils, and especially by a continuation of misery and distress, and the greater evils that arose from the machinations of secret and illegal societies? It may be that we are allowed to suffer in order to show that we are the true children of God. Dearly beloved brethren, if we are anxious to repel the assaults of our enemies, let us put on the armour of light, and protect ourselves with the breastplate of faith. The best means for effecting all this is to give a good Catholic education to the rising generation, so that all may know the practices of their religion, and may be able to give an account of the faith that is in them. The poor are to avoid proselytising schools, the rich to shun anti-Catholic colleges and universities, in which the prevailing Protestant spirit is most hostile to the doctrines and practices of the Catholic Church. Above all, we are to shun the contagion of bad and irreligious books, which corrupt the heart and pervert the intellect, and to avoid all the seductions of bad company, the ruin of so many souls."

Alleged Federal Enlistments at Cork.—The Federal corvette Kearsage again arrived off Queenstown harbour on Monday, when the captain re-landed sixteen men previously shipped there. The matter has, apparently, been taken up by the British Government.

The Fenian Invasion.—The Nation has just presented its subscribers with two political cartoons, entitled respectively "Going with a Vengeance," and "Coming with a vengeance." The first represents an "eviction," in which the agents of the law in the presence of the landlord are driving out the peasantry, who are preparing in the foreground for emigration. The second represents John Bull, holding by a chain a female figure which has just dropped a harp to implore aid from two armies which are seen descending a hill in the distance, under the American and Irish flags while the British lion, with downcast head and his tail between his legs, is deserting his master at this unexpected apparition.

The Nationalists and Secession.—A difference of opinion has taken place between the Irish Nationalists on the right of the Southern States of America to fight for their independence. Mr. Smith O'Brien holds that they have a right to assert their independence. On the contrary, The O'Donoghue contends that no such right exists, and that the views of Mr. Smith O'Brien, as expressed in his letter to General Meagher, are not only the views of "the English oligarchy and the West Britons of Ireland, but also, alas! of the well-meaning but mistaken few who carry their theories on the right of self-government to a length which would justify every parish in setting up for itself; and that the Southerns have no more right to set up for themselves than the agricultural districts of England had on the passing of the Corn Laws, or than the 'Prentice Boys of Derry would have to set up for themselves if Ireland were an independent nation, and the majority of Irishmen objected to the shutting of the gates on the famous anniversary of Parson Walker's barring out." From this the Nation differs, and maintains that the sympathies of Ireland ought not to be on the side of the North, because the sympathies of England are on the side of the South, but should be with the right, on whatever side it may be found.

Fatal Gunpowder Explosion in Argyleshire.—During the storm of Thursday week a fearful explosion took place at the Kames Gunpowder Mills in Argyleshire, by which seven men were killed and eight injured. It is supposed that the building was struck by lightning. The shock of the explosion was felt for many miles.

Court of Chancery: The Case of Colonel Waugh.—This was an appeal to the Lord Chancellor against an order of the Court of Bankruptcy, allowing Colonel Waugh to go at large. His lordship in giving judgment on Thursday said that he could not give judicial credit to the conclusion which the bankrupt wished to impress upon him, that if he were now discharged he would remain in this country to assist his creditors in the preparation of his accounts, and that any convenience which might result from his release would not be so great as to induce him to set aside the rights of the detaining creditor, or to exercise the discretion vested in the Court by the Act of 1861. He therefore rescinded the order made by Commissioner Goulburn for his discharge.

North Wales Circuit: Chester.—The Stockport Poisoning Case.—Alice Hewett, alias Holt, 27, was charged with poisoning her mother, Mary Bailey, at Stockport. The prisoner had lived with a woman named Holt, and was the main support of her mother, the deceased. Some time ago the prisoner proposed to insure her own life and that of her mother in an insurance society, but this project fell through for a time. In February last, however, the prisoner asked a woman named Ann Bayley to personate her mother before the doctor for a life policy. Bayley refused. The prisoner then procured a woman named Betty Wood to personate Mary Bailey, who was at that time lying ill, and a certificate of acceptance of the insurance was issued. Mrs. Bailey became ill, and was attended by the parish doctor, who was surprised to find his remedies fail. On three occasions pork pies were purchased and partaken of by the mother, who was sick afterwards. The deceased got worse, and prisoner called in Mr. Barker, who never met the parish doctor, so that each prescribed in ignorance of the other's visits. A nurse called Ryle was in attendance on her, and was repeatedly asked by the prisoner, "Is my mother dying?" On the 25th March she purchased some arsenic, and that evening the old woman was taken worse. Next evening the prisoner bought some more, and when she came home put it in a jug with water. Before deceased died the prisoner bought some brandy for her mother, who drank it, and then said, "There are some grounds at the bottom." The prisoner said, "You ought to have drunk it, grounds and all." During the night the deceased was worse, and she died in the morning. The prisoner subsequently said to Ann Bayley, "Well, I am very glad my mother died, for all my clothes were fast. I wanted to get them out." The body was hurriedly interred, the prisoner informing the insurance agent that the doctor said "it would not keep." The insurance society paid the amount of the policy; but, after a time, suspicion was excited, and the body was exhumed, when it was found, on a post mortem examination, to be "saturated with arsenic." Several witnesses having been examined in support of this statement, the jury, after about 20 minutes' absence, found the prisoner Guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. On hearing the verdict the prisoner fainted, and moaned in a way pitiful to hear. Mr. Justice Willes assumed the black cap, and, after promising to forward the recommendation of the jury to the proper quarter, although he could hold out no hope that the prayer would be complied with, passed sentence of Death in the usual form. The prisoner was removed from the dock in an insensible condition.

Midland Circuit: Stafford.—The Murder of Two Children at West Bromwich.—Benjamin Holding was indicted for the murder of his two children, Jane Holding and Joseph Benjamin Holding. The prisoner, a man in the prime of life, was a bundler at an ironworks, and lived at Hall End, near West Bromwich, in the black country between West Hampton and Birmingham. He was married and had two children, one a little girl of four-and-half years, and the other an infant boy of only 14 months. To these and to his wife he always behaved with the greatest tenderness and affection. He bought for them a little perambulator, and in this it was his delight to take them about the lanes and roads around his dwelling every evening after returning from his work. One of his favourite haunts on those occasions was a neighbouring cemetery. He was also a religious man. He led a good moral life, read his Bible often, attended regularly at Church, and was a Sunday-school teacher. In the summer and autumn of the present year he became afflicted with tic-doloreux, and suffered much from pains in his head accompanied by sleeplessness. On the morning of Sept. 22 he went to his work as usual. He returned at 1 o'clock and took his dinner, During the afternoon he remained at home, and was left there by his wife at about 4 o'clock. The wife went to the house of the prisoner's mother. In a short time she was alarmed by seeing her husband come in with wild, staring eyes, and in a most excited state. He remarked, "My little children are gone to heaven," and the two women at once ran to his house. There, on the hearth-rug, in front of the fire, they saw the little girl lying with her throat cut from ear to ear, and quite dead. On the sofa lay the lifeless and similarly mangled body of the infant boy. On the table was the carving knife with which the frightful deed had been committed. The neighbours rushed in, and to them the prisoner remarked that his time was short, and he wished his children to go before him. The motive thus given by the murderer himself was the only one for the commission of the crime which could now be adduced on the part of the prosecution. For the defence a plea of insanity was set up. The mother stated that her paternal aunt and niece had died mad, and that she still had a cousin who was also insane. The doctor said that madness among the poor was largely due to an hereditary taint, and that there existed an insanity known as homicidal mania, by which a man was impelled to commit crime even when he was free from delusion. In answer to a direct question, he also said that, assuming the facts of the case as given by the witnesses to be true, he did think it probable that the prisoner was mad when he killed his children. It was also shown that on a Sunday, six weeks before the murder, Holding, while in church, during the time when the congregation was standing up, suddenly sat down, folded his arms, and looked wildly around him. On the morning of the occurrence he was observed by a fellow workman to be unusually silent. During the trial he appeared to be in the deepest distress; his tears for nearly three hours were profuse and ceaseless. The Jury Acquitted him on the ground of insanity.

Northern Circuit: York.—The South Cave Post Office Robbery.—Maria Cook, aged 32, was indicted for stealing two checks from a letter and the post letter-bag at South Cave, on the 24th September last. It appeared that on the day in question the agent for the Yorkshire Banking Company at South Cave enclosed seven checks in a letter, addressed to the manager of the branch bank of the company at Beverley. Some of these checks were for large amounts, but all were crossed; one was for 35*l.*, and another for 24*l.* 8*s.* These checks were enclosed in a common gummed envelope, and posted by a clerk at the post-office at South Cave, which was kept at that time by a man named Hanson, who also kept a grocer's shop. The mail-bag that night was made up by Hanson and an assistant, there were 38 letters put into it, and it was tied and sealed up, and by Hanson placed on his shop counter to wait for the mail cart, which was to arrive shortly after 7 o'clock. Hanson left the shop, and left in it his wife attending to a child who had come in to purchase something. The child left, and the shop door, which had a bell upon the lower half of it, was not quite closed by the child in going out. Mrs. Hanson went into the passage adjoining the shop to call her husband and send him upstairs for a bag she wanted, she being absent from the shop only a minute, and on her return she missed the letter bag, which was gone. Messengers were sent in all directions, but no one was seen to have left the shop. The prisoner, who is a married woman, respectably connected, and a relative of Hanson's wife, had been staying with them on a visit about two months before, and knew the ways and customs of the house. She lived at Hull. She was seen going by the railway to Brough, which is three miles from South Cave, that afternoon by the 4 o'clock train. Shortly before 7 o'clock a lady was seen by a man living in South Cave to be standing close to Hanson's shop door and looking through the windows into the shop. She turned and went down a passage behind the shop. In appearance and dress she much resembled the prisoner; and about half past 7 a man driving a dog-cart from South Cave to Ferriby, which is two miles and a-half nearer to Hull than Brough, overtook a woman walking on the road and asked her if she would ride. She got into his dogcart and he put her down at Ferriby. She resembled the prisoner in dress and appearance. At 9 o'clock that night the prisoner ran into the railway station, saying she thought a luggage train just passing was the last passenger train for Hull, and that she was late. The train came up about a quarter of an hour after, and she travelled by it in a third-class carriage to Hull. Next morning the bank at Beverley received the South Cave letter, which appeared to have been posted at Ferriby, advising the sending of the seven checks, but only containing five, and not containing two checks for 35*l.* and 24*l.* 8*s.* respectively; and in consequence of this and of information of the loss of the South Cave letter bag a message was sent to the bank at Hull. That morning about 10 o'clock, the prisoner asked a boy in Whitefriargate, Hull, to present a check for her at the bank and bring her the money. He went into the bank, and, the check being crossed, its payment was refused; but, in consequence of the message received from Beverley, a clerk went out and followed the boy until he joined the prisoner, and then asked the prisoner, who had just received back the check, to let him look at the check just presented at the bank. She then pulled an envelope out of her bag and handed it to him, and it contained, not the check presented to the bank, but another check for a different amount—the other missing check. The clerk requested her to step back with him to the bank, and she then said, "She hoped there was nothing wrong." She was asked where she got the checks, and said that a gentleman gave them to her in the railway carriage, as she was coming by the last train from Hessle the night before, and said to her, "There, young woman, there are some checks; if you get them cashed there will be some money for you." On this improbable story she was taken into custody. The post-office letter bag was found empty in a field between South Cave and Ferriby, and it appeared that all the letters posted at South Cave had been subsequently received, and bore either the Ferriby or Hull postmark, showing that they had subsequently been posted at one or other of those places. It also appeared from the evidence of a woman who sat opposite to the prisoner in the railway carriage that no gentleman spoke to her on the journey. The defence set up was that the identity of the prisoner was not satisfactorily established with the woman seen at South Cave, and that her account of how she became possessed of the two checks was the truth, and was not more extraordinary than that of the boy who received them from her as a stranger, and carried them to the bank to present, who would have been charged with stealing them if she had not been found, nor than the extraordinary coincidences in the case for the prosecution, that the bag should be stolen by the prisoner during the only minute that it was left on the shop counter out of sight of Mrs. Hanson, and that the door should have at that same moment been left ajar and the bell not have made any alarm. The jury found the prisoner Guilty. Mr. Justice Wightman said the offence was a very serious one, but he should take into consideration the fact that all the other stolen letters had been forwarded as some mitigation of the injury done. The sentence of the Court was that she be kept in penal servitude for three years.

Sporting.

THE GREAT FIGHT.—This prize fight for 2000*l.*, between Heenan, the Benicia Boy, and Tom King, on which so many thousands had been staked by betters on both sides, took place on Thursday morning at Wadhurst, two stations beyond Tunbridge Wells, on the borders of Sussex and Kent. The special train started from London Bridge before daylight, but in order to keep the party select the tickets were fixed at 3*l.* 3*s.*, and were not issued to any whose names had not been previously approved of. About 1200 persons are said to have paid this sum for the spectacle. On Wednesday evening and during the whole night the station was the scene of great excitement, and a mob of roughs assembled on the chance of being able to get into the carriages. An immense body of police was required to keep order, but in spite of every precaution some of the roughs contrived to get into the station and secreted themselves under the seats of the carriages and even under the carriages themselves, but as every carriage was searched before starting, they were discovered and ejected. The train was drawn by two engines, and proceeded at a rate of 40 miles an hour to Wadhurst, where the ring was pitched immediately on its arrival. King was the first to throw in his cap, and the men having tossed for places the choice was won by Heenan, who took the position looking down hill, and with the bright sun at his back. The betting was 6 and 7 to 4 on Heenan, who looked a model of muscular strength. King was slighter, and a half-stone less in weight, but looked also remarkably well; and both of them were much cheered. A great deal of time was then wasted in the appointment of a referee, and the quarrel was several times nearly coming to a general fight, but at length, chiefly by the interposition of one of the numerous members of parliament, who with peers and officers of both army and navy were present, a referee was agreed upon, and the men were stripped amid the enthusiastic applause of the crowd. Tom Sayers and McDonald were Heenan's seconds, and Noon and Tyler backed King. The men then stood up, and after some sparring King attempted to reach Heenan's face, but was stopped, more accidentally than scientifically, by his head coming within reach of Heenan's left arm, when Heenan in a moment got his head beneath his arm in a grasp like that of a vice. At length by a slip both went down, Heenan uppermost. The fall was a heavy one, and when King was carried to his chair he seemed so like fainting that there were all around from the Americans cries of "It's all over." But it was nothing like all over, for when time was called for the second round King was up shortly after Heenan, and administered to him a severe blow on the jaw, from which the bones appeared to give way. But Heenan tried hugging again, and threw King heavily—"first blood" being accorded to King. In this way the fighting proceeded, nearly every round King administering a heavy blow in the face, and nearly every round Heenan throwing King, without, however, doing the latter as much harm as the cutting blows did the former. But still King was very badly hurt by the falls; and it is more than doubtful whether he would have been up to time on one or two occasions had not Mace, who was attending to his former opponent, entreated, pushed, and even threatened him. But blood was flowing rapidly from Heenan, who was gradually growing weaker and nearly blind, while the latter falls did not seem to hurt King nearly so much as the earlier ones. The struggle became tremendous—Heenan relying more than anything on his wrestling, King on his blows. In the 16th round, however, Heenan happened to get a good blow on King's face, which sent the latter falling into his corner; and as he did not fall directly there was some dispute as to whether he did not go down without a blow. In the next round both men were very weak, and in the 18th round, although King had far the best of the fighting, Heenan threw him again with such force that but for violent restoratives King could not have recovered the stunning of the skull. And now, so excited did the on-lookers become, the ring was broken into and the men had during that round to fight in the middle of a surging, seething crowd, when getting Heenan over the ropes, he punished the American just as he liked, and the ring resounded with cries of "King wins in a walk!" Nor were these exclamations diminished in number or power when, in the 20th round, Heenan's face was nearly covered with blood from the cuts which his backers could not stanch. In the next bout King delivered two terrific blows on Heenan's jaw and eye, cutting his lip as if with a knife. King then closed and threw Heenan, who from that moment had no chance. In the 22d round both combatants were drenched with water, and Heenan also with blood, which nearly blinded him. From that time it was sheer barbarity to continue the fight, but both men were still willing, and the crowd would have it fairly out. In the rounds immediately following the superior endurance and youth of King enabled him to pursue his successes with tremendous rapidity. Hardly could Heenan appear upon his ground—where, it must be said, he presented himself with unflinching pluck to the end—before he was prostrated by King's furious blows, or crushed down in his all-powerful gripe. His face soon became a frightful spectacle, although far less hideous than at the close of his battle with Sayers. At last even the dull humanities of his friends were stirred, and, after another merciless round, in which his failing strength was no longer capable of affording him a shadow of defence, he was, at the close of the 24th round, withdrawn reluctantly by his friends, though himself insensible. King was then hailed as the winner of the 2000*l.*, was able to return the greetings of his friends and even to walk across the ring and take the hand of his late opponent, who was now a fearful object, his face absolutely running with blood, and swollen to an extent which can scarcely be imagined. He was also pulseless, and punished internally, for he vomited so much that it was feared he would die on the spot; and it was only after a very considerable interval that he could be removed in an open fly to the station at Wadhurst, where it was thought better he should remain for the day at least. King returned to town in the special train which arrived at Bricklayers' Arms station at two o'clock. The fight lasted 35 minutes, and it is said that 24 rounds were never before fought in so short a time.

Obituary.

MR. JUSTICE WIGHTMAN died suddenly on Thursday at York. His lordship was in that city trying prisoners at the Yorkshire winter assizes, and on Wednesday was in his usual health, and tried the long and important Post Office robbery case. The Court rose about 6 o'clock, when his lordship manifested no signs of fatigue, although his labours during the day had been of an arduous character. He retired to rest at his usual hour, and was apparently quite well, but on Thursday morning, at 7 o'clock, when his valet entered his room he was alarmed to find his lordship breathing very heavily, and to all appearance in a fit of apoplexy. Miss Wightman, who accompanied her father whilst on circuit, was instantly called, and two medical men were sent for. Their services, however, were of little avail, for the learned judge remained totally unconscious, and lingered in this state of unconsciousness until a quarter past 1 o'clock, when he expired. Mr. Justice Wightman had been a judge of the Queen's Bench for 22 years, and was universally esteemed by the bar for his amiability of disposition, and for his high legal attainments. His lordship's death has put a stop for the present to the business of the Yorkshire winter assizes.

THE DEAN OF LINCOLN, the Very Rev. Thomas Garnier, B.C.L., died at the Deanery on Monday night, in his 54th year. He had been an invalid for the last three years, having had a paralytic attack from which he never recovered. In the spring he went to the Continent, in the hope of improvement, but returned about a month ago, without benefit, and since then has been gradually sinking. He was the son of Dr. Garnier, Dean of Winchester, and graduated at Worcester College, Oxford, in 1830, and proceeded B.C.L. in 1833, having previously enjoyed a Fellowship at All Souls. He was appointed Chaplain to the House of Commons in 1849, and in 1850 the Crown presented him to the district rectory of Trinity Church, St. Marylebone. In 1860 Lord Palmerston appointed him Dean of Lincoln. He was the author of many published sermons; but the work which brought him first into notice was "Plain Remarks on the Poor Law," published in 1835.

SIR HENRY MARTIN, BART., died at Tunbridge Wells on the 4th inst. He was son of the second baronet, by the daughter of Thomas Powell, Esq., of the Chesnuts, near Tottenham. He was born in 1801, and married in 1825 his cousin, the daughter of the late admiral of the fleet, Sir Thomas Byam Martin, G.C.B. He succeeded his father in 1842. The first baronet was comptroller of the navy.

ADMIRAL AYSCOUGH died at the Crystal Palace Hotel, Norwood, on the 2d inst., in his 88th year. He was born on board her Majesty's ship Swan during a desperate action fought by that vessel while on a passage from North America, under the command of his father, the late Captain John Ayscough, who lost a leg on the occasion. He entered the navy in 1787, and served on various stations under Sir James Wallace, Lord Howe, and other admirals, until he attained the rank of commander in 1797. In 1801 he commanded the Inconstant in Egypt, and received the Turkish gold medal for his services. In 1806 he was posted into the Success, 32, in which he was for some months engaged in the blockade of Havre, and afterwards took part in the expedition against Madeira in 1807, and at the capture of Procida, Ischia, &c., in 1809. He subsequently commanded a squadron at the defence of Sicily. From 1822 until 1825 he superintended the ordinary at Plymouth, and was afterwards for some years commissioner of Jamaica and Bermuda dockyards. He attained flag rank in 1841, and became full admiral in 1855.

THE REV. PROFESSOR THELWALL, lecturer in public reading and elocution in King's College, died a few days since, in his 68th year. He was the son of the well-known John Thelwall, who was tried in 1794 for high treason with Horne Tooke and Hardy, and who afterwards became a successful elocutionist. Mr. Algernon Thelwall graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, 18th wrangler in 1818, M.A. in 1826. From 1819 to 1822 he was minister of the English Chapel at Amsterdam; from 1822 to 1827 he was missionary to the Jews, and then became curate of Blackford, Somersetshire. In 1842-3 he was minister of Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury, and was then appointed curate of St. Matthew's, at the east end of London. In 1850 he was appointed lecturer in public reading and elocution at King's College, for the especial benefit of the theological students. He was author of "Tracts for the Jews," "The Old Testament Gospel," a volume of Sermons on the relations of the Church to the world; a refutation of Edward Irving's heresies; a letter to a friend in answer to objections to the Church of England; attacks on the Church of Rome for idolatry; on the grant to Maynooth; and on the doctrine of Justification; four tracts in the Brighton Protestant Tract Series; Lectures and Exercises in Elocution; and other works in support of the Evangelical party.

MR. WILLIAM SALT, F.S.A., M.R.S.L., junior partner in the firm of Messrs. Stevenson, Salt, & Sons, the well-known banking firm in Lombard Street, died suddenly on Sunday morning. He was at the British Museum on Saturday, investigating matters relating to the topography and antiquities of Staffordshire; and was seized with a fit in church on Sunday morning, from the effects of which he died. Mr. Salt was a familiar reader in the British Museum reading-room, and was well known in the literary world by the number of old books he had presented to the Library. In 1814 he printed a curious supplement to Dr. Harwood's edition of Sampson Erdeswick's "Survey of Staffordshire," with the text in many parts revised, only 20 copies of which were printed.

MR. J. D. HARDING, the most eminent teacher of drawing in London, and one of the most conspicuous water-colour painters of his time, died on the 4th inst. at 15, Lonsdale Terrace, Barnes. James Duffield Harding was born at Deptford in 1798. His father, who was also an artist, was a pupil of Paul Sandby, and he himself had lessons from Prout. Once, by the advice of his mother, he attempted to draw the trees in Greenwich Park, but failed, and became a pupil of an engraver. After a year some fresh sketches from nature were successful, and at the age of 18 he received the silver medal from the Society of Arts. He now became a teacher of drawing, and in the exercise of his profession published three well-known works, the "Guide and Companion to Lessons in Art;" "Sketches at Home and Abroad," and "Park and Forest." He also illustrated several of the Annuals and other works, and his sketches present every variety, ranging from Great Britain to France, the Tyrol, the Alps, Italy and Germany, sea and land, mountain and plain, palace and cottage. He was one of the principal members of the Old Society of Painters in Water Colours, but having about 12 years ago taken to oil-painting, he desired admission to the Royal Academy, and in compliance with the rule which forbids a candidate from being a member of any other society, he severed his connection with the Old Water Colour Society. He was, however, not admitted into the Academy, and after some time he rejoined his old Society, and continued a member of it to his death.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Dec. 12.

Owing to the continued mildness of the weather, all kinds of produce in season are abundant. Pine Apples are well supplied, and prices for them are moderate. Grapes of all kinds are now beginning to get scarce. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Nelis d'Hiver, Glou Morceau, Monsieur le Curé, and Beurré Diel Pears. Good English Apples are getting somewhat scarce. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin and Cox's Orange Pippin Apples may still be obtained. Kent Cobs are good and plentiful. St. Michael Oranges are realising from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Primroses, Mignonette, and Roses.

BRITISH WOOLS.—London, Dec. 10.

We are still without business, and expect to be so until the minimum rate of discount is arrived at with some degree of probability. In the meantime the general feeling is not to press wool on the market until the consumers require it.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday. Dec. 7.

The number of Beasts is nearly as large as on Monday last. The trade is brisk, and in some instances last week's prices are rather exceeded. The supply of Sheep is very much shorter, and consequently prices are rather better on the average, but trade finishes very dull. Good Calves are scarce, and make full prices. From Germany and Holland there are 480 Beasts, 1340 Sheep, and 118 Calves; from Spain, 140 Beasts; from Scotland, 520; from Ireland, 780; and 2700 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Thursday, Dec. 10.

The number of Beasts is considerably larger than on Thursday last, but it is not excessive for the day before the "Great Market." Several good specimens are on offer and make good prices. Indeed, in every respect trade is fully as good as on Monday last. Sheep are also now plentiful, and although trade is not very brisk, there is but little alteration in prices. Calves are scarcely as dear as on Monday. Our foreign supply consists of 510 Beasts, 1140 Sheep, and 242 Calves. Milch Cows, 90.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Dec. 7.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was moderate, and disposed of at barely the rates of this day se'nnight. The sale of Foreign was limited, and confined to the necessities of consumers, who purchased reluctantly, and in retail at our quotations. Barley, with the exception of the finest malting, was rather cheaper. Beans and Peas were unaltered in value. The Oat trade was steady at late rates. Flour sold slowly at about last week's prices.

Friday, Dec. 11.

The weather since the 4th inst. has been fine and mild, excepting the 9th, which was wet. The advance in the rate of discount has stopped all speculation in Wheat, and the trade of the week has been very limited; a decline of 1s. per qr. is quoted in the majority of the provincial markets, and must have been accepted here had there been any disposition to press sales. Barley, particularly the inferior descriptions of English, has been neglected, with a lowering tendency in prices. The previous value of Oats, Beans, and Peas has been maintained. Since Friday last 32 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been very inactive during the week. Wheat receded 1s., Barley and Beans 6d. per qr. Paris, Dec. 10.—Flour, after a small advance, has come back to last week's rates. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 33s. 6d. per 280 lbs; the present stock is estimated at 4400 cwt. For Wheat 1s. to 1s. 6d. per qr. higher prices were generally asked, but only a limited business was done at 6d. to 9d. per qr. advance. The arrivals of English grain this week have been very small, moderate of foreign Wheat and Flour, very large of Barley, and small of Oats. The attendance of buyers at this morning's market was most limited, as was also the amount of business transacted in Wheat. We do not, however, alter our quotations. Spring Corn of all descriptions was a slow sale at Monday's prices. The Flour trade was also quiet.

Arrivals this Week.

Liverpool, December 8.—We have had a very short attendance of both town and country millers and dealers at to-day's market, and the business passing in Wheat has been quite of a retail character, at a reduction of 1d. per cental from the rates of Friday last. Flour must be quoted the turn lower to sell, but there is little offering. Indian Corn is quite neglected, and might be had fully 3d. per qr. cheaper, but buyers are shy, dear money completely outweighing the American advices. Oats and Oatmeal dull. Beans, Peas, and Barley each a shade easier. The market closes dull.

Friday, Dec. 11.—Market generally quiet. Wheat exceedingly slow, and value quite nominal. Flour quiet, and several parcels Western sold 20s. to 20s. 6d. Indian Corn dull, and rather lower; mixed 29s. to 29s. 6d. Beans, Oats, and Oatmeal dull.

Enlargement of the "Florist."

On and after the 1st of January, 1864,

THE "FLORIST and POMOLOGIST" will be ENLARGED to TWENTY-FOUR PAGES instead of Sixteen.

Great additions in variety will be made to subjects henceforth to be treated of in its pages, and writers of the first talent in all the various departments of Horticulture have been secured, who will contribute monthly articles which shall be of general interest to our numerous readers. No branch of Horticulture, Floriculture, and Pomology shall be overlooked, and it is intended that the subjects shall be such as to interest every class of the horticultural community. One of the leading features will be the continuation of Dr. Hogg's British Pomology, of which a portion, illustrated with numerous figures of the Fruits, will appear in each Number. The subject shall be the Pear, treated of to its fullest extent—every known variety being described, its merits recorded, and, when practicable, its figure given.

Botany for Beginners, copiously illustrated with first-class Engravings, shall also form one of the most prominent of the new subjects.

Florists' subjects will be handled by a highly-competent authority; and in the other departments of gardening, both in-door and out-door, the services of writers of the greatest experience have been secured, the object being to render the "FLORIST and POMOLOGIST" a Pictorial Monthly Journal of general gardening interest, and the information it contains supplied by the leading horticulturists of the day.

WALTON & MABERLY.

Now ready, Part I., price 2*s*., of

A HISTORY of the WORLD, from the EARLIEST RECORDS to the PRESENT TIME. By Philip Smith, B.A., one of the principal Contributors to the Dictionaries of Greek and Roman Antiquities, Biography, and Geography.

The Work will form a continuous Narrative of Ancient, Mediæval, and Modern History, instead of giving separate accounts of the several nations. It will be divided into Three Periods, each complete in itself, and will form 8 Volumes in demy 8vo.

I. ANCIENT HISTORY, Sacred and Secular; from the Creation to the Fall of the Western Empire, in A.D. 476. 2 vols.

II. MEDIEVAL HISTORY, Civil and Ecclesiastical; from the Fall of the Western Empire to the Taking of Constantinople by the Turks, in A.D. 1453. 2 vols.

III. MODERN HISTORY; from the Fall of the Byzantine Empire to our own Times. 4 vols.

It will be published in Monthly Parts, at 2*s*.; and Half-Yearly Volumes, at 12*s*. 6*d*. cloth lettered.

II.

BARON LIEBIG'S WORKS.

"Side by side, as long as husbandry shall last, will these three names shine in co-equal glory:—Antoine Lavoisier, Humphry Davy, Justus Liebig. To Lavoisier belongs the noble initiation of the work; to Davy its splendid prosecution; to Liebig its glorious consummation. Embracing in his masterly induction the results of all foregone and contemporary investigation, and supplying its large defects by his own incomparable researches, Liebig has built up on imperishable foundations, as a connected whole, the code of simple general laws on which regenerated agriculture must henceforth for all time repose."

International Exhibition Report, 1862.

LIEBIG'S NATURAL LAWS of HUSBANDRY. 8vo, 10*s*. 6*d*.

"This important volume contains the most recent and matured opinions of that distinguished chemist to whom agriculture is mainly indebted for whatever claims she may be able to put forward to be regarded as a science."—Spectator.

"All who are capable of appreciating Baron Liebig's work must admit that its publication entitles him to the lasting gratitude of the civilised world."—Reader.

LIEBIG'S LETTERS on MODERN AGRICULTURE. Small 8vo, 6*s*.

"I am desirous to make the educated men of the nation acquainted with the principles which have been established by chemistry in connection with the nutrition of plants, the conditions of the fertility of soils, and the causes of their exhaustion."—Preface.

LIEBIG'S FAMILIAR LETTERS on CHEMISTRY, in its Relations to Physiology, Dietetics, Agriculture, Commerce, and Political Economy. 4th Edition, Revised and enlarged. Small 8vo, 7*s*. 6*d*.

"This work of Baron Liebig is one of those books from which the mind desiring healthy philosophical instruction can receive it in a most pleasant and yet most perfect form. There is no necessity for an acquaintance with all the intricacies of scientific nomenclature and terminology: with a moderate amount of chemical knowledge as a basis, no man of ordinary intellect will rise from the perusal of these letters without the feeling that he has partaken of a wholesome intellectual feast."—British Medical Journal.

III.

COMPANION to LARDNER'S MUSEUM. Animal Physics, or the Body and its Functions Familiarly Explained. Intended as a Companion to the "Museum of Science and Art." 520 Illustrations. Two Volumes, small 8vo, each 3*s*. 6*d*. cloth lettered.

"We can strongly recommend this volume, perfect in accuracy and arrangement, as affording an excellent, yet strictly popular view of Animal Physics—a subject which, we doubt not, must now become a part of general education. It is profusely illustrated with well-executed woodcuts, and, from its completeness throughout, we expect to see it adopted as a text-book in all schools of preliminary instruction for those who are to be educated for any of the learned professions."—Dublin Quarterly Journal of Medical Science.

LARDNER'S HANDBOOK of ASTRONOMY. Forming a Companion to the "Hand-Book of Natural Philosophy." Second Edition, Revised and Edited by Edwin Dunkin, F.R.A.S., of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich. With 37 Plates, and upwards of 100 Illustrations on Wood. Complete in One Volume, small 8vo, 7*s*. 6*d*.

"This and the preceding volumes of Dr. Lardner's Handbook occupy a remarkable place in literature. While on the one hand they are examples of the extreme simplification which the statement of the laws by which natural phenomena are regulated is capable, on the other they are illustrations of the care and method with which the true philosopher invariably treats the truths of Science."—Mechanics' Magazine.

HOME WALKS and HOLIDAY RAMBLES. By the Rev. C. A. Johns, B.A., F.L.S., Author of "British Birds in their Haunts," and other Works on Natural History.

"There is no doubt that Mr. Johns has provided a volume of very pleasant reading for old readers as well as young ones." Saturday Review.

"While Mr. Johns's book will, as well from its external as internal attractions, naturally commend itself to the young, it may be perused with pleasure, and not without instruction by all." The Reader.

"This is a delightful boy's or girl's book of out-door natural history, setting forth, under their dates, actual observations of nature, with a special inclination towards facts in ornithology." Examiner.

"Many young persons will thank Mr. C. A. Johns for furnishing them with examples of the way to investigate and observe those common but interesting objects by which we are surrounded, but which so many fail to see, because their attention has never been directed to them in youth." Gardeners' Chronicle.

"Mr. Johns relates in his preface that his volume is intended for the young, whom, he believes, it is likely to interest more than the fictitious histories of boy adventurers now so common. We hope and believe that he is right. He is a careful observer of the habits of the beautiful creatures by which we are surrounded; and he tells what he has noticed truthfully and well." Press.

LIVERPOOL and LONDON FIRE and LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

At the Annual Meeting of the Proprietors in this Company, held on Thursday, February 25, 1863, James Aspinall Tobin, Esq., in the Chair, the Report of the Directors for the year 1862 was read. It showed:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| That the Fire Premiums of the year were .. | £436,065 | 0 | 0 |
| Against those in 1861, which were .. .. | 360,131 | 0 | 0 |
| Giving an increase in 1862 of .. .. .. | £75,934 | 0 | 0 |
| That the new Life business comprised the issue of 785 Policies, insuring .. .. .. .. | 467,334 | 0 | 0 |
| On which the Annual Premiums were .. .. | 13,935 | 7 | 11 |
| That there was added to the Life Reserve .. | 79,277 | 11 | 4 |
| That the balance of Undivided Profit was increased | 25,725 | 9 | 7 |
| That the Invested Funds of the Company amounted to .. .. .. .. .. | 1,417,808 | 8 | 4 |

In reference to the very large increase of 76,000*l.* in the Fire premiums of the year, it was remarked in the Report, "The Premiums paid to a Company are the measure of that Company's business of all kinds; the Directors therefore prefer that test of progress to any the duty collected may afford, as that applies to only a part of a Company's business, and a large share of that part may be, and often is, re-insured with other offices. In this view the yearly addition to the Fire Premiums of the Liverpool and London Company must be very gratifying to the proprietors."

Swinton Boult, Secretary to the Company.
John Atkins, Resident Secretary, London.

News of the Week.

The Danish Government has received official notice that Federal execution in Holstein will be carried out on Tuesday next. The contingents of the four Powers deputed to give effect to this resolution are prepared to march on that day; the Federal Diet has voted 17 millions of thalers for the expenses of the execution, and has issued instructions to the civil commissioners who are appointed to assume the provisional government of the Duchy. The German Parliaments, however, with scarcely an exception, are dissatisfied with these measures on the ground that they are inadequate to the emergency, and that nothing less than the occupation of the two Duchies will meet the views of Germany. The Saxon Diet has adopted a resolution demanding the abrogation of the Treaty of London and the recognition of Prince Frederick of Augustenburg as Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, while the Liberals in the Prussian Chamber of Deputies have resolved to address the King, stating their reasons for refusing the proposed loan of 12 million thalers, unless the Government withdraw from the London Treaty and engage not only to recognise Prince Frederick, but to render him effectual assistance in taking possession of his hereditary rights. It is reported at Vienna that Federal execution in the Duchies will pass into occupation if Denmark opposes execution, and that in such a case Austria will consider herself released from the obligations of the London Treaty, and will send the Austrian fleet to co-operate with the forces of the Confederation. Meanwhile the Danish representative at the Federal Diet has received orders to quit Frankfort as soon as the Federal troops enter Holstein and it is believed at Copenhagen that King Christian, anxious to remove all ground for hostility on the part of Germany, intends to withdraw his troops from the Duchy and to make no opposition to the Federal execution Lord Wodehouse and Marshal Fleury have arrived this week at Copenhagen on a special mission from England and France, and it is still hoped that, by the intervention of France, England, and Russia, a pacific understanding will be arrived at.

The French Government has sustained a serious defeat in the new elections at Paris and Dijon. In Paris, M. Pelletan has been returned by a majority of 5000 votes over the Government candidate, notwithstanding the whole influence of the Government was brought to bear against him; while at Dijon the Opposition candidate defeated the Government nominee by a majority of nearly 4000 votes. It is said that the Government has decided on raising the new loan of 300,000,000 fr. by public subscription.

From the United States we learn that General Meade has abandoned the campaign in Virginia and recrossed the Rapidan, finding General Lee's position too strong to be assaulted. The press and the public generally express great dissatisfaction at this termination of a campaign from which the most brilliant results had been promised, and it is again reported that General Meade will be superseded and the command of the Army of the Potomac be conferred on General Sedgwick. The accounts received last week of the disastrous retreat of General Bragg were much exaggerated. The main army of the Confederates has reached Dalton, and after having been reinforced by General Joe Johnstone, has been entirely reorganised. General Bragg, however, has been superseded by General Hardee, who is preparing to assume the offensive against General Grant, in spite of the announcement that the latter had determined to abandon the further prosecution of the campaign for the present winter. There has been some severe fighting before Knoxville, but the report that General Longstreet has raised the siege is contradicted, General Hooker, before evacuating Ringold, was obliged to fight a battle with the Confederates, in which two of his Ohio regiments were nearly destroyed. Accounts from Charleston of the 1st inst. state, that General Gilmore was throwing shells into the city, but had discontinued the bombardment of Fort Sumter. President Lincoln was seriously ill from an attack of small-pox, but was nevertheless engaged in preparing his Message for the opening of Congress on the 7th inst.

A despatch from Bombay informs us that the Hill tribes on the 20th ult. attacked the British position with great audacity, but were driven back by our troops. The fighting was very severe. Lieutenants Sanderson and Peel of the 101st Regiment were killed; five officers, including General Chamberlain and Colonel Hope, were wounded, and 128 privates killed or wounded. General Chamberlain reports that he is confident of final success, but in consequence of his wound and ill health, he has been obliged to resign the command, and has been succeeded by General Garvock.

The Japan Commercial News of the 10th October states that the Daimios have bombarded and captured the Imperial cities of Osaca and Kioto, and are advancing an army of 50,000 men for the capture of Yokohama. There is reason to believe that this statement is entirely without foundation, a subsequent telegram having been received in Paris, stating that at an extraordinary meeting of Daimios it had been decided, by a majority of 65 to 47, that there was no ground for declaring war against foreigners.

Home News.

Departure of the Court for Osborne.—The Queen, with the junior members of the Royal family and the Court, intended to leave Windsor on Thursday for Osborne for the Christmas holidays, but on the receipt of a telegram from Portsmouth stating that the sea was so high as to render it dangerous to cross the Solent, the departure was postponed, and the special train which was waiting at the station was countermanded.

The Court at Windsor.—On Friday morning the Queen walked and drove in the grounds. The Princess Helena took a carriage drive. The Queen attended evening service at St. George's Chapel and occupied the Royal closet. The Princess Helena was also present, and occupied the stall of the Prince Consort as Knight of the Garter. On Saturday morning the Queen, accompanied by Princess Louisa, walked and drove in the grounds. The Crown Prince of Prussia visited the Royal Military College at Sandhurst. The Crown Princess, Princess Helena, Prince William of Prussia, and Princess Hohenlohe, came to London. Prince Leopold visited Prince Arthur at the Ranger's Lodge, Greenwich Park. The Right Hon. Sir Henry Bulwer, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople; Sir Rutherford Alcock, Minister to Japan; and M. Antonio Pradilla, Minister from Columbia, had audiences of Her Majesty. In the evening Prince Arthur, the Countess Blucher, and the Rev. Dr. Stanley arrived on a visit. On Sunday morning the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, Princess Hohenlohe, and Prince Leiningen, attended Divine service in the Private Chapel. The Rev. Dr. Stanley preached the sermon. On Monday, being the second anniversary of the Prince Consort's death, the Queen, accompanied by all the members of the Royal Family, visited the Royal Mausoleum at an early hour, and passed the remainder of the day in complete seclusion. On Tuesday Prince Arthur left the Castle for Blackheath. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Helena, walked and drove in the grounds of the Castle. Mr. Gilbert Scott had the honour of submitting to the Queen his model of the Prince Consort's Memorial, which had been erected on a stand fitted for the purpose in the Grand Reception Room, for her Majesty's inspection. The model is about 7 feet in height and 6 feet in width. On Wednesday morning the Queen drove in the grounds. In the afternoon her Majesty attended Divine service in St. George's Chapel in deep mourning, and occupied the Royal closet by the altar. The Princesses Helena and Louisa were also present, and sat in the stalls of the Sovereign Knights of the Garter. On Thursday the Queen was prevented from leaving the Castle by the unfavourable state of the weather. The Prince and Princess of Wales visited her Majesty.

The Prince and Princess of Wales.—On Friday evening the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia and Princess Helena dined with the Prince and Princess at Frogmore. On Saturday Mr. R. Dowling, commissioned by the Tasmanian Government, was honoured by the Princess of Wales with a sitting for her portrait. Mr. Dowling was also honoured by the Prince with another sitting for his portrait. Mr. Morton Edwards was also honoured with another sitting for his bust of his Royal Highness for the corporation of Toronto. On Sunday morning the Prince and Princess visited the Queen and lunched with her Majesty. In the afternoon the Prince, accompanied by the Crown Prince of Prussia, attended Divine service at St. George's Chapel. On Monday the Prince and Princess visited the Queen, and dined with her Majesty in the evening. On Tuesday morning the Prince came to town and honoured Mr. Foley, Mr. Noble, and Mr. Theed with visits at their studios. In the evening the Prince and Princess dined with her Majesty. On Wednesday morning the Queen visited the Princess of Wales at Frogmore. The Princess afterwards walked and drove in Frogmore grounds. On Thursday the Prince and Princess visited the Queen. Their Royal Highnesses are expected to leave Frogmore on Tuesday next, on a visit to the Queen at Osborne, where they will remain about 10 days, and then return to Frogmore.

DEPARTURE OF THE CROWN PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF PRUSSIA.—The Crown Prince and Princess, accompanied by their children, Prince William, Princess Charlotte, and Prince Henry, left Windsor Castle on Tuesday morning at a quarter past 6 o'clock, for Dover. The journey was made from Windsor to the Admiralty pier at Dover by the South-Western, Charing Cross, and South-Eastern lines of railway, in three hours, without change of carriage. The Charing Cross Railway, though not as yet opened for traffic, was declared available for the transit of the State train from the Waterloo junction to London Bridge; and the Prince and Princess expressed themselves highly pleased at the facility and convenience afforded by the new route. Lord Alfred Paget accompanied the Royal party to Dover, where they embarked under the usual military honours and salutes.

PRINCE ALFRED, accompanied by Prince William of Hesse, attended divine service in Holyrood Chapel on Sunday, which was observed as the anniversary of the death of the Prince Consort. The service was performed by the Rev. Dr. MacLeod, of Glasgow. The Princes were expected to leave Holyrood yesterday for Osborne, where they will spend the Christmas holidays. Prince Alfred will return to Edinburgh in the beginning of January.

THE COURT MOURNING.—It is stated that the Royal servants will go out of mourning and resume their scarlet liveries on Monday, the 28th inst.

THE CABINET.—A Cabinet Council was held on Wednesday at the official residence of the First Lord of the Treasury in Downing Street.

THE NEW JUDGE OF THE QUEEN'S BENCH.—Mr. Serjeant Shee has been appointed Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, in the room of the late Mr. Justice Wightman. The new judge is a Roman Catholic, and is the eldest son of the late Mr. Joseph Shee, of Thomastown, in the county of Kilkenny, where he was born in 1804. He was educated at the Roman Catholic College of St. Cuthbert, Durham, and at Edinburgh. In 1828 he was called to the bar of Lincoln's Inn, and for some years past has been the leader of the Home Circuit. In 1840 he was made a serjeant-at-law, and in 1858 Queen's Serjeant. In 1852 he was returned to Parliament for Kilkenny, and continued to represent it until the general election of 1857. He married in 1836 the daughter of Sir James Gordon, premier baronet of Scotland, but was left a widower about two years since.

THE DEANERY OF LINCOLN, vacant by the death of Mr. Garnier, has been conferred by Lord Palmerston on the Rev. Dr. Jeune, D.C.L., Master of Pembroke College, Oxford, and canon of Gloucester.

COLONIAL APPOINTMENT.—Mr. Arthur N. Birch, private secretary to the Under Secretary for the Colonies, has been appointed Colonial Secretary in British Columbia. Mr. Birch is brother of the Rev. H. M. Birch, late tutor to the Prince of Wales, and was assistant private secretary to Sir Bulwer Lytton, when Colonial Secretary.

THE CIRCUITS.—The Gazette of Friday contains an Order in Council directing an alteration in the Northern, Midland, and Norfolk Circuits, by which the county and city of York are taken from the Northern and annexed to the Midland Circuit, and the counties of Leicester, Rutland, and Northampton are taken from the Midland and annexed to the Norfolk Circuit.

THE CHANNEL FLEET, consisting of the Edgar, Black Prince, Warrior, Defence, and Trinculo, left Plymouth on Tuesday afternoon for Lisbon.

THE COURT MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.—The Court re-assembled on Thursday for the 20th time, to hear Colonel Crawley read his defence. The Court was more crowded than it had been since the first day of the trial. Colonel Crawley's address occupied three hours in delivery, and was listened to throughout with the greatest attention, and was greeted at the close with hearty applause from the audience, which was largely composed of ladies. Thirty distinguished officers were then called, and bore strong testimony to Colonel Crawley's gentlemanly, honourable, and humane character. Yesterday, Sir A. Horsford, the official prosecutor, commenced his reply. His speech occupied two hours, and at its conclusion the Assistant Judge Advocate announced that the Court was closed. The decision of the Court will not be made known until it has been referred to the Commander-in-Chief for his approval.

THE CASE OF PAYMASTER SMALES.—It is announced that on a careful consideration of all the circumstances of the case the Secretary of State for War has recommended that Paymaster Smales be placed upon the half-pay of his rank from the period at which he was struck off the strength of the 6th Dragoons.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor presided at a Council of Ministers at the Tuileries on Monday, and at another Council on Tuesday. It is asserted that the Government has decided on raising the new loan of 300,000,000f. by public subscription. In the sitting of the Corps Législatif on Monday the Bill for the loan was laid on the table. M. de Morny, the President, asked that it should be passed upon the first reading. In the Senate on Monday the general debate on the Address commenced. The following is a summary of the proceedings:—

The Marquis de Boissy criticised the paragraph congratulating the Emperor upon the result of the elections. He declared that the elections were bad, not with regard to the number of Government candidates elected, but on account of the manner in which and of the persons by whom they had been conducted. He reviewed the questions of the perfectibility of the constitution, the laws relating to the press, the financial situation, the Mexican expedition, and the Polish insurrection, which he declared was not national but revolutionary in the extreme. He said that his desire was for peace, and that the proposition of a Congress and general disarmament was impossible, on account of the intrigues of England, a mercantile Power perfidious and disloyal, which had always desired the ruin of France. He protested against the paragraph of the Address which appeared to tell the Emperor to do all he thought proper, and they would follow him constantly and everywhere; and concluded by laying upon the table a motion, signed by 10 senators, purporting to modify the constitution.—General Gemeau regretted that the Address made no mention of the Roman question. He called upon the Poles to repudiate foreign intervention, and said that a revolution which overthrows one kingdom could not establish another. He regretted that the treaties of Villafranca and Zurich had not been executed, because the power of the Holy Father would then have been respected, and concluded by saying that if France must again make war, she should carry it on without revolutionary influence. The general debate on the Address then terminated. The discussion by paragraphs began on Tuesday, when paragraphs 1 and 2 were adopted. On paragraph 3, relating to the stability of the Empire, M. de Laguéronnière examined the position of politics in France. Two classes of opinions confronted each other—those entertained by the friends of immobility, and those held by the advocates of wise progress. He disapproved of excess of centralisation, and criticised the manner in which the Administration had established official candidatures, and its method of proceeding with regard to them. He protested against the regulations imposed upon the press by the decree of 1852, and said that the liberty that had been given to the tribune ought necessarily to react upon the rule of the press. He concluded by an appeal to the generous sentiments of the Emperor. M. Rouher announced that the Emperor had given liberty to France. Improvements required wise slowness. Perpetual agitation and mobility never led to progress, never consolidated Governments, but on the contrary, conducted them to an abyss. It was incorrect that political parties were defunct. They were only hidden, and their underground workings were none the less dangerous. If the liberty so ardently demanded were given the edifice would soon succumb beneath their blows. He refuted the remarks of M. de Laguéronnière on the management of the elections and the press, and concluded by protesting against the assertion of the Marquis de Boissy that ill-omened and pestiferous persons surround the Emperor. After a few observations from General Goyon and the Marquis Boissy the sitting terminated. On Wednesday, after speeches by M. de Tourangin, Baron Dupin, the Marquis de Boissy, and M. Royer, M. Rouland, in reply to a question of the Marquis de Larochejacquelin, whether the tendencies of the Government were Christian, expressed his astonishment at such an inquiry when the flag of France was protecting the Holy Father at Rome. Cardinals Mathieu and Donnet pointed out books which they considered intended to pervert society. Paragraphs 3 and 4 were adopted, after some observations from M. Michel Chevalier. MM. Ladoucette, Parieu, and Beaumont spoke on paragraph 5, referring to the extension of the powers of the Conseils Généraux, and the paragraph was then adopted. On Thursday, on the discussion of paragraph 6, referring to the finances, and paragraph 7, respecting Mexico, M. Chaix d'Estange, the Procureur Impérial, in reply to some observations by the Marquis de Boissy and the Marquis de Larochejacquelin, stated amidst great applause that the Government hoped soon to see the establishment of a regular Administration in Mexico, and approached that object at a firm, resolute, and rapid pace. Paragraphs 6 and 7 were then adopted. Paragraph 8, treating of Poland and the European Congress, was next discussed. M. Ségur d'Aguesseau expressed the profound sympathy entertained by France for Poland—the rampart of Europe against barbarian invasion. He spoke of the cruelties of the Russians, and thought that in the event of Russia refusing to come to the Congress it was the duty of France to act, even if alone. The speaker would have desired the paragraph more strongly marked, and in conclusion expressed entire confidence in the Emperor. The Marquis de Larochejacquelin protested against the principle that it was the duty of France to go to war for the Poles. France had embarked upon sufficient adventures, and wished to engage in no more. The part played by England in the negotiations respecting Poland was to break off our alliance with Russia. The Catholics who preached war for Poland would be contented if the entry of Victor Emmanuel into Rome were the prelude of the campaign. He contested the commission of cruelties upon the part of the Russians, and condemned the Secret Government at Warsaw. The debate was then adjourned.

The Moniteur has published some more answers to the Emperor's invitation to the Congress, of which the following is an abstract:—

The Germanic Confederation, in a letter signed by Baron de Kubeck, Minister of Austria, and President of the Diet, says that it "frankly adheres to the pacific ideas of his Majesty, but could not co-operate, with any chance of success, towards their realisation, if the treaties which have established the Germanic Confederation, as well as the political edifice of Europe, were not taken as the basis of negotiations. Admitting that the most solemn treaties are affected in the course of time, the Confederation considers that their modification or abrogation cannot be made without the consent of the parties interested. This basis adopted, it will be possible to indicate beforehand, with the consent of those interested, the international questions which the Congress would have to settle, and to give to Europe the assurance that, far from being the source of new dissensions, it would put an end to those which exist. If this be done, the Confederation will have no objection to appoint a special representative to the Congress.—The King of Denmark in his reply laments that death surprised his predecessor at the very moment when he was about "to consecrate by his signature the new Constitution for the common affairs of his non-German provinces, and accept the invitation addressed to him by the Emperor." King Christian completes what the late Sovereign left unfinished, by replying that he is resolved to associate himself "frankly and without reserve" in the efforts of his Imperial Majesty to realise that great thought, and accepts the invitation with the greatest pleasure.—The King of the Greeks accepts the invitation without reserve, and sincerely wishes that the proposition may be as favourably received by the other Sovereigns. At the same time he says that he flatters himself with the hope that the interests and rights of the Christians in the East will find in the Emperor a generous defender in the future International Council.—The Sultan in his reply says that he will attend the Congress in person if the integrity of Turkey is to remain unendangered.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys has addressed a circular to the French diplomatic agents abroad relative to the Congress. The circular does not trace out the programme to be adopted, as has been asked by some Governments; for such programme cannot be the work of one Government, or even of two or three. The refusal of England has frustrated the combination of an European Congress, but France is ready to come to an understanding with the Governments who shall think it useful to debate pacifically among themselves those questions which, if left to chance, circumstances might conduct to the most fatal complications. The Government of the Emperor would consider it failed in its duty if it abstained from profiting by the dispositions so cordially manifested. The programme of the questions which a Congress thus brought together should discuss is still considerable enough to encourage the Cabinets in the path marked out. The Government has sustained a serious defeat in the Paris re-election, the result of the voting being for M. Pelletan, the Opposition candidate, 15,115; for M. Picard, the Government candidate, 9,778. The result of the Dijon election has also been unfavourable to the Government, M. Magnin, the Opposition candidate, having obtained 18,929 votes, against 15,350 votes for M. Saunac, the Government candidate. General Fleury has proceeded to Copenhagen to congratulate King Christian on his accession to the throne. The frigate Panama, with Marshal Forey on board, has arrived at St. Nazaire. A charade was performed a few days ago at Compiègne on the word "Courage." The syllable cour was represented by a Sultan, personified by M. Aguado, surrounded by a number of charming women. The next syllable, age, was shown by four ladies dressed to represent the four divisions of life. The whole word was set forth in the tableau of Judith holding in her hand the head of Holofernes, the female figure being dressed in a robe of wondrous richness—gold brocade covered with diamonds.

SPAIN.—An amendment to the Address has been brought forward in the Chamber of Deputies, to the effect that the Government should support the Congress proposition and the temporal power of the Pope. Representatives from all the political journals of Madrid held a meeting on Monday night at the house of Senor Rivero, and agreed to publish on the following day at the head of all the newspapers the following declaration:—

"The President of the Congress having adopted measures derogatory to the dignity of the representatives of the press, in the gallery set apart for them in that legislative body, the managers of the political journals of Madrid, accompanied by one of their editors, held a meeting last night, at which they resolved:—1. Not to present themselves in the gallery set apart for them in the Congress while the said measures remain unrevoked. 2. Not to publish any report or summary of the sittings, nor to express an opinion in any shape concerning the same. 3. To reproduce nothing in their columns except the official abstract of the sitting published by the Gazette.—Madrid, Dec. 9, 1863. Signed by the representatives of the Diario, Espanol, Clamor Publico, Espana, Epoca, Esperanza, Correspondencia, Novedades, Iberia, Discusion, America, Pueblo, Reino, Regeneracion, Contemporaneo, Eco del Pais, Politica, Bien Publico, Espiritu Publico, Razon Espanola, Libertad, Verdad, and Tribuna Espanola.

The Spanish Government is adopting active measures to arrest a band of armed and masked robbers who have appeared in the province of Old Castille. From their general bearing they are supposed to have originally belonged to a better class of society.

SWITZERLAND.—The Chambers have nominated M. Dubs as President of the Federal Council for 1864, M. Schenk as Vice-President, and MM. Fornerod, Knusel, Frey, Goeff, and Pioda as members.

SWEDEN.—The Faedrelandet contains a despatch, dated Stockholm, December 15, stating that 22,000 Swedes were moving to the aid of Denmark, accompanied by the King in person. The same paper publishes a telegram, dated Stockholm, December 16, stating that the King had taken a decided resolution with regard to Schleswig-Holstein, and that it is beyond doubt that Notes were despatched to the Great Powers on the previous day informing them of his intentions. Great activity prevails in the Swedish military establishments. The semi-official journals state that Sweden cannot and will not abandon Denmark while in danger.

DENMARK.—Lord Wodehouse arrived at Copenhagen on Tuesday and immediately had an audience of the President of the Council of Ministers. His lordship was received by the King on Wednesday. On Thursday the King received General Fleury, who had arrived on a special mission from France. The Danish representative at the Federal Diet has received orders to quit Frankfort as soon as the Federal troops enter Holstein. It is asserted in well-informed circles that the Danish Government has resolved not to make any opposition to Federal execution, and that a friendly understanding will probably be arrived at with the great German Powers. La France also says that a Cabinet Council was held on the 9th inst. at Copenhagen, at which it was determined that, in order to avoid a conflict, the Danish troops would evacuate the towns in Holstein which the German troops intend occupying. Advices received at Brussels from Copenhagen state as a current rumour that the majority in the Rigsraad intended to propose that the execution of the Constitution of November 18 be suspended until further orders. The Dagbladet and Flyvepost announce that the negotiations for the treaty of alliance with Sweden have been resumed. It is stated, upon what is said to be reliable authority, that the treaty will be sanctioned. Two Danish screw corvettes are cruising off the roads of Swinemunde, three quarters of a mile from the harbour.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—The Danish Government has been officially informed that Federal Execution in Holstein will be carried out on Tuesday next. It is asserted on good authority that on the 20th and 21st inst. a corps of 6000 Saxon troops, and some Hanoverian Hussar regiments, will enter Holstein on the right bank of the Elbe. 5000 Prussians will at the same time be stationed in Lubeck, and 5000 Austrians in Hamburg. About 6000 Hanoverian troops, composing the first corps of reserve, in case of resistance on the part of the Danes, will remain upon the left (Hanoverian) bank of the Elbe. The second reserve, consisting of 20,000 Austrians and Prussians, will for the present remain at home. A proclamation has been published signed "Frederick, Duke of Schleswig-Holstein," thanking the Schleswig-Holsteiners for the fidelity they have exhibited. It says:—

"Legitimate right and ancient charters of the country are united in my person with national claims and the demands of humanity. Supported by the friendly assistance of the Confederation, I hope to be able speedily to commence the new organisation of the Schleswig-Holstein army. When peace is restored, Schleswig-Holstein will be a pledge to Europe of the maintenance of peace and order in Germany."

The semi-official Nord Deutsche Zeitung says, in reference to this proclamation, that it is not to be supposed that the Federal Diet will permit such a de facto interference, which would prejudice the settlement of the legal question. Meanwhile the youth of Altona are numerously enlisting in the volunteer army for Prince Frederick, and it is expected that after the entry of the latter with the Federal army into Holstein the Secession party will proclaim him the legitimate Prince of Schleswig-Holstein. Numerous addresses have been received from Lauenburg, signed by the Mayor in the name of the inhabitants, declaring that there scarcely exists a country where the inhabitants live better than in Lauenburg, under the Danish rule, and that they do not wish to be withdrawn from beneath the King's sceptre.

BAVARIA.—The official Gazette of Tuesday publishes an article explaining that the Bavarian Government takes the same view of the Schleswig-Holstein question as the Federal Diet. The succession question has been brought before the Diet, and its treatment by that body must speedily attain the desired end. By present recognition of Duke Frederick the Bavarian Government would anticipate the resolution of the Diet, and if it proceeded to a one-sided and independent execution of its opinion would violate its Federal duties. The Government, however, will not permit itself to be persuaded into this course, nor would the matter in question be thereby advanced.

SAXONY.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies at Dresden on Friday, the Vice-President and 43 members brought forward a resolution to the following effect:—

"That the Chamber expresses its deep regret and just indignation at the recent resolution of the Federal Diet; that it approves the attitude of the Saxon Government, and prays it to use every means in its power that the measures already resolved upon may be developed into a complete occupation of Schleswig as well as Holstein; also that the non-recognition of the title of the Danish King to the Duchies be proclaimed, and the recognition of the lawful Prince in the male line as Duke of Schleswig and Holstein be no longer delayed."

This resolution, after an animated debate, was unanimously adopted on Tuesday. Baron von Beust, without entering more fully upon the bearing of the motion, declared that the Government would adhere to its view of the question, notwithstanding the Federal resolution.

FRANKFORT.—In the sitting of the Diet on Monday 17,000,000 thalers were voted for the expenses of Federal Execution in Holstein, and instructions were given to the Civil Commissioners, who are to assume the provisional government in that duchy in the name of the Federal Diet. The King of Hanover has appointed Privy Council Nielssen as his Civil Commissioner. The four German Powers deputed to carry out Federal execution have since sent a summons to the Danish Cabinet to evacuate Holstein within seven days.

PRUSSIA.—In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Saturday the motion of Herr Lyskarski for the release from custody of the three Polish members accused of high treason was discussed. The amendment of Herr Kratz that the motion be referred to the Judicial Committee for further investigation and a more complete report on the subject was agreed to by 147 against 133 votes. On Monday both the Liberal fractions of the Chamber resolved to vote an address to the King stating their motives for refusing the Bill for the loan of 12,000,000 thalers asked by the Government. In the sitting of Tuesday the draught of an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne was submitted to the House by the committee. The following is an abstract:—

"The Address, taking as a basis the resolution of the House of the 2d inst., reminds the King that the Prussian army had pledged its honour in the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein. The influence the Convention of Olmütz exercised upon the interior affairs of Prussia and upon Germany's position as a great Power could only be effaced by the liberation of the Duchies. We must fear, it says, from the system pursued by the Ministry, that in its hands the means demanded would not be applied in the interest of the Duchies and Germany, nor for the benefit of the Crown or the country. The rights of the Duchies and the hereditary rights of the Augustenburg family are one. We solicit your Majesty to withdraw from the London Protocol of 1852, and to recognise the hereditary Prince of Augustenburg as Duke of Schleswig-Holstein. We request your Majesty further to use your endeavours that the Diet may render him effectual assistance in taking possession of and in liberating his hereditary lands."

Privy Councillor Abeken, representing Count von Bismark, thought it necessary to repeat the declarations made by the Minister in reference to the question of Schleswig-Holstein at the previous sitting of the committee. He stated that the foremost object of the Government was to fulfil its Federal duties, in accordance with the resolution of the Federal Diet for carrying out execution in Holstein. 30,000 men were requisite for that purpose. The Government had, secondly, to take measures against further complications of the question, especially a possible attack by the Danes upon the Federal army corps, or Prussia withdrawing from the London Protocol. The Government was obliged to prepare for all the possible eventualities arising out of international right and policy. The final discussion was appointed to take place yesterday (Friday). Lord Wodehouse passed through Berlin on Saturday on his way to Copenhagen, and after having a conference with Count von Bismark had an audience of the King.

AUSTRIA.—It is said that the Austrian Government despatched a note to Paris a few days ago, definitively declining the invitation to a Congress, after expressing its regret at having to refuse, since a Congress at which England is not represented will necessarily lead to no result; it considers the programme to be undefined and insufficient, and says that the questions stated by M. Drouyn de Lhuys to be discussed have already found a solution or cannot be solved at the Congress. At the last Ministerial Council, at which the Emperor presided, Count Rechberg is said to have pointed out the want of a real representative of the Ministry at the Reichsrath, since Archduke Rainier could not appear as responsible Minister before that body. The necessity of bringing about a final solution of the Hungarian question was likewise dwelt upon. It is stated on good authority that a Ministerial crisis has taken place, Herr von Schmerling having declared that he could not remain in office with his present colleagues, who did not support him on the religious question now pending at Rome. The crisis however has ended for the present, and Herr von Schmerling will remain in the Ministry. It is said that Federal execution in the Elbe Duchies will pass into occupation if Denmark opposes execution. The latter case is thought to be probable. Should it occur, Austria will then consider herself released from the obligations of the London Protocol. In the event of war actually breaking out, the Austrian fleet would co-operate with the forces of the Confederation.

POLAND.—It is believed that the state of siege in Poland will be shortly abolished. Piotrowski, Jaskold, and Chomski were hung, by order of General Mouravieff, on the 4th inst., at Souwalki, the capital of the palatinate of Augustowo, in the kingdom of Poland. The son of Count Andreas Zamoyski has been sentenced to death by a court-martial at Warsaw. The Government has issued an order closing the business establishments of M. Schlenker, provost of the Warsaw merchants, of Messrs. Kwiertkouski, Nowolecki, Lublinski, and Salingier, the proprietors of which are absent, and are compromised in the insurrection. Chadanouski had been hung in Warsaw. He was accused of complicity in the attack upon Hermani. General Berg has imposed upon the clergy, hospitals, and Catholic schools a contribution of 12 per cent. on their revenue, by reason of their not having aided the Russians in the work of pacification. An order of the Government was published on Thursday, ordering all the landed proprietors, farmers, and stewards of estates to leave Warsaw within seven days, under a fine of 25 roubles for every day they may delay their departure. It is also decreed that no persons are allowed to leave their usual residences without permission of the military commander. Loyal subjects only are allowed to travel. Bosak has been again successful in engagements near Szwekocuny and Raszkow. A detachment of his cavalry engaged the Russians on the 12th at Dzialoszyce. The result has not yet transpired. Another success has been gained over the Russians by the insurgent chief Rembaylo near Stobnica. An engagement took place on the 14th inst. at Michalowice, in the palatinate of Cracow, in which the Russians were beaten by the insurgents, who also seized the Custom House chest. The Austrian troops prevented the Russians from retreating into Galician territory. The insurgents have also obtained a success at Lukow.

ITALY.—In consequence of the result of the late debate on Sicily, several Opposition members have held a meeting to determine whether the members composing it should tender their resignations as members of Parliament. The opposite view, however, prevailed, only four deputies, it is stated, voting for resignation. The debate on the Budget for 1864 commenced on Saturday in the Chamber of Deputies. The Minister in his financial statement summarised the Budgets of 1861, 1862, and 1863. The deficit on these three years was to have been covered by the loan of 500,000,000 lire and an issue of Treasury bonds. 200,000,000 lire of this loan remains, however, undisposed of, and with this sum and the proceeds of some fresh taxes, for which Bills will be brought forward, the Minister proposes to meet the deficit for 1864. To cover the deficit of 1865 and the following years the Minister calculates upon the sale of the Crown lands. He concluded by pointing out the economy realised in the public expenditure, and the constant augmentation of public wealth. In the sitting of Wednesday the items of the budget containing the ordinary and extraordinary public receipts, were agreed to; and on Thursday the whole Budget was passed by 177 to 49. The Pope, on Sunday, without any previous announcement to King Victor Emmanuel, and contrary to the wish of the Italian Government, nominated Cardinal Gusdi Archbishop of Bologna, and Monsignori Clementi, Vitteleschi, Cardoni, and Micaleff Bishops of Rimini, Osimo, Recanati, and Castello respectively, all these sees being in the former Pontifical provinces now forming part of the Italian Kingdom. A detachment of French troops quartered at Ceprano has attacked a band of 13 brigands near Salvatierra. The brigands were arrested, and persons for whom ransom had been demanded were released. The brigand leader Caruso was shot on Friday at Benevento. Advices from Venice state that a warlike proclamation of the National Committee inviting the people to prepare for action has produced agitation and excited lively hopes. A memorandum of Garibaldi to the Powers in favour of nationalities has also been published.

GREECE.—The Greek National Assembly has postponed all discussion concerning the Ionian Islands to an undefined period. A deputation from the Ionian Parliament, charged with bringing about an understanding on the subject of union, is shortly expected to arrive in Athens. Insecurity in Athens and the provinces is increasing.

TURKEY.—The reply of the Sultan to the Emperor Napoleon's invitation to a Congress has been despatched to Paris. The Sultan states that he will attend the Congress provided the integrity of Turkey remain unendangered.

THE CAUCASUS.—Accounts from the Caucasus state that the Russians had made two grand attacks upon the Circassian mountaineers, in both of which they suffered disastrous checks. The immigration of the Circassians into Turkey is on the increase.

EGYPT.—The Moniteur of Wednesday publishes a despatch from Suez, dated the 15th inst., stating that the fresh-water canal is completed. The water was at three kilometres' distance from Suez. The inhabitants of the town had offered their congratulations to M. de Lesseps, inviting him to be present in Suez on the day of the inauguration. The Nation says that the Viceroy desiring an equitable solution of the Canal affair, and wishing to remove all suspicion of anti-French influence, is likely to request the Emperor Napoleon to constitute himself arbiter of the pending differences, promising to abide by his decision. The Emperor Theodore of Abyssinia had gained a victory over the people of Gojam, the chiefs of which were hostile to him. After the battle the Emperor is said to have ordered the massacre of 15,000 prisoners, men, women, and children. He is also said to have placed the English consul at Massona under arrest, while he set at liberty M. Dejean, the representative of France.

INDIA.—Lord Elgin died at Dhurumsalla at 2 A.M. on the 20th of November, and was buried privately on the following day, in accordance with his own express desire. Sir Hugh Rose, from Lahore, has informed Sir Bartle Frere that on the 20th November the tribes again attacked General Chamberlain with much determination, but were defeated. Lieutenants Sanderson and Peel, of the 101st Regiment, were killed, five officers wounded, including General Chamberlain and Colonel Hope; and 128 men, British and native, were killed and wounded. The loss of the tribes is much greater. Since this defeat the tribes have not attacked, and show symptoms of disunion and discouragement. General Chamberlain says he does not require reinforcements, he only wishes the regiments which have suffered much to be relieved, and speaks confidently of final success. He has upwards of 5000 selected troops, intrenched in a commanding position, and defended by 13 guns, four officers of Engineers, and two companies of Sappers and Miners. The troops are hard-worked but their health is good. They are well-provisioned, and have plenty of ammunition. General Chamberlain has resigned the command on account of his wound and ill-health; Major-General Garvock is appointed to succeed him. The Confederate cruiser Alabama has gone to the eastward, and has already signalised her arrival in Indian waters by the destruction of two large American merchantmen, the Amanda and the Winged Racer off Java Head.

China.—Genera Gordon has not only defeated the rebels in the field, but has gained a diplomatic success of much greater importance, having induced Burgevine and other foreigners in the rebel service to withdraw. General Brown has returned from Pekin, but the results of his interview with Sir F. Bruce have not transpired. The Dutch have concluded a treaty with China. Shing-pao, the General in command of the division of the Chinese army by which Bowlby, Brabazon, and De Norman were captured, and by whose orders they were beheaded, has been ordered by the Emperor to commit suicide for treason.

Japan.—Letters received in Paris from Japan to the 15th October state that, at an extraordinary meeting of Daimios, it was decided by 65 against 47 votes that there was no ground for declaring war against foreigners. The Japan Commercial News publishes a despatch from Kanagawa of October 10, stating that authentic information had just been received of the bombardment and capture of the Imperial city of Osaca (and it was said of Kioto also) by the Daimios. The loss to the Tycoon's party was considerable, including the two governors of the city and several commanding officers. The Daimios were said to be advancing an army of 50,000 men for the capture of Yokohama. The Tycoon's Government proposed to erect at once three forts or batteries at Yokohama, for the protection of the settlement. Her Majesty's steamer Racehorse was to leave on the next day for Nagasaki, and the Algerine for Shanghai, at the same time. There is reason to believe that these statements are without foundation. The Swiss Embassy in Japan has found it impossible to enter into diplomatic relations with the Government at Yeddo, and will return to Switzerland at the beginning of next year.

New Zealand.—An affair took place on September 8 at a pah built on Camerontown, on the Waikato, manned by Maori refugees, allies of the Queen, and used as a store for the provisions before being brought up the river in canoes. A party of Te Wheoro's people, who had gone down the river from Maungatawhiri in their canoes to bring up stores for the camp, attempted to land. An ambush had been prepared for them, and they were fired at as soon as they came within gunshot. The assault was deadly, and only four of the friendly natives are known to have escaped. Sixteen were killed, as was also Mr. Armitage, resident native police magistrate. The rebels carried off 40 tons of commissariat stores. News of the disaster was at once conveyed to the military stationed at Tuakau, and, in the hope of intercepting the enemy, Captain Swift, with Lieutenant Butler and a party of 50 men of the 65th regiment, started to meet them. As they were advancing through the bush they heard the sound of men's voices speaking the native language. Upon this, with a knowledge that the enemy consisted of about 200 men of the Ngatimaniapoto tribe, Captain Swift deemed it advisable to throw his men into ambush. This was done, but, after waiting some time, as the enemy did not approach, the order was given to fix bayonets and proceed along the track into the open, when suddenly a volley was fired into them, and Captain Swift fell, being hit below the heart. Almost immediately afterwards Lieutenant Butler fell also, and was instantly surrounded by the enemy, two of whom he levelled with his revolver. The command now devolved upon Sergeant M'Kenna, who led the men on to the charge, assisted by Sergeants Bracegirdle and Meara; the Maories now showed themselves on a hill, but were repulsed three times. It being by this time dark our men retired into the bush, two staying to guard the body of Captain Swift, which they afterwards hid in the bush. The casualties in this affair on our side were 3 killed and 3 wounded. About 10 days subsequently about 1000 natives appeared at New Plymouth. The garrison, a party of the 57th under Colonel Warre, fearing an attack upon the town, went towards the Bell Block, where the enemy were attacked and repulsed. On the south side of the town, at Omata, where Lieutenant Mills, of the 57th, was stationed, there was another fight. As he only intended to lay an ambush his force was small, and he was set upon by the Maories, who poured in in great numbers. He retired with spoil, and being reinforced by 80 men of the 57th, under Major Butler, Colonel Warre and his staff following, there was a short encounter; but as the Maories were in great force, and the Queen's troops numbered only 320 men, they withdrew from the Bell Block, the Maories not renewing the attack. The rebel loss is supposed to be heavy. The casualties on our side were nine wounded, including Ensign Powys, two non-commissioned officers and six privates, all of the 57th Regiment. Fears were entertained of a night attack on the town. The latest news says that General Cameron had received succours from all the Australian colonies, and was completing his final arrangements for an attack on Meremere, where the Maories had assembled. Another sloop of war, the Esk, had been added to the force already upon the New Zealand station.

Australia.—Opposition to the revival of transportation by the home Government continues as strong as ever in Australia. On the 29th September there was a unanimous meeting of the most influential citizens of Melbourne, when resolutions condemnatory of the commissioners' report and a firm but respectful remonstrance to her Majesty were unanimously adopted. The proposer of the first resolution was Sir W. Stawell, Chief Justice of the colony. The Anti-Transportation League, originally formed 12 years ago, was formally re-organised, and an anti-convict manifesto prepared, copies of which have been despatched to England by the present mail. The petition was subsequently presented to the Governor for transmission to her Majesty. Similar demonstrations have since taken place, not only on all the principal goldfields, but in almost every town and village throughout the country, resulting in the establishment of branch Anti-Convict Leagues. At many of these meetings proposals were made for chartering ships, and sending back to England all of her convicts who might find their way into the colony.

United States.—Accounts from New York to the 2d inst., state that General Grant has abandoned the further prosecution of the campaign against General Bragg for this winter, and that Bragg, after having been reinforced by General Joe Johnston, has been superseded by Hardee, who is preparing to assume the offensive. The previous reports of the disastrous nature of Bragg's retreat were somewhat exaggerated. Bragg's main army is beyond Dalton, and Bragg himself is in force at Tunnell Hill. Generals Hooker and Palmer, who pursued Bragg as far as Ringold, have evacuated that town after burning everything and destroying the railroad from Chicamauga to Ringold. Hooker, however, previous to evacuating Ringold, had to fight a battle in which two Ohio regiments suffered severely, and it is rumoured that Breckenridge was killed. No Confederates were found 23 miles southward from Chattanooga. The publication of Grant's movements has been forbidden. Southern accounts of the battle on Lookout Mountain say:—

"The loss of the enemy was comparatively greater than ours. They drove us back by force of numbers. The enemy charged 40,000 strong. Our left centre gave way, and the troops retreated in disorder. After repeated charges we evacuated Mission Ridge. Washington's and Cobb's batteries lost all their guns."

It was reported that Longstreet left Knoxville on the 26th ult., to join Bragg by a circuitous route, but this is contradicted by the statement that he was still besieging Knoxville on the 29th. On the 25th he made a diversion on the Federal position on the south side of the river, and was repulsed. A Michigan regiment captured a Confederate rifle-pit, but was forced back with heavy loss. On the 29th he assaulted Fort Saunders at Knoxville, and was again repulsed with considerable loss. All was quiet at Knoxville on the 30th. Longstreet had been reinforced by two divisions under Bushrod and Johnson. Foster had reached Cumberland Gap, and has had an engagement with Longstreet's cavalry. The former, in attempting to cross the Clinch River, were repulsed with the loss of 50 men, but captured four guns. A Federal force under Grainger has also been detached to assist Burnside. Cumberland Gap despatches state that a force had been sent to intercept Longstreet's retreat into Virginia, but there is no evidence that he has left Knoxville. A courier is said to have brought intelligence to Cumberland Gap that Longstreet had attempted to cross the river, which brought on a general engagement, resulting in a Confederate defeat, and the capture of 5000 cavalry under Wheeler, but this report is known to be untrue. It has likewise been rumoured that General Longstreet has captured Burnside's army at Knoxville, but nothing authentic to that effect has been received. From the Rapidan we learn that General Meade after crossing the Rapidan, formed his line of battle north and south, his right resting on the Rapidan facing Orange Court House. Heavy skirmishing occurred along the whole line. French's corps engaged Ewell's corps, the Federals losing heavily, but holding their position and capturing a large number of prisoners. Kilpatrick's cavalry were also repulsed. During the day Lee retired a short distance. On the 29th both armies were confronting each other, and a battle was considered imminent. On the 30th Meade reached Mine Run, where Lee was found strongly posted in his front. The armies were separated by Mine Run Valley, which crosses the Fredericksburg and Orange Plank Road, 12 miles from Orange Court House. Artillery firing commenced on the same day. The Federal infantry were prepared to assault Lee's position, but General Warren advanced and found him too strongly posted. The assault was consequently delayed. Meade has since fallen back to Fredericksburg and closed his campaign, finding Lee's position too strong for assault. One division of Meade's army now occupies Fredericksburg, and the others have crossed to the north of the Rapidan. It is supposed that Meade will go into winter quarters near Washington. The Confederates have since made a reconnaissance across the Rapidan, but have been driven back. The Washington Star, an official organ, declares that Meade's campaign was a military failure, and it is rumoured that General Sedgwick will supersede him. Despatches have been received from Charleston to the 1st. General Gilmore is throwing 20 shells daily into Charleston. The shelling of Fort Sumter has been discontinued. General Banks announces the occupation of Brownsville, and says that three revolutions have occurred in Matamoras. The first was adverse to the interests of Mexico and the United States. Everything, however, is now as favourable as could be desired. A Boston journal reports from Texas that five French steamers arrived on the 5th off Brazos to watch Banks's operations. Seven thousand hogsheads of French tobacco stowed in Richmond since the commencement of the war, will shortly be shipped to France. President Lincoln is suffering from a serious attack of small-pox. He is however hard at work on his Message when well enough. The greater portion is in type. The following accounts are given of its contents:—

The New York Times says that, on the reunion question, it will be brief and of a very conservative tendency. The President declares that the country has not yet arrived at that point in the progress of the war when so great a question can be clearly discussed. The Message will be shorter than the preceding ones. The Herald says it is well understood that the President's Message will be of an intensely radical character, so much so as to settle the question of a Republican nomination for the presidency. The President regards the slavery question as practically closed, and that legislation should treat it as a thing passing away for ever. He will urge the present as the time to make a final disposition of the political curse upon the nation, while the war shall be prosecuted for the preservation of the national life and the integrity of the Union.

The Congress was to assemble on the 7th, and it was expected that the House would be organised, and, together with the Senate, be ready on the 8th for the reception of the President's Message. The Conservative Union National Committee, at a meeting held in Cincinnati, has nominated General M'Clellan for the next presidency. Senator Toombs has delivered an address to the Georgia Legislature on the Southern situation. He said there was cause for great anxiety, but none for despondency. He denounced the course the Government took in carrying out the conscription and obtaining supplies. The Russian fleet has arrived below Washington. A large meeting has been held at New York to raise volunteers. The Confederate guerilla General Morgan and six of his officers have escaped from prison in Ohio. They dug through the floor of their cell, which was constructed of masonry 9 inches in thickness, into an air chamber running beneath the building, and which communicated with the outside wall. One thousand dollars reward has been offered by the authorities of Columbus for the return to custody of General Morgan, alive or dead. The report that he has arrived at Toronto is contradicted. The anniversary of Polish independence was enthusiastically celebrated at the Cooper Institute. General Sigel sent a letter denouncing the extravagant courtesies bestowed upon visitors from a despotic and half-barbarous power, by men calling themselves Republicans. Richard O'Gorman was the principal speaker. He declared that Poland and Ireland were both equally oppressed. Another Irish speaker presented to the meeting a black flag symbolical of Irish independence and liberty or death. Mr. Gunther, an Independent peace Democrat, has been elected Mayor of New York by a large majority, defeating the Tammany and Mozart Hall and Republican candidates. 13 steamers ran the Wilmington blockade on the 19th ult.

Mexico.—Advices from Vera Cruz of the 26th of October report that a rumour was prevalent in that city that the Mexicans had recaptured Puebla. No particulars had been received.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

LAUNCH OF THE IRON-CLAD MINOTAUR.—The launch of her Majesty's iron-clad frigate Minotaur took place on Saturday afternoon from the yard of the Thames Iron Works, Blackwall, in the presence of the Lords of the Admiralty and about 10,000 spectators, with complete success and without an accident of any kind. The dimensions of the Minotaur exceed those of any other ship afloat, being nearly 700 tons larger than the Warrior, and unlike that ship she is protected with armour plates from stem to stern. When the Agincourt is launched from the yard of Messrs. Laird at Birkenhead and the Northumberland from the yard of the Millwall Company there will be three ships of the same class. All three were ordered at the same time by the Admiralty in Sept. 1861, and should, according to contract, have been launched six or seven months ago; but many changes, not at first contemplated, have been introduced into all of them. The tonnage of the Minotaur is 6812, and when finished and equipped for sea the aggregate weight of ship and stores will be no less than 10,000 tons.

EXPERIMENTS AT SHOEBURYNESS.—On Friday the first long-range target trial that has yet taken place in this country was made with the Warrior target, but the Lords of the Admiralty, trusting to each other for the ordering of the usual official train, which was therefore not ordered at all, were debarred from witnessing the trial. The effective practice was restricted to that with Sir W. Armstrong's 600-pounder, charged with 70 lb. of powder, and throwing a steel shell of 610 lb., within which was a bursting charge of 24 lb. The Warrior target, at a distance of 1000 yards, was practically destroyed by a single shell. No accident occurred, and, for the first time since the commencement of the target trials, the visitors stood perfectly exposed within a few yards of the 600-pounder witnessing the flight of the shot and shell.

WILFUL DAMAGE OF A PICTURE AT THE NATIONAL GALLERY.—On Thursday a man called Walter Stephenson was charged at the Marlborough Street Police Court with wilfully damaging one of Turner's pictures in the National Gallery. The picture—"Regulus leaving Rome"—was cut with a knife in eight places, but the injuries, it appears, can be repaired. The prisoner, who was described as an author, acknowledged the damage, but said that he was in a state of excitement at the time. The magistrate committed him for trial.

LANCASHIRE RELIEF FUND.—At the meeting of the Mansion House Committee on Friday the report stated that the amount received up to the previous evening was 518,745*l*. 15*s*., added to which was 1874*l*. 11*s*. interest on money invested at call with the bankers, making a total of 520,620*l*. 6*s*. Of this sum 456,795*l*. 12*s*. had been remitted to Lancashire and Cheshire; 10,000*l*. had been set apart for purposes of emigration, of which a considerable balance lies at interest; 59,716*l*. 5*s*. had been deposited at Smith, Payne, & Smiths, at interest; 90*l*. odd at other bankers; and 4004*l*. 16*s*. had been expended in disbursements. The subscriptions received during the fortnight amounted to nearly 8000*l*., the greater part of which had come from India. The committee made grants amounting to 2810*l*., and then adjourned to the 8th January.

THE GREAT EASTERN.—A project was originated last week by the Liverpool creditors of the Great Ship Company for disposing of their ship by way of lottery, and this suggestion was reserved for consideration of the shareholders, and also to determine on its legality. The proposition was to raise 200,000*l*. in 1*l*. shares, &c., subject to be divided into 200 shares. A meeting of the Liverpool creditors was again held on Monday to consider the subject, and it was intimated that the project might be carried out, if on the continent. It was also suggested that the sum should be 250,000*l*. instead of 200,000*l*. On Thursday at the Chambers of the Master of the Rolls, Mr. Hawes, the late chairman of the shareholders' committee, was appointed the official liquidator under the Winding-up Act.

THE FALL OF A HOUSE AT ISLINGTON.—The adjourned inquest on the two men who lost their lives by the fall of a house at Islington, was resumed and concluded on Monday, when the jury agreed to a verdict of Accidental Death in both cases, but the majority were of opinion that the accident was caused by the insufficiency of the central piers, which were much too slight for the purpose; and as they were built according to the plan of Mr. Williams the architect, they adopted a resolution declaring their opinion that he deserved the severest censure. The Foreman said that he did not agree to the latter part of the verdict.

THE ST. GILES'S MURDER.—At Taunton Guildhall, on Friday, a man who gave the name of John Markham was charged by the superintendent of police with being the murderer of Emma Jackson in George Street, St. Giles's, on the 19th April last. It will be remembered that the deceased girl went with a man to a house of bad character, and was never seen alive afterwards. She was found in the room next morning quite dead, having been brutally murdered. The man could not be found, and a description of him, with the offer of a reward for his apprehension, was published in the Gazette. He was described as having marks of old wounds on his forehead, and one on his lip, and as having very weak and sore eyes. Similar marks are found on the person of Markham, who also answers the description exactly in every other respect. He gave contradictory accounts of himself, and stated that he had been a "prig" all his life. He was remanded for further inquiry. On Tuesday Sergeant Thompson, of the detective department in Scotland Yard, proceeded to Taunton, accompanied by a person named Stokes, with the view of establishing the identity of the prisoner. While the latter was exercising with several other men in the prison grounds Stokes was introduced, but could not identify any man present as the one he saw in company with Emma Jackson on the day she was murdered. Markham was in consequence at once discharged. He is a deserter, and a convicted coiner and burglar. For some years he has been known as a thief on the tramp between London and Exeter.

MURDER IN THE WATERLOO ROAD.—Another murder was committed on Sunday morning in the Waterloo Road. A bricklayer named Wright has lived for some time in a house on that road, near the bridge, with a young married woman called Green. On Saturday night they were out drinking together, and went home late—the woman being very drunk. They went to their room quietly enough, and nothing was heard of them until 4 o'clock yesterday morning. The landlady and some of the other residents in the house were then alarmed by hearing cries of murder and groans proceeding from the room which Wright and the woman occupied. On going to it the woman was found with her throat cut so dreadfully that death was almost instantaneous. Wright gave himself up as the murderer, and was removed to the station-house in a frantic state. On Monday he was taken before the magistrate at the Southwark Police Court. The evidence was of a very formal description, as the facts of the case lay within a narrow compass, and left no room for doubt. When asked by the magistrate whether he wished to say anything in answer to the charge, he said in a feeble voice, "I have nothing to say." Mr. Barcham told him that as the evidence was all complete, he should at once commit him to Newgate for trial on the charge of wilful murder. The inquest was held on Tuesday, when the evidence given was substantially the same as that before the police magistrate, and the jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against the prisoner. On the same day the grand jury at the Central Criminal Court found a true bill against him, and on Wednesday he was arraigned on the capital charge. He pleaded Guilty, and on being asked by Mr. Justice Blackburn if he thoroughly understood the nature of the plea and its consequences, he answered in the affirmative. Mr. Justice Blackburn, assuming the black cap, said the prisoner had been convicted on his own confession of the crime of wilful murder, and he was bound to say, after reading the depositions, he thought there could be no doubt of his guilt. It therefore only now remained for the prisoner to endeavour, in the short interval which would be allowed him, to make his peace elsewhere, for in this world he could not hold out to him the slightest hope of mercy. The learned Judge then passed sentence of Death in the usual form, and directed it to be carried into effect by the High Sheriff of Surrey. The prisoner, who was scarcely able to stand, was then removed from the dock. Among the members of the bar and the officers of the Court, the speed with which the capital sentence in this case has followed on the heels of the crime was a subject of general remark, the prisoner having been convicted and sentenced before his victim had been buried. Such a concurrence of circumstances in the case of a capital crime is said to be without parallel in the records of the Court.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, December 12, were 1357. The average number in the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1434. The present return is therefore 77 below the average. During the week the births of 1112 boys and 988 girls, in all 2100 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1928.

BRIGHTON.—On Tuesday evening a testimonial was presented by the Exhibitors of the Brighton and Sussex Horticultural and Floricultural Society, to Mr. Edward Spary, in consideration of his exertions as General Superintendent of the Exhibitions from 1853 to 1863 inclusive.

CLAYDON.—Mr. C. Matthews, one of the monks of the "Order of St. Benedict," set on foot by "Brother Ignatius," has been received into the Roman Catholic Church at the Brompton Oratory. Mr. Matthews was known in the Order of St. Benedict as "Brother Patrick."

DARLINGTON.—On Thursday afternoon several thousands of farmers and others were attending the Darlington fat stock show in the new covered market, which is still unfinished, when an iron girder of two arches supporting the floor gave way. Several men and three beasts fell through and were seriously injured. Mr. Robert Robson, farmer, Newtour-Norrell, received a compound fracture of the thigh; Henry Robson, cartwright, Stapleton; George Jackson, butcher, Staindrop; and John Binks, tailor, Stapleton, were severely cut and bruised; and Mr. Abraham Wilson, farmer, Stapleton Back, was less seriously injured.

LYTHAM.—A melancholy boat accident occurred near this town on Tuesday, by which seven young persons lost their lives. The family of Mr. Sugars, a Manchester merchant, consisting of two grown-up sons and three daughters, with two friends, a brother and sister named Wilson, proceeded up the Ribble in a boat to Preston. On their return, and while apparently near home, the boat capsized, and all seven were drowned. The body of only one of the young ladies has yet been found.

MANCHESTER.—At the weekly meeting of the Executive Committee on Monday, the Earl of Derby read a letter he had received from Sir G. Grey, stating that the law officers of the Crown have advised the Public Works Loan Commissioners that, under the Public Works Act, 1863, a local authority can give a valid security by one deed for the first instalment of a loan and for further advances to be subsequently made under the orders of the Poor Law Board. The securities for all loans from this time forward made under the Act will be prepared accordingly; and as the Commissioners find that they have been in error in requiring a separate security for each advance, they will repay to the borrowers all the charges they have received under an erroneous construction of the Act of Parliament and the orders of the Poor Law Board. After a long discussion the following resolution was passed on the motion of Colonel Wilson Patten, M.P., seconded by Lord Egerton, of Tatton:—

"That the Chairman be requested to thank Sir George Grey for his prompt attention to the representations made to him by this committee; to express to him the opinion of the committee that the explanation of the alleged delay on the part of public departments in carrying out the Public Works Act is generally satisfactory; to thank him for what has been done with regard to law charges for second mortgages, and to express a hope that the Government will reconsider the subject of law charges for first mortgages, which, from returns made to this committee, appears to be large on the amount of small loans."

Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported that on the 5th inst. there was an increase of 228 in the number of persons receiving parochial relief in the 27 unions of the cotton districts, as compared with the number relieved in the previous week. The honorary secretary reported that 2267*l*. 11*s*. 7*d*. had been received during the week, and that the balance in the bank was 232,817*l*. 1*s*. 4*d*.

WINDSOR.—Monday last being the second anniversary of the death of the Prince Consort, her Majesty and the members of the Royal family attended a religious service about half-past 10, within the walls of the Royal Mausoleum at Frogmore. In the afternoon the servants of the Queen's and Prince of Wales's households were allowed to visit the Mausoleum by permission of her Majesty, when some hundreds of them with their families availed themselves of the opportunity of inspecting the Prince's tomb. The interior of the Mausoleum, which is octagon in shape and still in an unfinished condition, a portion of the work being boarded, was beautifully decorated with choice exotics, while the recumbent effigy of the Prince Consort beneath a canopy of carved wood, and also the tomb, were ornamented with wreaths of evergreens and immortelles, placed there by the hands of the Queen and the princes and princesses. During the time the Mausoleum was open there was a constant stream of the Royal servants to and from the Frogmore grounds, all wearing mourning, while many of the public, attracted by the scene, applied in vain for admission at the gates of the private road leading from the Long Walk to the Mausoleum. Those servants who had brought friends with them had to leave them behind at the gates, the police having strict orders to admit none but persons employed in the Castle and the domestics of the Royal households.—On Thursday morning about 2 A.M., a fire was discovered at the top of the Brunswick Tower, in Windsor Castle. It was found that the fire was on the outside of the roof, and is supposed to have been caused by the negligence of some plumbers who had been making repairs, and had piled up the shavings and rubbish against the chimney. As there is an excellent supply of water laid on in all parts of the Castle, from the reservoir at Cranbourne, the fire was extinguished by the time the engines arrived, and the damage done was inconsiderable.

ACTION FOR LIBEL AGAINST LORD LEITRIM.—An extraordinary action for libel, in which the Earl of Leitrim was defendant, and Mr. John Studdert, sub-inspector of constabulary, was the plaintiff, was tried last week in the Court of Common Pleas, Dublin. Mr. Studdert sought to recover the sum of 5000*l*. for several libels on his character, written by his lordship to the Lord-Lieutenant and Sir Henry Brownrigg. It appeared that the plaintiff was stationed at Hillsborough, county of Down, in 1860, and, on being removed to Milford, in the county of Donegal, wrote to a friend inquiring about a house. The only house available was one of Lord Leitrim's, out of which the former tenant had been ejected, and the plaintiff felt determined to take it, despite an anonymous letter which he received warning him not to have anything to do with it. On a personal inspection of the house, however, he found it would not suit him, and he declined to enter into occupation. Upon this Lord Leitrim wrote to Sir H. Brownrigg a long letter, which contained the imputation that the plaintiff was a coward, and was afraid to take the house, and that his conduct was discreditable. At a subsequent period his lordship received a letter threatening his life, and signed "Good Shot." This letter his lordship at once enclosed to the Lord Lieutenant, and stated his belief that Mr. Studdert was the writer of it, and seven days after this he inquired from the Lord Lieutenant if it was the intention of Government to bring the plaintiff into a court of law for writing the letter, reiterating his belief that he was the guilty party. The Government informed him that a prosecution would not be instituted, and his lordship demanded the return of the letter, made some remarks about not receiving proper protection, and expressed a hope that Mr. Studdert would be removed to some other county. The defences pleaded were that the letters were privileged communications, and were written without malice. The jury were several times sent back to their room, being unable to agree, but they at last brought in a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 100*l*., with 6*d*. costs.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT: DERBY.—The Wigwell Murder.—George Victor Townley was indicted on Friday for the Wilful Murder of Miss Elizabeth Goodwin at Wigwell Hall, the residence of her grandfather in Derbyshire. The prisoner, who was described as a man of very quiet and refined manners, a good linguist, and an accomplished musician, though in a somewhat lower station of life than Miss Goodwin, had formed her acquaintance at the house of one of her own relatives, and had become desperately attached to her. She returned his love, and they remained engaged, with a short interruption, for nearly four years. The prisoner lived near Manchester, and Miss Goodwin, with her grandfather, Captain Goodwin, at Wigwell Hall. Letters constantly passed between them, many of which have since been destroyed, but they were proved by secondary evidence to have expressed faithful affection on both sides. The prisoner's want of means had always been recognised as an obstacle to the marriage, but in the course of last summer a more formidable impediment arose. A clergyman, whose name was not given, had been staying with Captain Goodwin, and had made proposals to the grand-daughter. He was accepted, and Miss Goodwin, who had already spoken of him to her betrothed as the most delightful man she had ever met, wrote at last, on the 14th of August, to beg that the former engagement might be broken off. She does not appear to have mentioned the true cause, but, on the contrary, attributed it to her grandfather, and assured Townley that she would not marry if she could help it. That letter was stated by the witnesses to have "turned his brain." He had always been reserved, but he now became moody, sleepless, and nervous. He replied, however, to Miss Goodwin in two letters which betray no trace of excitement, but were composed in a very natural tone and with much self-command. In these he pleaded for a last interview, and there was evidence to show that she at first consented, but immediately afterwards wrote to stop his coming, saying what was not the fact, that she was about to leave Wigwell that very day for an indefinite time. The prisoner, however, went the same night to Derby, and on the following day, August 21, took his ticket for Whatstandwell, the nearest station to Wigwell. Thence he walked past the Hall to Wirksworth, and tried to find out from a clergyman who was a friend of the Goodwin family whether his suspicions were true. By the advice of this gentleman he returned to Wigwell, between 5 and 6 o'clock, and asked for Miss Goodwin. The servant showed him in, and he was left alone with her. His manner was then cool and collected, and as one of the servants deposed, "like that of other people." He remained with Miss Goodwin for an hour or so in the garden, and then walked out with her along a high road and down a lane. It is presumed that he then ascertained from Miss Goodwin, for the first time, that he had been deceived and thrown over in favour of another suitor. A labourer saw them in close conversation in the lane about half-past 8, and very shortly afterwards another labourer heard a moaning noise in that direction, ran forward, and met Miss Goodwin with her throat cut in three places, "guiding herself along the wall" towards the Hall. The prisoner was about 70 yards behind, and as the labourer was supporting the lady in his arms, he ran up and assisted him. They carried her between them for some distance, the prisoner confessing that he had stabbed her, and reminding her that she ought not to have proved false to him. At last they had to lay her down, when the prisoner asked for something to stop the bleeding, sent his companion for help, and was found on the return of the latter binding something round her neck. She had still strength to say, "Take me home." As they bore the body, now stiffening in death, to the gate of the Hall, the prisoner bent down and kissed her, while he responded again and again to the questions of the neighbours by saying that he did it and should be hanged for it. On Captain Goodwin asking who was the murderer, he answered in the same way, and added, "She has deceived me, and the woman that deceives me must die. I told her I would kill her." During the whole of this dreadful scene he behaved in a perfectly rational manner, and evinced a thorough consciousness of the consequences of his act, but no regret. He said that he knew he should be hung for it, and he delivered up some letters to the grandfather to be burnt, in order that they might not be produced in court. After these admissions there could be no denial of the crime. The defence set up was therefore that of hereditary insanity. Mr. Macaulay, his counsel, endeavoured to show that at the moment when he committed the deed the prisoner was labouring under a temporary aberration of mind, brought on by the distress of his feelings, and to which he was especially liable from hereditary causes. To prove this his nearest relatives were placed in the witness box. They proved that there had been undoubtedly insanity in the family, but the nearest approach it made to the prisoner was in the person of his grandfather's brother and sister, his great uncle and great aunt. Dr. Forbes Winslow, who was called to support this plea, pronounced the prisoner to be decidedly insane, because he found him asserting the non-necessity of any moral restraint. He found him denying the existence of a God or of a future world, denying that his action was a crime, and denying that man had any right to sit in judgment upon him. He found his moral sense to be more vitiated than that of any other human being within his experience. He therefore argued from this that the prisoner was mad; and stated his opinion that, if he was in the same state of moral blindness when he committed the murder, he was not to be held responsible for his acts. On Saturday morning counsel for the prosecution replied to this evidence, and contended that it would be dangerous to admit the plea of insanity which had been set up. Baron Martin in summing up ruled that, if the prisoner knew that the act he was doing would probably cause death, and that the doing it would subject him to legal punishment, there was criminal responsibility. The jury, after only five minutes' deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty. Baron Martin having put on the black cap, with much emotion passed sentence of Death on the prisoner, holding out no hope of his life being spared.

WESTERN CIRCUIT: TAUNTON.—The Wellon Murder.—Hannah Roberts was indicted for the Wilful Murder of Jeremiah Haines at Wellon on the 22d October. It appeared that the prisoner lived in a cottage at Wellon with her father and brother. On the 22d of October there was a fair in the village, and a quantity of pea-haulms were left about the road. There were several young men, including the deceased and George Coles, drinking at the New Inn publichouse. About 12 o'clock at night these young fellows left the publichouse and went along the road, making a considerable noise and throwing pea-haulms at each other. When they got opposite the cottage in which the prisoner lived she came out of the door into a little front garden and ordered the men to move on. One of them replied, "All right." Another of them threw some pea-haulms at her, which seemed to rouse her anger, but she went into the cottage again three times. The annoyance was continued, and the prisoner came out again in a furious temper, and used very violent language and cried "Murder!" She then had a reaping-hook in her hand. She pursued Cole, and said she would murder him, and struck at him. She then turned round upon Haines, who threw some pea-haulms at her. She appeared as if quite wild and maddened. Haines ran away from her, but stumbled and fell, and the prisoner overtook him and inflicted several wounds upon him with the reaping hook. He immediately called out that he was a dead man. It was shown that the prisoner had two tumours on the spine which incapacitated her from earning her own living and rendered her very irritable. The prisoner was at once apprehended, and was asked if she knew what she had done, and she said, "Yes. I have stabbed Cole and some one else, but I do not believe he is dead." The hook was found in a cupboard behind the door, and she said that was what she had done it with; that she intended to hurt Cole, but not Haines. She had four times within the last 18 months complained to the constable of people annoying her. When she was charged with the murder, she said, "I did it, and with that hook you have in your hand." One of the ears of Haines was severed from the head. There were three wounds which must have been given with great force. For the defence witnesses were called to prove that the prisoner was in service at one time, but was obliged to leave from ill-health. She had two very bad tumours on her back, and suffered much in her head, and seemed overpowered with pain. She was a very kind and affectionate daughter and sister, but was afflicted with a disease which preyed upon her mental and nervous system to such an extent that the slightest annoyance rendered her hardly responsible for any act she might commit. The clergyman of the parish also gave her an excellent character for gentleness and good conduct. Mr. Baron Pigott in summing up said that the question appeared to him to be whether this offence amounted to murder or manslaughter, and his Lordship took great pains to explain to the jury the distinction between the two offences. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty of manslaughter, but recommended her to mercy, as they did not think there was any malice whatever, and that she acted under great provocation. The Judge told the prisoner that the jury had given a very merciful consideration of her case. She had been indicted for murder. Her conduct had been very desperate; she had taken a deadly weapon in the dark, and had used it with great determination, and had sent one man to his awful account. The jury had thought the provocation she had received was very great, and that from the disease of her body and mind she was at the time in a great state of irritation. He must pass a sentence which would teach her to be more careful in future. He then sentenced her to be imprisoned for 12 months with hard labour.

Obituary.

ADMIRAL SIR HENRY WILLIAM BRUCE, K.C.B., died on Monday last, on which day it had been announced that the admiral's good service pension had been awarded to him. He was the only surviving son of the late Rev. Sir Henry H. A. Bruce, Bart., and was born in 1792. He entered the navy in 1803, was midshipman of the Euryalus at Trafalgar, and of the Endymion at the passage of the Dardanelles; lieutenant of the Belvidere, and assisted at the capture, in the boats of that ship and of the Nemesis, of two Danish schooners on the coast of Norway; and was slightly wounded in the action with and retreat from the squadron under Commodore Rodger on the coast of America. He served in the boats of the squadron at the capture of a schooner in Chesapeake Bay, and subsequently of a privateer of 15 guns and 70 men. When in command of the Marley he assisted in the operations in the Patuxent and Patapsco rivers. For some years he was commander-in-chief at Portsmouth, and was nominated a Knight of the Bath in 1861. He obtained his rank of full admiral only a few weeks back.

MR. JOSEPH LUNN died at Brighton last week. He was well known to old playgoers as the author of many successful dramatic pieces in the time of Liston, who played the principal characters in some of these productions, among others, "Fish out of Water," and "Family Jars"—pieces which still keep possession of the stage. Mr. Lunn was also for many years the Secretary of the Society for the Discharge of Prisoners for Small Debts.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Dec. 19.

Owing to the mildness of the weather, all kinds of produce in season continue to be abundant. Pine Apples are well supplied, and prices for them are moderate. Hot-house Grapes are now beginning to get scarce. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Ne Plus Meuris, Glou Morceau, Monsieur le Curé, and Beurré Rance Pears. Good English Apples are getting somewhat scarce. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin and American New Town Pippin Apples may still be obtained. Kent Cobs are good, but in few hands. St. Michael Oranges are realising from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Primroses, Mignonette, and Roses.

HOPS.—Borough Market, Friday, Dec. 18.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report a good demand for all descriptions of Hops, at an advance on last week's quotations. The present supply of new Hops is very limited, and for fine samples will soon be exhausted, and consumers will do well to secure those on hand before the anticipated rise in the market takes place.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Dec. 14.

We have to-day a larger supply of Beasts than was ever known at the London market; and this being the annual "Great Market," a large proportion were of unusual size. Trade is very slow for them, but choice qualities realise fair rates. The number of Sheep is also large for the day, and those of a prize character met with a heavy sale. Saleable qualities are readily disposed of at nearly late quotations. Good Calves are in demand. From Germany and Holland there are 930 Beasts, 5760 Sheep, and 170 Calves; from Spain, 258 Beasts; from Scotland, 1030; from Ireland, 1010; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 850; from the Western Counties, 1020; and 8850 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Beasts, 10,870; Sheep & Lambs, 26,280; Calves, 180; Pigs, 360.

Thursday, Dec. 17.

Considering the unusual supply of Beasts on Monday last, the number to-day is not so large as we expected. The demand is evidently very extensive, or a larger number would have been left over from Monday. The prices to-day are rather on the decline, except for choicest descriptions of medium size. We have a fair supply of Sheep, and trade is nearly the same as on Monday. The weather is very favourable, and consequently a fair clearance is effected. Calves are more plentiful, and on the average rather lower. Our foreign supply consists of 960 Beasts, 2190 Sheep, and 448 Calves. Milch Cows, 120.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Dec. 14.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was moderate, but owing to several runs being left over from last week, the show was tolerably good, the condition generally bad; a few sales of picked samples were made at a reduction of 1s. per qr., but the bulk remained unsold at the close, on which a much greater reduction would have been required to effect a clearance. Business in foreign was very limited, and where sales were effected lower prices were submitted to. Barley, with the exception of selected Malting, was 1s. per qr. cheaper. Beans and Peas were rather lower, and to effect sales in Oats it was necessary to submit to a slight reduction. Flour was neglected.

Friday, Dec. 18

The weather since the 11th inst. has been very fine with occasional night frosts. The Wheat trade has been dull, and a decline in prices of 1s. per qr. has been general in both English and foreign Wheat throughout the kingdom. The state of foreign politics appears however to stimulate speculators, for whom a few purchases have been again effected here. Barley has been written 1s. per qr. lower in value, excepting the finest malting. Oats have barely maintained their former quotations. Beans and Peas are the turn cheaper. Flour is neglected, and in several markets is quoted 6d. to 1s. per sack lower. Since Friday last 13 vessels have been reported off the coast. The floating trade has been extremely quiet. In Barley some transactions have taken place at late rates; for Wheat buyers press for a further decline. Paris, Dec. 17.—The Wheat and Flour trade has been quiet. The prices for Flour declined about 1s. per sack. The six marks for delivery this month are quoted equal to 31s. 6d. per 280 lbs; the present stock is estimated at 5200 cwt. Wheat receded 9d. to 1s. 3d. per 480 lbs. The arrivals of English Wheat and Barley this week have been to a fair extent, of other grain and foreign Oats and Flour small, of foreign Wheat and Barley good. To-day's market was very poorly attended. Dry English Wheat was in request at Monday's prices, other qualities and foreign were neglected; prices for the latter nominally unaltered. Barley was steady at Monday's quotations. Beans and Peas were unaltered in value. Oats were a dull sale and rather cheaper.

Liverpool, December 15.—We have had a very fair attendance of millers and dealers at to-day's market, who showed little disposition to buy, and Wheat must be quoted 1d. to 2d. per cental worse to sell than on Friday last, and Flour 6d. per barrel and sack in the same direction. Indian Corn is offered sparingly, and maintains late rates. Oats are no lower, but Oatmeal is down 6d. per load. Beans 3d. per qr. cheaper. Peas and Barley remain as last quoted. The market ruled dull throughout, and closes so.

Friday, Dec. 18.—Limited attendance at market. Small business in all articles at rather easier rates than on Tuesday last.

BRITISH WOOLS.—London, Dec. 17.

The flatness brought about by the high rate of interest still continues, and except in skin wool there has been scarcely any business transacted, and in this only to a limited extent, and at lower prices, which would not be submitted to in fleece wool on account of its scarcity, in comparison with the stocks usual at this season of the year.

NOTICE.—The usual 15 days allowed for payment of FIRE PREMIUMS falling due at Christmas will expire on 9th January.

FIRE and LIFE ASSURANCES may be effected with this Corporation on advantageous terms.

Insurances against Fire on Merchandise in the Docks and Warehouses in the Port of London are accepted at the late reduced rates of Premium.

FARMING STOCK.—NO EXTRA CHARGE is made for the use of a STEAM THRESHING-MACHINE.

The Reversionary Bonus on British LIFE POLICIES has averaged nearly 2 per cent. per annum on the sum assured.

Equivalent reductions have been made in the Premiums payable by persons who preferred that form of Bonus.

The divisions of Profit take place every five years.

Any sum not exceeding 15,000*l.* may be insured on one Life.

This Corporation affords to the Assured—

Liberal participation in Profits,—with exemption from the liabilities of partnership.

A rate of Bonus equal to the average returns of Mutual Societies,—with the guarantee of a large invested Capital-Stock.

The advantages of modern practice,—with the security of an Office whose resources have been tested by the experience of nearly a CENTURY AND A HALF.

ROBERT P. STEELE, Secretary.

Enlargement of the "Florist."

On and after the 1st of January, 1864,

THE "FLORIST and POMOLOGIST" will be enlarged to TWENTY-FOUR PAGES instead of Sixteen.

Great additions in variety will be made to subjects henceforth to be treated of in its pages, and writers of the first talent in all the various departments of Horticulture have been secured, who will contribute monthly articles which shall be of general interest to our numerous readers. No branch of Horticulture, Floriculture, and Pomology shall be overlooked, and it is intended that the subjects shall be such as to interest every class of the horticultural community. One of the leading features will be the continuation of Dr. Hogg's British Pomology, of which a portion, illustrated with numerous figures of the Fruits, will appear in each Number. The subject shall be the Pear, treated of to its fullest extent—every known variety being described, its merits recorded, and, when practicable, its figure given.

Botany for Beginners, copiously illustrated with first-class Engravings, shall also form one of the most prominent of the new subjects.

Florists' subjects will be handled by a highly-competent authority; and in the other departments of gardening, both in-door and out-door, the services of writers of the greatest experience have been secured, the object being to render the "FLORIST and POMOLOGIST" a Pictorial Monthly Journal of general gardening interest, and the information it contains supplied by the leading horticulturists of the day.

Flowering Succulents.

New Series of

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL.

Commenced in 1832—the first cheap periodical in which an attempt was made to present Original Literature of a high class—CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL has persevered in its plan and design to the present time. It has been the constant aim of its Conductors to Elevate, as well as to Amuse, apart from all sectarian or controversial subjects, and there is good ground for believing that, after an existence longer by many years than that of which any similar periodical can boast, those objects have been to some extent attained. Roundly speaking, TEN THOUSAND ORIGINAL ARTICLES, embracing a prodigious variety of subjects, have appeared; yet the field of observation and discussion seems practically indefinite. By a scrupulous attention to certain unvarying principles of management, the Proprietors have been so fortunate as to procure for their paper a circulation

CO-EXTENSIVE WITH THE PREVALENCE OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Encouraged by the success which has attended their efforts, Messrs. CHAMBERS are leaving no means unemployed to render their JOURNAL more attractive still; and in arranging for the carrying out of certain important changes in

to be commenced in January 1864, they have endeavoured to provide for the tastes of two large sections of their readers—first, those who consider a serial tale the desirable feature of a periodical, and second, those who don't. To cater for the first section, the Proprietors have succeeded in obtaining an interesting Original Story, entitled the first portion of which will appear on January 2, 1864. For the second section, as well as for readers in general, the literary matter will be improved in various ways.

Matters of Current Public Interest will be ably and concisely treated; The Best Books of the Day will be impartially reviewed; Occasional Notes, as in the older volumes of CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL, will be revived; Carefully Selected Poetical Pieces will be added; Miscellaneous Articles of an interesting, as well as instructive nature, will continue to appear; while amongst other Mechanical changes, the principal portions of the Journal will be printed on a LARGER AND MORE READABLE TYPE,

so as to suit the eyesight of the oldest Subscribers.

The Publishers have also to announce that they have prepared, and are now issuing an Extra double New-Year's Day Number, entitled

IN THE BOX.

Consisting of a number of interesting tales, arranged in a method quite original. This double number (the price of which is 3*d.*) is issued distinct from the Journal itself, and may be purchased independently of that periodical. It will, however, be done up in the Monthly Part published at the end of December, the price of the Part—including an Index and Title page to Vol XX., and the New-Year's Extra Number—being One Shilling.

News of the Week.

THE Address of the French Senate in reply to the Speech from the Throne was unanimously adopted on Friday, and was presented to the EMPEROR on Monday by a deputation from that body. HIS MAJESTY, in reply, said that "good" was the moving power of his actions, and that both at home and abroad he desired the appeasing of passions, concord, and union. He directed all his wishes to the moment when the great questions which divided Governments and peoples would be peacefully solved by European arbitrament. He believed, with the first NAPOLEON, that to fight in Europe was civil war, and that this great thought, heretofore Utopian, might to-morrow become a reality. He felt it an honour to proclaim a principle tending to dissipate the prejudices of another age, and asked the Senate to unite with him in efforts to attain that noble end. The report of the committee on the loan was read on Wednesday in the Corps Législatif. The committee declared that in accepting the loan they in no way wished to afford the Government the means of easily entering upon an exaggerated expenditure. France should be able to resist the allurement of glory, and enjoy what she had acquired. With that she might honourably desire the peace which the peoples so greatly needed. If she had peace the state of her finances would ameliorate, and she would be able to employ larger sums upon public works, a fruitful source of the wealth and prosperity of the population. The committee unanimously recommended the rejection of the amendment moved by M. THIERS and other members of the Opposition for reducing the issue of Treasury bonds in 1864 to 100,000,000f., because such a measure would impede the realisation of the loan, but they admitted in principle the necessity of this reduction in the following year. The report was favourably received, and all the passages relating to peace were greatly applauded. The debate took place on Thursday, when the amendment of M. THIERS was negatived, and the Bill for the loan adopted by a majority of 242 to 14.

In the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on Friday the Address of the Liberal party to the KING, stating their motives for refusing the Bill for a loan of 12,000,000 thalers for the purpose of conducting the military operations in Holstein, was carried by a majority of 100, notwithstanding the warning of Count VON BISMARK, that the Chamber was encroaching on the privileges of the Executive.

The Federal execution in Holstein commenced on Thursday. At an early hour on that day a Saxon regiment of infantry, accompanied by the Civil Commissioners appointed to assume the Provisional Government of the Duchy, entered the town of Altona, the Danish troops retiring before them. The people received the German troops with loud acclamations, and German and Schleswig-Holstein flags were displayed from the houses. The Commissioners subsequently issued a proclamation, announcing their assumption of the administration of Holstein and Lauenburg, without prejudice to the rights of the Sovereign, and stating that the succession question has only been reserved, not passed over, in the Federal resolution.

From the United States we learn that the Federal and Confederate Congresses were both opened on the 7th, and that the Messages of the two Presidents were delivered as soon as the Congresses were constituted. The Message of President Lincoln states that all the foreign relations of the Government are friendly, that the crisis which threatened to divide the Union is past, and that it is his determination to adhere strictly to his Emancipation policy so long as he remains in his present position. The message was accompanied by a proclamation suggesting terms for the reconstruction of the Union. It offers an amnesty to persons in rebellion who will take the oath of allegiance to the United States, an oath to support all acts passed by the Federal Congress, and the Emancipation and all other proclamations issued by the PRESIDENT. All persons however who have held high civil and military offices in the Confederate Government are exempted from the amnesty. The message of President DAVIS, while regretting the loss of Vicksburg, Port Hudson, and other reverses, expresses continued confidence in the ultimate success of the Confederate arms, and points out various means of increasing the number and efficiency of the army. He speaks with much bitterness of the unfriendly conduct of foreign nations, and particularly accuses England of marked partiality to the North in her decisions regarding the blockade, and in her difference of conduct in regard to the purchase of supplies by the two belligerents. He says that a prompt and efficacious remedy for the present condition of the currency is necessary, and recommends taxation instead of a further issue of Bonds and Treasury Notes as the best means of raising funds. He concludes by saying that since the Federals have refused the proposals of the only peace possible between them, the only hope of peace is in the vigour of their resistance. From the seat of war we learn that General LONGSTREET has retreated from Knoxville towards Virginia. A report was current at Nashville that his rear-guard had repulsed General SHERMAN, who was pursuing him, with heavy loss, but there was no confirmation of the rumour. Both the armies on the Potomac were preparing to go into winter quarters.

Home News.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.—The Queen, with the junior members of the Royal family and the Princess Hohenlohe, left Windsor on Friday morning for Osborne for the Christmas holidays. On Saturday Prince Alfred and Prince William of Hesse arrived at Osborne from Edinburgh. Lord Stanley of Alderley also arrived, and had an audience of her Majesty. On Sunday morning the Queen, Prince Alfred, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Prince Leopold, and Prince William of Hesse attended divine service at Osborne. The Rev. G. Protheroe officiated. On Monday morning Prince Alfred left Osborne for London, Prince William of Hesse left for Germany. Lord Stanley of Alderley returned to London. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Louisa, walked and drove in the grounds. Princess Helena drove to Ryde. On Tuesday, Prince Alfred returned from London. In the afternoon the Prince and Princess of Wales arrived from Frogmore on a visit to the Queen. The Judge Advocate-General had an audience of the Queen. On Wednesday the Queen walked in the grounds, accompanied by Princess Louisa and Princess Beatrice. The Princess of Wales and Princess Helena drove out. Prince Arthur arrived from Greenwich Park, on a visit to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.—On Thursday week the Prince and Princess visited the Queen. In the evening their Royal Highnesses gave a dinner party at Frogmore, at which the Princesses Helena and Louisa were present. On Friday morning the Prince and Princess drove to the Windsor Station to take leave of the Queen on her departure for Osborne, after which the Prince and Princess returned to Frogmore. The Duchess of Cambridge and the Princess Mary lunched with their Royal Highnesses, and returned to Kew in the afternoon. The Prince afterwards went out pheasant shooting in the preserves of the Home Park. On Sunday afternoon the Prince and Princess attended divine service in St. George's Chapel. The Prince occupied his own stall as Knight of the Garter, and the Princess sat in the Royal stall adjoining. On Tuesday their Royal Highnesses left Frogmore on a visit to the Queen at Osborne, where they will remain about 10 days, and then return to Frogmore.

PARLIAMENTARY MOVEMENTS.—Mr. Coningham is about to retire from the representation of Brighton, and Mr. F. Kuper Dumas has offered himself as his successor in the Liberal interest. The nomination for Bucks takes place on Tuesday, and the polling will take place on Friday. The candidates are Mr. R. B. Harvey and Dr. Lee, of Hartwell, the former in the Conservative, the latter in the Liberal interest.

THE COURT-MARTIAL ON COLONEL CRAWLEY.—The finding of the court-martial, held under the Presidency of General Sir G. Wetherall, K.C.B., for the trial of the charges against Lieut.-Colonel Crawley, was submitted to the Queen on Tuesday, and received her Majesty's approval. The decision is in the following terms:—

"The Court, having duly considered the evidence in behalf of the prosecution, the evidence the prisoner has adduced, and what he has stated in his defence, and the prosecutor's reply, is of opinion, with regard to the first charge, that he, the prisoner, Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas R. Crawley, of the 6th Dragoons, is Not Guilty. With regard to the second charge the Court is of opinion that he, the prisoner, Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas R. Crawley, is Not Guilty. The Court does, therefore, fully and honourably acquit him, Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas R. Crawley, of both the charges preferred against him."

To the finding of the Court were appended some unfavourable comments on the manner in which particular witnesses for the prosecution had given their evidence at Aldershott. These expressions of censure, however, are not given to the public at present, as they will be dealt with by the Commander-in-Chief, and embodied in the remarks of his Royal Highness on the case generally.

Foreign.

FRANCE.—The Emperor received on Monday the deputation of the Senate to present the Address of that body. His Majesty on this occasion, instead of making an oral acknowledgment, as usual, read the following reply:—

"Monsieur le President,—As the organ of the first body of the State, you address me in language which touches me profoundly. I see with pleasure that the most opposite speeches are absorbed in the unanimity of the vote of the Address, and testify the same confidence—and you shall not be disappointed. Good is the sole motive of my actions both at home and abroad. I desire the appeasing of passions with concord and union. I direct all my wishes to the moment when the great questions which divide Governments and peoples will be pacifically solved by European arbitrament. This wish was that of the chief of my family when he cried from St. Helena that 'to fight in Europe is to make civil war.' May not this great idea, Utopian in the past, shortly become a reality? However this may be, it is always honourable to proclaim a principle which tends to remove the prejudices of a former age. Let us unite our efforts for this noble end, and let us only study how to conquer obstacles, and to confound incredulity. Please to be, Monsieur le President, the interpreter of my thanks to the Senate."

This reply was much applauded by the Senators. The following is an abstract of the concluding debate on the Address on Friday:—

M. Bonjean thought it would be rash to go to war for Poland, but maintained that it was the interest of France and of civilisation not to permit the destruction of Polish nationality. M. Dupin, sen., in a speech which was loudly applauded, blamed the excesses of which Poland is the victim. But should France allow herself to be dragged into a war for Poland, as she has done for Mexico? No. Once was quite enough. Notwithstanding the incitements from abroad and from the Opposition press, France would not go to Poland. It would be an adventure against which the Emperor would guard her. If the Emperor's appeal to Europe had not been heard, France must not risk her destinies in a foreign cause. M. Beaumont moved that the passage in the Address relating to England should be suppressed, and maintained that in consideration of her conduct England did not deserve to be named in the Address of the Senate. MM. Hubert Delisle and Casabianca spoke in defence of the paragraph, which was adopted. The Address in its entirety was then unanimously agreed to.

The Moniteur of Tuesday publishes the circular of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, dated the 8th of December, the sense of which agrees with the summary already published. In the Corps Législatif on Wednesday M. Gouin read the report of the committee on the loan, of which the following is an abstract:—

"The committee, in accepting the loan, in no way does so to afford the Government the means of easily entering upon an exaggerated expenditure. We insist, on the contrary, that, in order that the Government may confine itself to the ordinary resources in our Budgets, it shall not incur extraordinary expenses, which would have the most serious consequences in future. Let us be able to resist the allurements of glory, and enjoy what we have acquired. With this we can honourably desire the peace which the peoples so greatly need. Let us have peace, and the state of our finances will improve. We shall then be able to employ larger sums upon public works—a fruitful source of the wealth and prosperity of our population. The report then proceeds to examine several forms of negotiation for the loan, particularly that of public subscription, and also discusses the rate of issue, but leaves the decision on these points to the Government. The committee unanimously propose that an amendment moved by M. Thiers, Jules Favre, and others, reducing the issue of Treasury Bonds in 1864 to 100,000,000f., should be rejected, but they admit in principle the necessity for this reduction, and during the debate on the Budget will propose to limit the issue of Treasury Bonds to 100,000,000f. in 1865. To do so in 1864 would be to impede the realisation of the loan."

The Chamber loudly applauded the pacific passages in this report. The debate commenced on Thursday, when M. Thiers spoke in defence of his amendment. His speech, which was remarkable for its perspicacity and practical character, was applauded by the House. M. Thiers reviewed the financial condition of affairs, and stated that peace was the wish of the world, and that any war would be a fatal mistake. M. Vuitry, who replied to M. Thiers, confined himself to the financial question. M. Picard censured the Mexican expedition. MM. Gueroult and Havin, members of the Opposition, explained their reasons for not voting for the amendment. M. Ollivier stated the policy he himself advocated, which he declared to be of a pacific character.

This speech was greatly cheered by the chamber. After speeches by MM. Gouin, Guillaumin, and Lanjuinais, the Loan Bill was finally adopted by 242 against 14 votes. The Government has already declared that it will reduce the maximum for 1864 to 150,000,000f. In the new election at Perpignan, M. Isaac Pereire has obtained 21,227 votes, and M. Durand 14.861 votes, being a majority of 6366 votes for M. Pereire. The Corps Législatif on Thursday declared the election valid, and the report of the committee censured the proclamation of the Mayor issued at the time of the election. The Pays asserts that the Sultan will visit Paris in the month of April, and will remain a fortnight. Mr. Pope Hennessy, M.P., was one of the guests invited to the dinner party given on Sunday by Prince Napoleon and the Princess Clothilde. The Opinion Nationale is authorised formally to deny the authenticity of a letter, asserted to have been written by Prince Napoleon in reference to a war between Italy and Austria, which La Nation had reproduced from the Vaterland of Vienna. The Constitutionnel of Sunday publishes an article by M Limayrac, observing that the dispute in Germany is becoming complicated and aggravated, without its being, however, necessary to renounce the hope of maintaining peace. France alone, of all the great Powers, is in no way interested in the question. This proves how opportune is the proposal of a Congress, the leading idea of which was peace and civilisation devoid of all ambition. It is said that several offices in the city of London are accepting proposals for an insurance to a large amount on the life of the Empress of the French. The risk is being divided among French and English offices, and the total amount of insurance is 200,000*l*.

SPAIN.—The Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne has been adopted in the Cortes by a majority of 141 to 75. The Spanish papers favourable to the Congress are of opinion that Spain ought to demand the restoration of Gibraltar, and that the Ministry should accede to this national object.

PORTUGAL.—The Government journal affirms that Ministers will bring in a Bill next Session abolishing the tobacco monopoly. The Federal corvette St. Louis has arrived at Lisbon.

BELGIUM.—The Duke of Brabant, by the advice of his physicians, will pass the worst portion of the winter in the environs of Nice. The Duchess of Brabant will remain at Brussels with her children.

SWEDEN.—It is believed that the Government has informed the Powers that the policy of Sweden would not allow her to see the violation of the Eider frontier without taking active measures. A semi-official announcement has been made, stating that the Government has not retraced its steps, and will still maintain its former position. The Stockholm and Gottenburg bankers have subscribed the loan to the Swedish Government of 3,000,000 rix dollars at the Office of the Public Debt.

NORWAY.—An appeal has been issued, signed by 65 of all classes of the most influential citizens of Christiania, summoning the Norwegians to hold a public meeting. The object of the meeting is to vote an address to the King, stating that Sweden and Norway are bound to assist Denmark in defending her frontiers; that Scandinavian interests are endangered, and that the people are ready to bear whatever burdens may be imposed for the purpose.

DENMARK.—The funeral of the late King took place on Friday. The Royal corpse was conveyed to Roeskilde Cathedral, with extraordinary solemnities. Immense numbers of people were present at the ceremony. The Royal coffin was followed by a representative of the King of Sweden, and a numerous deputation of Swedish hussars and Swedish students attended in the procession. The coffin was placed in the Royal vault on Saturday. The Danish Rigsraad was closed on Monday. The Minister-President read the Message from the King, of which the following is a summary:—

"At the time when this Assembly met in 1855 it was hoped that the Constitutional relations of the Monarchy were settled. Such would have been the case had the Federal Diet confined itself to its competency. The Constitution of the 18th of November rested upon the same basis as that of the present Constitution for the whole Monarchy. That Constitution also separated the common affairs of the Monarchy from those appertaining specially to the respective provinces composing it. It conferred no competence upon the Rigsraad to interfere in matters hitherto concerning the provinces alone. We intended to give to the Federal provinces the same freedom and independence, thus rendering their connection with the Monarchy possible. The new Constitution was no obstacle to this end. It would therefore be a misunderstanding on the part of the Powers not to recognise the treaties on that account. A desire to dismember the Danish Monarchy has arisen in Germany. We hope, however, that Europe will, nevertheless, maintain our right to the hereditary succession. We have fulfilled every resolution of the Federal Diet concerning the Federal provinces German troops have occupied Holstein and Lauenburg, although the latter has recently testified its satisfaction and loyalty to Denmark. Although we do not recognise the execution on the part of the German Confederation as justifiable, we withdraw our troops to this side of the Eider in order to avoid a collision."

The Faedrelandet declares that the pressure of England and Russia upon Denmark has commenced, but that Sweden has not joined them. General Fleury telegraphed for instructions from the French Government whether he should act in concert with England and Russia, and in reply received an order to leave immediately. He accordingly left Copenhagen on Sunday for Berlin and Paris.

THE DANISH DUCHIES.—The Federal Execution in Holstein was carried out on Thursday morning. At 8 A.M. the Saxon regiment of Kronprinz infantry entered Altona. The Danes did not leave the town until the Federal troops appeared. As soon as the Danes had passed out of one street it was instantly decorated by the people with the German and Schleswig-Holstein flags. amid great acclamations. The Federal Civil Commissioners alighted at the Town-hall, from the balcony of which was suspended a large German flag. A proclamation of the Civil Commissioners was affixed at the corners of all the streets, with placards of "Long live Duke Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein!" This proclamation announced their assumption of the Administration of Holstein and Lauenburg, without prejudice to the only temporarily suspended rights of the Sovereign, and said that the Commissioners reckoned upon the willing support of the inhabitants in the task of preserving the rights of the country. The proclamation reminded the Holsteiners that the succession question had only been reserved, not passed over in the Federal resolution, and urged them to banish mistrust, and meet the Commissioners with the same confidence which they as Germans brought to them, to support them with the fitting means to maintain tranquillity, order, right, and law, and to keep ill-timed and uncalled-for interference at a distance from the frontiers. A meeting of the citizens was afterwards held, at which several thousand people, including the principal inhabitants, were present, and Prince Frederick was proclaimed, amid the greatest enthusiasm, legitimate ruler of the country. The municipal council and the magistrates also pronounced for Prince Frederick. The military band of the Saxon troops performed the national air of Schleswig-Holstein. Advices from Kiel state that Prince Frederick will also be proclaimed Duke in that town as soon as the Federal troops enter it. The Holstein estates on Tuesday held a meeting at Hamburg and resolved by a large majority that the Prince of Augustenburg should be recognised as Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, and that the Federal Diet should be requested to assist the Prince in obtaining his rights. A great popular assembly took place at Elmshorn on Wednesday. Deputations from all parts of the country attended. It is believed that the assembly proclaimed Prince Frederick as Duke of Schleswig-Holstein. Herr von Plesser has tendered his resignation as member of the Holstein Assembly, and a similar step has been taken by eight other members. Nearly half the nobility of Holstein have promised to recognise the Prince of Augustenburg, and signed a document to that effect; and all the Holstein sub-officers of the garrison have voluntarily expressed their desire to take part in the campaign. The electoral law comprised in the Constitution of the 18th ult. has been promulgated in Schleswig, under the Royal sanction of the 4th inst. The following proclamation of the King of Denmark to the soldiers at present on furlough in Holstein has been published:—

"Circumstances have induced us to call under arms a larger portion of our army. We have not wished to withdraw you from your homes, nor to deprive the country of your strength; but attempts being now made from different quarters to mislead you respecting our rights, and induce you to commit a breach of faith, we consider it our duty as Sovereign to summon you to our standard. We are firmly confident that we inherit with the Crown fidelity to the sovereign and military ruler We are warranted in this by the honourable feeling which your comrades already assembled beneath our standard have so gloriously displayed. We will give you leaders whom you know and esteem, to whom you know your wellbeing is dear, and that they will always lead you in the path of honour and duty. Soldiers, hasten to your standard, ready for the struggle for the wellbeing, honour, and freedom of the Monarchy possibly impending. You have to present yourselves at the office of the Military Commander of our town of Flensberg, to which place carriage by rail will be gratuitously afforded, and where your travelling expenses will be refunded."

HAMBURG.—It is positively stated that Hanoverian troops will relieve the Austrians quartered in this city, and that the whole of the Austrians will follow the Saxons into Holstein. The police on Monday prohibited the military exercises carried on in the Turnhalle, which they have closed and occupied. The sergeant-major superintending the list of a company of Volunteers was arrested. The Hamburg Senate has voted 1,000,000 marks banco for the defences of the city, and intends to propose to the civic representatives a vote in favour of the Augustenburg succession in Holstein.

SAXE-COBURG GOTHA.—It is asserted on good authority that in consequence of numerous entreaties, and in order to become the mediator between the national movement, the German Governments, and the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha has declared his readiness to become a member of the Central Committee for Schleswig-Holstein, which is now forming. It s officially stated that the Coburg Ministry informed the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Duke of Augustenburg on the 17th inst. that the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha would willingly permit the reorganisation of the Schleswig-Holstein contingent on his territory.

BAVARIA.—The King of Bavaria has received the Prince of Augustenburg with all the honours due to a Sovereign Prince.

SAXONY.—The resolution for the recognition of Prince Frederick of Augustenburg and condemning the action of the Federal Diet in regard to the Duchies, after an animated debate, was unanimously adopted by the Saxon Chamber on Tuesday. It is announced that the Civil Commissioners for Holstein sent by Saxony left for that duchy on Sunday. Baron von Beust, Minister for Foreign Affairs, has left for Munich on a mission.

FRANKFORT.—The Senate of Frankfort has voted a subsidy of 100,000 thalers to the Duke of Augustenburg. A meeting of 900 members of the different German representative bodies was held on Tuesday, and was numerously attended by the public. The following resolutions were carried almost unanimously:—

"That united endeavours should be made to secure the recognition of the rights of Prince Frederick of Augustenburg. That the Federal Diet be induced to recognise Prince Frederick as Duke of Schleswig-Holstein. That the validity of his rights be enforced, and the separation of the Duchies from Denmark carried out; and, finally, that the independence and inseparable union of the Duchies be established."

A committee of 36 members was appointed to carry out these resolutions. This committee has since issued a lengthy appeal to the German nation. The appeal points out that the ultimate decision of the dispute would not be brought about in Frankfort, but in the various States. The people should operate upon the Governments by every legal means, and press for the convocation of all the Diets not at present sitting. Each man should act as if all depended upon his single exertions, The people are exhorted to abundant, substantial self-taxation in town and country, and are informed of the centralisation of existing auxiliary committees in the one now instituted. This committee will be in instant communication with the Schleswig-Holstein Government, but will reserve to itself the right of disposition over pecuniary aid. The appeal concludes with a request that all moneys collected may be immediately forwarded, with lists of volunteers; exhorts the members of "turner" and defence clubs to military exercises, and advises large participation in the loan being raised by Duke Frederick. The delegates from the different German States also had a meeting at Frankfort on Tuesday, when the following motion was finally adopted without debate:—

"This assembly, in consideration of the Schleswig-Holstein question, considers it its duty to express itself solemnly upon the well-founded, and under present circumstances incontestable, right of the German nation to a general popular representation by means of a Parliament, and upon the necessity for the most speedy establishment of the same."

PRUSSIA.—In the sitting of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies on Friday, in reply to the attacks of Herr von Virchow, Count von Bismark said:—

"The Augustenburg family had even lately thanked him for his intervention in bringing about their arrangement with Denmark in 1852. The King was sufficiently informed upon that point, and all statements to the contrary could only be regarded as fiction. The object of the loan was clear. The Government had wished neither to sacrifice German soil nor German right, but the House could not dictate to the Government a programme suitable to all eventualities We are unable, he said, to express ourselves more fully with regard to the policy Prussia intends to pursue. It appertains to the Executive to adopt the right course. If we desire war we can have it any day. Should the latest private intelligence from Copenhagen be confirmed, the Government will once more at the Diet that the preparations for war shall be carried on upon a more extensive scale, and we shall in that case ask for a larger credit. In refusing the means for the fulfilment of Prussia's Federal duties and for the defence of the sea-coast the House undertakes a heavy responsibility."

The Chamber agreed to the Address by 207 to 107 votes. In the sitting of the Upper House on Monday, the draught of the Address proposed by Count von Arnim-Boytzenburg came under discussion. Dr. Tellkampf, and Herren von Grüner and Von Kampfhausen, and their adherents, moved an amendment to the effect that Prussia should withdraw from the London Treaty. This amendment did not, however, meet with sufficient support, and after an animated debate the Address was almost unanimously adopted. General Fleury arrived in Berlin on Wednesday from Copenhagen, and it is said that he will remain there several days before he returns to Paris. M. Bentkowski, member of the Prussian Chamber of Deputies, has been sentenced to a year's, instead of a month's, imprisonment by the Court of Appeal for having participated in the Polish insurrection.

AUSTRIA.—Referring to the reports in circulation of the interruption of diplomatic relations between Austria and Prussia and Denmark, the General Correspondenz of Wednesday says the Ministers of those countries are at present staying in Vienna, Berlin, and Copenhagen merely as private persons, but that in the present state of things there is no cause for their formal recall.

HUNGARY.—An insurrectionary manifesto is said to have been affixed in the principal towns of Hungary. The manifesto announces the establishment of a general committee to obtain the independence of Hungary, and assuming the direction of the affairs of the country under the orders of Kossuth. The Austrian Government is taking great precautions, but agitation is general throughout Hungary.

RUSSIA.—Private letters from St. Petersburg, dated the 18th, state that Prince Gortschakoff has received a despatch from M. Drouyn de Lhuys proposing a conference of Ministers preliminary to the meeting of the Congress.

POLAND.—General Mouravieff has received a present of 100,000 roubles from the Czar. The property of the Poles still residing abroad has been confiscated by order of General Mouravieff. In the engagement which took place on the 17th inst. near Dalesyce, in the government of Radom, and in which General Czengery led 11 companies of infantry and four squadrons of cavalry, with eight cannon, against the insurgents, the latter took one company of the Simbirski Regiment prisoners, and captured seven waggons loaded with ammunition. The insurgent leader Chmielinski was wounded and taken prisoner by the Russians on the 17th inst. at Wiers-bows. Rembailo has replaced him in the command of the insurgent corps. A strong band of insurgents has lately appeared between Pinsk and Minsk, in Lithuania.

ITALY.—In the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday a motion was adopted by a majority of 159 to 51 to the effect that the law upon the suppression of brigandage should be postponed till the end of February, 1864. A Royal decree to this effect was published on Wednesday. The Chamber of Deputies has been prorogued until the 4th January next. The Senate on Wednesday approved the Budget of public revenue for 1864. At the previous sitting it decided that incomes not derived from landed property should be subject to the same rate of taxation as that upon the rentes of public stock. The Government has determined to refuse to execute the necessary exequatur to the Bishops appointed by the Pope to sees in Umbria and the Romagna. The Congregation of the Index has condemned all the works of Georges Sand, and different works of various French, German, and Italian authors.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—Bishop Colenso's trial commenced at the Cape on the 17th ult. in St. George's Cathedral, before the Metropolitan Bishop of Cape Town and two suffragans, the Bishop of Graham's Town, and the Bishop of the Orange Free State. The accusing clergy, the Dean of Cape Town and the Archdeacons of Graham's Town and George Town, were present to support the charges they had preferred. Dr. Bleek, Curator of the Grey Library, attended on behalf of Bishop Colenso, and read a letter from the Bishop denying the jurisdiction of the Court, and handed in a formal protest against the proceedings. The Dean of Cape Town supported the charges in an eloquent and forcible speech, characterised by deep research and great ability. The trial was expected to extend over several days. The question at issue would finally pass into the hands of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. A civil action was pending against the Dutch Reformed Church for suspending from the ministry the Rev. Mr. Kotze, on a charge of heresy. The Federal steamship Vanderbilt returned to Cape Town from the Mauritius, and remained in Table Bay until October 27. She then proceeded to Angra Pequina, the Confederate rendezvous, and carried away a quantity of coals stored on Penguin Island, which was annexed to Cape Colony two years since. The Vanderbilt also seized the British bark Saxon, of Cape Town (in British waters, it is said), that vessel being supposed to have been laden with part of the cargo of the Federal bark Conrad, captured by the Alabama and converted by Captain Semmes into a tender to the Alabama, and renamed the Tuscaloosa. The Vanderbilt then put a prize crew on board the Saxon, and sent her to New York for condemnation. The crew of the Saxon, with the exception of the mate, said to have been shot by a Federal officer, were transferred to a coasting vessel and forwarded to Table Bay.

INDIA.—By the Bombay mail we have advices from that Presidency to November 29. The papers appear in mourning on account of the death of Lord Elgin, and the regret at his loss is universal throughout the peninsula. His lordship was perfectly collected, and himself ordered telegrams to be despatched to England, as well as to the several local governments, and gave all necessary orders respecting the return of his family to Europe. After taking leave of his family, he made his will, and desired to be buried at Dhurrumsalla. The Countess of Elgin, after his death, proceeded to Calcutta, where arrangements were made for her departure to England. Sir William Denison, Governor of Madras, being the next senior Indian governor, left Madras on the 26th November for Calcutta, to assume the office of Governor General until the appointment or arrival of asuccessor. The war on the Punjaub frontier has assumed serious proportions. There has been more fighting, and we have sustained heavy losses. Severe encounters took place on the 30th of October, 6th, 11th, 13th, and 19th of November, and another as reported by telegram from Lahore, under date 24th November. We lost in these engagements 13 officers killed and 12 wounded; and nearly 500 men in killed and wounded.. Among the killed, not mentioned in the previous despatches, were Major Harding, 2d Sikh Infantry; Lieutenant Murray, 71st Foot; Lieutenant Dougal, 71st Foot; Captain J. P. Davidson, Captain Smith, 71st Foot; Lieutenant Jones, 71st; H. H. Chapman, 101st; W. F. Mosley, 14th Native Infantry. The Bunneyers have replied to the proposals of Colonel Taylor, the Commissioner of Peshawur, that "we must leave their country or they'll make us." Matters looked so serious that Sir Hugh Rose, at latest dates, was on his way to the seat of war, and was expected to assume the command of the expedition. The Lahore Camp of Exercise had also been broken up, and the regiments and batteries which were to have formed it are proceeding by double marches to the North-West Frontier.

JAPAN.—Advices received at New York from Kanagawa, to the 1st of November, state that great excitement prevailed there. Another European had been murdered. An armed force from the fleet was guarding the city permanently.

UNITED STATES.—Congress met on the 7th inst. The Democrats were divided upon the choice of a candidate for Speaker, and Mr. Calfax, a Republican, was ultimately elected. The Republican candidate for the clerkship, Mr. Macpherson, was also elected. President Lincoln's Message was sent to Congress on the 9th. The following is a summary of the more important passages:—

"The Federal Government is in peace and friendship with all foreign Powers; the crisis which threatened to divide the friends of the Union is past; and the rebellion is pressed within its narrowest limits. The British Government, as was expected, has exercised its authority to prevent the departure of new hostile expeditions from British ports. The French Emperor, by similar proceedings, promptly vindicated the neutrality which he proclaimed at the beginning of the contest. Blockade questions have been discussed and accommodated in a spirit of frankness, justice, and national good-will. Our prize courts, by the impartiality of their adjudication, have commanded the respect and confidence of maritime Powers. An important question, involving the maritime jurisdiction of Spain in the waters surrounding Cuba, has been debated without reaching agreement, and it is proposed to refer the question to the arbitration of a friendly Power. The rights of aliens in America are partially defined by treaties with some Governments. In no instance, however, is it stipulated that in the event of civil war foreigners residing within the lines of the insurgents are to be exempted from the rule which classes them as belligerents, in whose behalf their Government cannot expect any privileges or immunities distinct from that character. Such claims, however, have been put forward in behalf of foreigners residing here the greater part of their lives. The Message states that the receipts during the year from all sources, including loans and the balance in the Treasury at the commencement of the year, were 900,000,000 dollars. The disbursements during the year were 895,000,000 dollars. The receipt from the Customs were 69,000,000 dollars, and from the internal revenue 37,000,000 dollars. The amount received from loans was 776,000,000 dollars, the disbursements in the War Department amounted to 590,000,000 dollars, and for the Navy Department to 63,000,000 dollars. Over 1000 vessels have been captured since the blockade was instituted. The naval force consists of 588 vessels, 75 of which are ironclads. 100,000 freed slaves are in the Federal service, half of them bearing arms. The President declares that while he remains in his present position he will not attempt to retract or modify the Emancipation Proclamation, nor return to slavery any person who is freed by that proclamation or by any Acts of Congress. The Message further says:—"In the midst of other cares we must not lose sight of the fact that war power is our main reliance, and that to that power alone we can look for a time to give confidence to the people in contented regions that the insurgent power will not again overrun them. Until that confidence is re-established little can be done anywhere for what is called 'reconstruction.' Hence our chief care must be directed to the army."

The Confederate Congress was opened on the same day, when President Davis's Message was received. It is a much longer document than that of President Lincoln. The following is a summary of its more important passages:—

"He speaks despondingly of the loss of Vicksburg, Port Hudson, and many other points. There has been no improvement in foreign relations since last January's Message. On the contrary, there is a greater divergence in the conduct of European nations, assuming a positively unfriendly character. The partiality of England in favour of the Federals is strongly marked in their decisions regarding the blockade, as well as in their marked difference of conduct on the subject of the purchase of supplies by both belligerents. This difference has been conspicuous since the commencement of the war. Mr. Davis bitterly criticises Earl Russell's policy in regard to the blockade, and referring to his lordship's speech that Englishmen would have been for ever infamous if, for the sake of their interests, they had violated the law of nations and made war with the slaveholding States against the Federal States, he says that Earl Russell would probably have omitted his remark regarding the slaveholding States if he had remembered that those States were when colonies, made slave-holding by the direct exercise of England's power, whose interests in the slave trade were then supposed to require that her colonies should be slave holding. He says that there are only two measures applicable to the present condition of their foreign relations. One is to imitate the wrong under which the Confederate States suffer—namely, to retaliate by declaring a paper blockade of the Federal coasts, and capture all neutral vessels trading to Northern ports. This course he does not recommend, although it would only be following the precedents of France and England in the Berlin and Milan decrees. The other measure is not so objectionable. The Paris declaration provides that a neutral flag covers an enemy's goods, except contraband of war. The South acceded to this declaration by the treaty of August, 1861, but the consideration tendered for that concession has been withheld, and she is, therefore, not bound by the compact. As, however, the South approves the principle of the Paris declaration, she will uphold it, and hope for redress from the returning sense of justice of the great people, who will awake to the consciousness that the war in which the South is engaged ought rather to be a reason for forbearance of an advantage than the occasion for unfriendly conduct. He says that prompt and efficacious remedy for the present condition of the currency is necessary to secure the full performance of the operations of Government. He recommends taxation, and says that the currency must be promptly reduced to prevent the present inflated prices reaching more extravagant rates. He also recommends the abolition of the substitute system, and the modification of the exemption law, so that the army may be largely increased as rapidly as possible. He regrets the suspension of the exchange of prisoners, and that communication with the trans-Mississippi districts is so greatly obstructed. He concludes by saying that the enemy refuse proposals for the only peace possible between them, and the only hope for peace now is in the vigour of their resistance. Whatever obstinacy may be displayed by the enemy in his desperate sacrifices of life, money, and liberty in the hope of enslaving them, the experience of mankind has too conclusively shown the superior endurance of those fighting for home, liberty, and indepence, to permit any doubt of the result."

President Lincoln's Message was accompanied by a proclamation, in which he proffers an amnesty to all the people of the Confederate States, excepting the heads of the Government, the principal military and naval officers, and those who have been concerned in treating coloured persons captured in the Federal army other than as prisoners of war, upon the condition that they will swear to support the Constitution and the Union, all the Acts of Congress, and all proclamations of the President made during the war, until such Acts and proclamations may be declared void by the Supreme Court. He further proclaims that wherever the citizens of any of the Seceded States not less in number than one-tenth of the votes cast in such States in the Presidential election of 1860 shall re-establish a local Government which shall not contain their prescribed oath, the State shall be remitted to the Union. A private telegram states that rumours of peace negotiations were subsequently current at New York. These rumours were considered very doubtful, but they nevertheless influenced the markets. Lengthy reports from the War, Navy, and other Departments were submitted to Congress on the 9th. That of General Halleck, as Commander-in-Chief, extends over 11 columns of very close print. Secretary Chase's financial report is nearly of equal length. Mr. Stanton reviews the military operations of the past year, and regards the situation everywhere as satisfactory, excepting at Charleston. He states that the delay in the exchange of prisoners is owing to the disinclination of the Federal Government to furnish the Confederates with 40,000 fresh troops in return for 13,000 Federal prisoners; that the conscription as enforced in 12 States yielded 50,000 soldiers and 10,000,000 dols., which fund is being applied to recruiting, with a fair prospect of procuring a sufficient number of volunteers to prevent the necessity of another draught. He advises the enlistment of negro troops with the same pay as the white soldiers, and if it should be found necessary for their protection, declares that the strictest retaliation of treatment of prisoners shall be resorted to. He concludes with the hope that his next report may announce the complete overthrow of the rebellion and the restoration of peace. Mr. Welles admits the failure of operations against Charleston, but claims credit for the efficiency of the blockade, which he states to be 3549 miles in length, by the vessels of which 1049 blockade runners of all descriptions have been captured, besides those destroyed. He adds that great numbers of vessels have been destroyed by the navy on the Western rivers. He has been cheered, he says, in the discharge of his arduous duties by the assured conviction that the Federal navy has, under his direction, achieved great and new historical renown. Mr. Chase's report says that success quite beyond his expectations has crowned his efforts, the receipts in the Treasury from the sale of bonds and the internal revenue having been much greater, and the expenses of the Government much less than the estimates. General Foster has officially informed General Halleck of the raising of the siege of Knoxville by General Longstreet. General Sherman's advanced guard of cavalry reached Knoxville on the 3d, and on the night of the 4th General Longstreet withdrew his forces towards Bristol, on the line of the East Tennessee Railway, and at the latest dates was in line of battle at Rutledge. On the 6th General Sherman's main body arrived at Knoxville, when his cavalry, as well as that of General Foster, were sent in pursuit of the Confederates. One account says that the Federals captured much of Longstreet's artillery and baggage, while another reports that Longstreet's rear-guard had repulsed General Sherman, who was pursuing him, with heavy loss, Sherman himself being badly wounded. Both these reports, however, require confirmation. Chattanooga despatches report that the Confederates captured 15 waggons of a Federal forage train near Harrison, in Tennessee, on the 4th. Richmond papers of the 5th state that General Bragg has been relieved of the direction of the Confederate army in Northern Georgia, at his own request, and that General Hardee is temporarily in command. The latest despatches from Chattanooga announce that General Hardee is falling back from Dalton, but do not state in what direction. The reported death of Mr. Breckinridge has been contradicted. The Tribune's Washington correspondent, under date of the 6th, asserts that in the recent actions south of Chattanooga the three corps of Generals Hooper, Sherman, and Palmer were thrice repulsed at Ringold by General Hardee's single corps, which was covering the retreat of the main body of General Bragg's army. This corroborates the Confederate accounts. General Grant was pursued and compelled to abandon the pursuit of General Bragg, south of Ringold. Both armies in Virginia are going into winter quarters. It is reported that Gen. Meade has demanded a court of inquiry into the late campaign. The rumour that he had been superseded by General Pleasanton is contradicted. It had been reported that General Thomas Francis Meagher had been captured by the Confederates during a skirmish on Mine Run, but the report is now contradicted. Confederate telegrams from Charleston state that on the 9th the Federal batteries opened fire on the city, but were silenced by Fort Moultrie and the batteries on James Island after the eighth discharge. During the night the Federals again opened on the city, and threw 20 shells. The Confederate batteries returned the fire heavily. Five buildings were struck, but no person was injured. On the 10th the Confederate shells drove the Federal working parties from Gregg and Wagner. The Federal iron-clad Weehawken had sunk at her moorings off Morris Island during a gale, when 30 of her crew perished, including four engineers. The captain and remainder of the officers were saved. The other vessels rode out the storm in safety. Latest arrivals from New Orleans bring accounts of an engagement between the Federal and Confederate cavalry on Vermilion bayou, in Louisiana, on the 28th, in which the Confederates lost eight men killed, several wounded, and 70 prisoners, together with their arms and horses. Two days previously the same

Federal cavalry surprised a Confederate camp 20 miles from New Theria, and captured 25 prisoners and a number of horses and arms. No loss to the Federals is reported. A report has reached Cairo, Illinois, that the Confederate General Forrest, with upwards of 9000 men, was encamped at Way Fork, 15 miles from Holly Springs, in Mississippi, on the 3d inst. The Governor of Virginia, in his message to the Legislature, takes strong grounds that reunion is utterly impossible, everything showing the necessity for eternal separation. The Confederate Senate has passed a Bill prohibiting the employment of substitutes in the army. President Lincoln, who has been suffering from small pox, is reported convalescent, but is yet unable to leave his chamber. He has issued a proclamation announcing the raising of the siege of Knoxville, and, esteeming it to be of great national consequence, has recommended all loyal people upon receipt of the information to assemble at their places of worship and render homage to the Almighty for His great advancement of the national cause. The merchant steamer Chesapeake has been seized while on the voyage from New York to Portland by 16 Confederates, who were passengers on board; one of the engineers was killed and another and the chief mate wounded in the struggle for the possession of the vessel. After overpowering the captain and crew the Confederates steered to St. John's, New Brunswick, and all but the chief engineer and the captain were landed. The steamer then sailed in an easterly direction. Several Federal steamers have been sent in pursuit.

MEXICO.—Intelligence from Vera Cruz to the 21st ult. announces that the French had occupied Queretaro and Guanaxuato, and were marching on Guadalaxara and Moreha. Juarez had left San Luis de Potosi for Taucamas. His army was scattered, demoralised, and offering no resistance, and his Government was represented to be powerless, while anarchy reigned within his nominal jurisdiction. General Comonfort was killed on the road between San Luis Potosi and Guanaxato, while fighting a band of Mexicans who favoured French occupation. Manzilla was sacked by robbers on the 18th November, and the Custom House destroyed. Colima was surrounded by Conservadores.

SAN DOMINGO.—A steamer has arrived at Cadiz with news from San Domingo to the 20th ult., announcing the defeat of the insurgents at Sabana, Buoy, Antone, Sanchez, Arroyo, Lomaza, and Azua—and stating that a great number of them had asked for pardon.

Metropolis and its Vicinity.

THE CONFEDERATE CRUISERS.—It is said that the Government employés at Sheerness dockyard who volunteered to fit out and equip the Rappahannock as a war ship for the Confederates, have been discharged for violating the neutrality laws of the country, and that the names of those of the crews of the Alabama, Georgia, and Florida, who belonged to the Royal Naval Reserve, have been struck off the list, with the loss of all pay and pensions, and are not to be allowed to re-enter the service.

THE THAMES EMBANKMENT.—At the meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works on Friday the tenders for the second portion of the Thames embankment—namely, that part from Waterloo Bridge to the eastern end of the Inner Temple, were opened. They were 14 in number, viz., Mr. George Furness, 241,500*l.*; Mr. Thomas Pearson, 264,000*l.*; Messrs. Hickersley & Baylis, 257,000*l.*; Messrs. Webster & Co., 240,000*l.*; Messrs. Ritson & Co., 229,000*l.*; Mr. Dockra, 260,000*l.*; Mr. Diggle, 229,400*l.*; Messrs. Rogers, Doon, & Co., 238,500*l.*; Mr. Dettrick, 232,353*l.*; Mr. Tatam, 264,000*l.*; Messrs. M'Cormack & Co., 240,656*l.*; Messrs. Brassey & Co., 238,500*l.*; Messrs. Moxon & Co., 243,195*l.*; and Mr. Lavers, 239,800*l.* The tender of Messrs. Ritson & Co., being the lowest offered, was accepted, subject to the usual conditions.

THE PROPOSED ENCLOSURE OF TOOTING COMMON.—At the last meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works, a deputation of freeholders and gentlemen interested in property round Tooting, headed by Alderman Rose, M.P., and Mr. Doulton, M.P., had an interview with the Board in support of a memorial against the proposed enclosure of the common by the Lord of the manor. The memorial stated that the lordship of the manor of Tooting Graveney had been purchased for the sum of 3650*l.*, which brought in a good return for the money expended, and that shortly after the conveyance had been made an application was made to the Enclosure Commissioners by the purchaser for leave to enclose about 63 acres of the common land, for the purpose of rendering it productive by making it available for building sites. The memorial proceeded to say that when this became known in the neighbourhood a committee was formed for the preservation of the land as an open space, and the new lord of the manor was invited to attend. This invitation he did not accept, and subsequently the committee had offered to refund the whole of the money laid out in the purchase of the lordship, with interest and expenses, but the offer had been refused. The memorialists submitted that if this enclosure were allowed, a precedent would be established which would result in the enclosing of the common lands of Wandsworth, Clapham, Battersea, Streatham, Mitcham, and others in the metropolitan area, which were as much open to enclosure as Tooting Common, and urged the Board not only to take steps to prevent this enclosure from being carried into effect, but to apply to Parliament for powers, if the Board did not possess them, to place the open and unenclosed lands of the metropolis under proper regulations, so that they may be places of recreation legally dedicated to the public, and open for the public service for all time to come. After some discussion, it was unanimously resolved to refer the memorial to a committee of the whole Board, that the powers of the Board may be investigated.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.—The gold medal, books, and scholarship of 25*l.* for two years, in connexion with the Royal Academy, have been awarded as follows:—To Mr. Francis Holl, for the best historical painting; to Mr. Henry Bursill, for the best historical group in sculpture; to Mr. Richard Phené Spiers for the best architectural design. The Turner gold medal, which is offered for competition every two years, and has not been given since 1857, has been awarded to Mr. Frank Walton for the best English landscape. Silver medals and books have likewise been awarded to Mr. Arthur Ackland Hunt for the best painting from the life; to Mr. George Smith, for a copy made in the school of painting; to Mr. Arthur Acland Hunt, for the best drawing from the life; to Mr. Edward Evans, for the next best drawing from the life; to Mr. Richard Phené Spiers, for an architectural drawing; to Mr. John Barclay Grahame, for the best drawing from the antique; to Mr. Augustus E. Mulready, for the next best drawing from the antique; to Mr. Charles B. Barber, for the next best drawing from the antique; to Mr. Samuel B. Long, for the best model from the antique; to Mr. Frederick S. Potter, for the next best model from the antique. A travelling studentship for one year, with an allowance of 100*l.*, was awarded to Mr. Thomas Henry Watson, for the best design in architecture.

THE CITY REMEMBRANCER.—At the last Court of Common Council the report of the committee on the office of City Remembrancer was brought up, recommending that in future the salary of the office should be 1500*l.* a year, and that Mr. Tyrrell, the retiring officer, should have a pension of 700*l.* a year. Each of these propositions gave rise to an animated discussion, and various amendments were moved for reducing both salary and pension. The amendments for the reduction of the salary were all lost, thereby leaving the salary at 1500*l.* a year., but the court rejected altogether the proposal to grant a pension to Mr. Tyrrell, on the ground that he must have saved a considerable sum out of his salary of 2200*l.* a year.

BROTHER IGNATIUS IN LONDON.—On Sunday evening Brother Ignatius preached in favour of his system for the revival of monasticism in England in the church of St. Mary Magdalene, Munster Square. This church owes its origin and endowment to its incumbent, the Rev. E. Stuart, a clergyman noted for his extreme practices, and who has advocated the use of incense in the services of the Church in a pamphlet entitled, "The Lawful Use of Incense in the Church of England." It was announced at the morning service that "Brother Ignatius" would preach in the evening, and the church was consequently crowded to hear him. During the service, which was intoned, Brother Ignatius sat in the chancel seat, appropriated for the use of the priests, wearing his gown of serge, with cowl and sandals, and though as a monk he has of course received the tonsure, yet it was noticed to be much smaller than that of the monks in the Roman Catholic Church. He is small of stature, and apparently under 30. His manners are polished, and his appearance prepossessing, and he has the great gift of a splendid sonorous voice. In many respects in his preaching he may be likened to the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, being very demonstrative in his action, and fervid in his delivery. During the singing of the hymn he ascended the pulpit, and gave as his text a passage from the 22d chapter of Revelations—"The spirit and the bride say come." Before he entered upon his sermon he called on the congregation to kneel and pray with him. After discoursing eloquently on the advent of Christ he alluded to the restoration of monasteries. He contended that they were destroyed in the 16th century not by the wish of the people of England, nor by its parliament, but by the sanction and under the authority of Henry VIII., who had circulated great calumnies and misrepresentations against the monks. He asked his hearers to help him to restore some of that property which had been robbed from God, and concluded by an earnest appeal for help. The brothers, he said, now number 12, and intend to build a house, consisting of a retreat for parish clergy who may desire rest, the brothers undertaking to do their duty while they recruit their strength; a home for decayed old men who have laboured in the service of the Church; and a college for instructing youth in the principles of the Church of England. They require from 30,000*l.* to 40,000*l.*, out of which they have received 10,000*l.*, one lady alone having given 2000*l.* He hoped they would collect the 20,000*l.* that night. A collection was then made for the benefit of the Brotherhood.

ACCIDENT TO THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND.—On Friday evening, as the Duchess of Sutherland was returning from Dr. Cumming's Chapel to Stafford

House, a coal waggoner in Pall Mall accidentally touched the horse in the Duchess's brougham with his whip. The high-spirited animal immediately started off at ungovernable speed past the Palace into Cleveland Square, and bolted by the narrow carriage way up Cleveland Row. The footman was there thrown off the box, and a few yards further on, opposite Sir James Matheson's house, where there is a turn, the horse fell and threw the driver off the box. The horse, however, instantly regained its feet and then bolted by the Earl of Ellesmere's house back to Pall Mall, and pursued its course as far as the War Department, where by the courage of some passers-by it was stopped. The door of the brougham had in the meantime come in contact with a lamp post, and was carried away by the collision. The duchess, who had remained quietly in the carriage, after inquiring after the safety of her servants, walked home to Stafford House. Her Grace was unhurt, but the coachman and footman were severely contused.

GREAT FIRE IN THE CITY.—On Saturday morning a fire broke out in a warehouse in Feathers Court, Milk Street, a very confined passage running through to Wood Street. The premises were occupied by three firms, Messrs. Bunting, Messrs. Henry, and Messrs. Gibson & Co. The flames soon extended to a number of houses in Milk Street and Wood Street, occupied chiefly by firms in various branches of the Manchester trade, including those of Messrs. Grant & Co., Messrs. Morley & Co., Messrs. Charles & Thomas, Messrs. Lindsey, Faithful, & Co., Messrs. Grunnis & Ward, Messrs. Barrow & Taylor, Messrs. Harrison & Co., and other warehousemen. The damage done is said to be greater than that by any fire since the great outbreak at London Bridge. The value of the property destroyed is roughly estimated at 100,000*l.*

INCENDIARY FIRE AT LEWISHAM.—On Wednesday morning a great destruction of farm produce took place at Lewisham, when three wheat ricks, two oat ricks, and a straw rick were consumed by fire. The wind was high, which caused the flames to spread, but the property, it is understood, is fully insured. A man called Dorman, calling himself a labourer from Lincoln, was arrested on suspicion while working the engine, and he has since been identified as a man who worked on the engine at a fire which broke out on an adjoining farm a fortnight previously under similar mysterious circumstances, when farm produce valued at 600*l.* was destroyed. Some lucifers and fragments of straw were found on his person. He was remanded for further inquiry.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.—The Registrar-General's Weekly Return states that the deaths in London in the week that ended Saturday, December 19, were 1291. The average number in the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62, corrected for increase of population, was 1401. The present return is therefore 110 below the average. During the week the births of 994 boys and 933 girls, in all 1927 children, were registered in London. In the 10 corresponding weeks of the years 1853-62 the average number was 1817.

CHATHAM.—The launch of the iron frigate Achilles, 35, 1250 horse-power, was successfully effected on Thursday night at flood tide, two attempts to launch her during the previous tide having failed. The Achilles is the first iron-clad built at a Government dockyard, all the iron vessels hitherto constructed having been built for the Admiralty at private yards.

DERBY.—The High Sheriff has fixed the execution of George Victor Townley to take place at noon on Thursday, the 31st inst. A petition praying that his life may be spared is in course of signature at Manchester, and has already received several thousand signatures, many of them being those of clergymen, merchants, manufacturers, and other influential classes.

FALMOUTH.—Instructions were received last week from the Lunacy Commissioners to prosecute Samuel Porter for the ill-treatment and neglect of his brother Robert. He was accordingly apprehended, and brought before the county magistrates in this town. The magistrates remanded the prisoner, who asked to be allowed to remain at liberty until Monday last, offering to produce sufficient bail. The magistrates, however, said that it appeared to be a serious case, and refused to grant bail. Porter pleaded hard to be allowed to give bail, and said that the newspapers had overstated the circumstances. The Bench still persisted in their decision and he was locked up. Both he and his wife narrowly escaped rough treatment at the hands of an excited mob. On Monday the prisoner was again brought up, when the witnesses examined detailed a horrible story of neglect on the part of the prisoner, extending over a period of about 10 years. The attorney who appeared for the prisoner did not deny the facts, but contented himself with an attempt to prove that no offence in law had been committed. The magistrates however declared that the prisoner's conduct was a statutory offence, as well as one at common law, and they should therefore commit him for trial at the next assizes. The prisoner was admitted to bail, himself in 500*l.* and two sureties in 250*l.* each. A large crowd had collected outside the court, and though they were not so violent as on the previous week, it was found necessary to remove the prisoner under a strong guard of constables. He was followed by the mob, hooting and yelling, till he was conveyed to a place of safety.

HEREFORD.—Robert Wilton Fryer, who was committed to take his trial at the present Hereford sessions, on several charges of embezzlement, was found dead in his bed on Wednesday week.

LYTHAM.—A melancholy boat accident occurred near this town on Tuesday, by which seven young persons lost their lives. The family of Mr. Sugars, a Manchester merchant, consisting of two grown-up sons and three daughters, with two friends, a brother and sister named Wilson, proceeded up the Ribble in a boat to Preston. On their return, and while apparently near home, the boat grounded, and all seven were drowned in an attempt to walk ashore. Two of the bodies have not yet been found.

MALTON.—An unparalleled and rapid succession of incendiary fires has taken place within the last few weeks on the farms of the Yorkshire Wolds. The first took place on the farm of Mr. T. Green, of Rookdale. The stackyard contained nine large "coopings," rectangular-shaped stacks common on the Wolds. Of these two of wheat, one of barley, and one of oats were entirely consumed, the remaining five being saved by the efforts of the Malton firemen, who continued to work up to noon. The loss of corn and straw is estimated at 1200*l.* to 1600*l.* Similar fires subsequently took place at Grimston, Rookdale, Butterwick and Kilham. At the latter place there were two fires, but instead of seconding the efforts of the police, the men and lads belonging to the agricultural population present seemed glad that the conflagration was taking place. The efforts of the police to procure water were only successful when a band of women volunteered to do the work the men refused to assist in. Indeed, it is stated that the men added fuel to the flames, and that the incendiary found running away was covertly allowed to escape. Another fire broke out on Tuesday week on the farm of Mr. Jordan, at Grimston, five miles from this town. Seven large corn stacks and two immense straw stacks were found to be in flames, and before they could be subdued the sheds and granaries, with waggons, carts, the produce of two days' thrashing of wheat, a quantity of bacon, and other produce were destroyed. The property lost is valued at 1500*l.* On the same night preparations for a similar fire were detected at the Wold village of Weaverthorpe, in the stack-yard of Mr. Grantham, at Quickfall, where a train of straw had been laid across a field in the right direction for the wind. Two lads employed on the farm were found near, and it was subsequently ascertained that they had been employed since nightfall in forming the train of straw in order to fire their master's stacks. It is said that a notice was found in the yard of one farm that all the stacks on the Wolds should be burnt. Night watchmen are organising in all directions, in the belief that some conspiracy exists for destroying all the corn on the Wolds.

MANCHESTER.—At a meeting of the General Committee of the Lancashire Relief Fund on Monday, a report signed by the Earl of Derby as chairman, was read, stating that various causes have contributed to reduce the pressure of distress upon the operatives of the cotton districts. There has been an increase in the amount of goods manufactured, about 14,000 operatives have been absorbed in other local employments, and about 3500 have migrated to the West Riding. The committee hope that before the relief afforded by the Public Works Act and the sums at their disposal are exhausted, a steady and permanent augmentation in the supply of cotton may be expected; and in the anticipation of the revival of the trade a considerable number of new mills are already in course of construction; though the prospect of the immediate future is not free from embarrassment. The report having been adopted, Mr. Commissioner Farnall reported that 15,564 persons who were paupers in December, 1862, cannot be traced by the relieving officers; that 54,474 persons have resumed their usual work; that 25,940 are employed in outdoor work; and that 7782 have either migrated or emigrated. Mr. Rawlinson stated that the total amount of applications made under the provisions of the Public Works Act, and already reported upon, was 1,117,605*l.*, and he trusted that with so large an amount of money at the disposal of the district the numbers of outdoor labourers during the winter months would be continually and rapidly increasing. At the subsequent meeting of the Central Executive Committee, it was reported that on the 12th inst. there was an increase of 1697 in the number of persons receiving parochial relief in the 27 unions, as compared with the number relieved in the previous week. The sum of 345*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* had been received during the past week, and the balance in the bank was 229,358*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.* Grants were voted to various places to the amount of 2720*l.*

MELTON MOWBRAY.—At the adjourned inquest on the body of Mrs. Emma Hutchins, of the Horseshoe Inn, Waltham, on Friday, two surgeons stated that they had made a post mortem examination of the body 24 hours after death. They had also forwarded to Professor Taylor, of Guy's Hospital, London, portions of the viscera for analysis. Professor Taylor appeared at the inquest and presented a long report, in which he stated that he had found seven grains of arsenic in the stomach, small intestines, and liver, in the vomited matter and contents of the stomach. In the stomach traces of antimony were detected, mixed with the arsenic, but this was accounted for by the fact that during the illness of deceased a preparation of antimony had been administered to her. Taking all these appearances into consideration, Dr. Taylor was of opinion that the deceased had died from the effects of arsenic. The jury returned a verdict of Wilful Murder against John Hutchins the husband, who was accordingly committed for trial on the coroner's warrant.

WARWICK.—The magnificent estate and Castle of Studley, the property of Sir Francis Goodriche, comprising a noble castellated mansion and nearly 2700 acres of superior land, manorial rights and privileges, with the advowson of the rectory of Moreton Baggott, in this county, were sold at auction last week, for the sum of 145,000*l.*, Mr. Walker, of Birmingham, being the purchaser. The valuable contents of the Castle, comprising suites of carved oak furniture for the library, state, bed, and dressing rooms, a valuable assemblage of old Sèvres porcelain, and the collection of pictures, including several works by Sir Joshua Reynolds and Gainsborough, have since been sold at the Castle. The sale extended over seven days, and realised upwards of 10,000*l.*

YORK.—It has been discovered that the farmers of the Yorkshire moors, in the vicinity of Birch, Bickley, and Crosscliff, have, since the last shearing, been made the victims of an extensive system of sheep-stealing. The moors being open for miles, it is no easy matter to count up flocks regularly, but a manifest decrease in numbers has led to close investigation, which has shown that upwards of a hundred sheep are missing, the property of three farmers only. There does not seem to be any suspicion of the mode in which the missing sheep have been carried off.

NEW PEERAGE.—Letters patent have passed the Great Seal granting to the Right Hon. Sir William Meredyth Somerville, M.P. for Canterbury, the title of Baron Athlumney, of Somerville and Dollardstown, county Meath, in the peerage of Ireland. His lordship will still retain his seat in the House of Commons, as an Irish peer can sit for an English, though he cannot do so for an Irish constituency.

Railways.

COLLISION ON THE SCOTTISH CENTRAL.—On Friday night the goods and ballast trains came into collision near the Dunning station of the Scottish Central. Two of the surface men were killed. The line being blocked up by the accident, the passengers from Perth to the south had to leave the carriages, and walk along the line beyond the scene of the accident, and enter carriages which had been sent from Stirling.

ACCIDENT ON THE NORTH EASTERN.—On Tuesday week as the Parliamentary train from York was on its way to Hull and Leeds, six or eight carriages broke loose from the first portion of the train and ran down an embankment 15 feet high. About 50 men and women were in the carriages at the time, but no lives were lost, and only one was seriously injured.

ACCIDENTS ON THE GREAT NORTHERN.—On Thursday week as a coal train was travelling on the up line, near Corby, the drawing up bar between two of the trucks broke, causing the train to part. The pin buried itself in a slanting position in a sleeper, and the last part of the train, running upon it, was thrown off on the down line. The traffic had scarcely been resumed the following morning when a more serious accident occurred. The traffic was being worked on a single line between Bytham and Corby. Six trains had successfully passed, and a cattle train was waiting its turn, when a coal train, running past all the signals, dashed into it. The shock was so severe that many of the cattle were killed and others jerked out of the trucks. One of the drovers, and the driver of the coal train were injured. The damage to the trucks was very great, and the two accidents threw the traffic of the line into such confusion that the trains from the North had to be passed round by way of Sleaford and Boston.

Law.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—Lindsay, M.P., and Others v. Leathley.—This was the second trial of an action before the Lord Chief Justice and a Special Jury, on a marine time policy of insurance for a total loss. The defendant, with about 100 other underwriters, had underwritten the policy to the extent of 150*l.* only, but it had been arranged between the other part owners with the present plaintiffs and the other underwriters that this action should be tried, and its result be binding on all parties. The defendant had paid into court ten guineas, being at the rate of seven per cent. on the amount underwritten by him, and denied his liability to any further sum, on the ground that it was not a total loss. The first trial, which lasted five days, resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, on which a rule was obtained on behalf of the defendant for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. The facts were briefly as follows. The Harbinger, an iron ship of 800 tons burden, originally built as a war-steamer in 1847-8, passed into the hands of Messrs. Lindsay and the other plaintiffs in 1857. At that time she was in perfect order, and ought to have lasted 20 or 30 years. She was employed in the China trade, and appears to have been perfectly sound in her hull, though very defective in her engines and woodwork, when she sailed from Calcutta on her last voyage in March, 1859, being then insured for 15,000*l.* for a year, to expire on January 31, 1860. During this homeward voyage she sprang a leak, owing to a rivet falling out below

he massive "sole-plate" supporting the machinery. This hole was effectually plugged and secured, but she ran into Algoa Bay to refit, and still meeting with rough weather on resuming her course, twice put back there for shelter. The second time was in July, 1859, when a careful examination of the hull was made, and, although no mischief except the loss of a few boltheads seems to have been discovered, the captain returned to England on his own responsibility, and consulted Mr. Lindsay. The latter made a claim on the underwriters, which was compromised for 4000*l.*, with which sum the captain went back to repair damages, and bring the ship home. In the meantime, viz., in October, 1859, heavy gales prevailed in Algoa Bay, but the chief officer, who joined the Harbinger in the captain's absence, proved that no apparent injury resulted from them. On the 27th December, after the captain's return, a fresh leak broke out, and another hole was found in one of her bottom plates under the pumps. Another survey took place, but in order to its being complete the cargo required to be transhipped. Tenders were advertised for heaving her down, but only one was sent in, amounting to 3000*l.* There was great danger in heaving down such a vessel in Algoa Bay, and the nearest port where she might have been repaired was Simon's Bay. On the 16th January there was another internal survey of the vessel, and the surveyors reported that from the bad state of the internal rivets and plates it would be necessary to examine the bottom carefully. The tender for heaving down the vessel was not accepted, and on the 3rd February the captain made a formal act of abandonment of the ship, and proceeded to sell the hull, fixtures, and engines, the whole realising not more than 2400*l.* The policy had expired on the 1st February, but the plaintiffs contended that the injury arose long before that, and was to be attributed to the perils of the sea, the abandonment being a necessary consequence. The plaintiff's case was that the hole in the bottom was caused by the straining of the vessel in the October gales, or from being struck by pieces of floating wreck. The defence was that such an injury could not have arisen as was supposed by the plaintiffs, but was more likely to have happened by the action of the sounding-rod striking on the plate, aided by the corroding effect of rust, and the action of the bilge water, coal dust, and drippings from the brasses. The weakening of the rivets, it was also said, was caused by the wear and tear of the vessel, and not by the straining of the ship. It was also contended that the injury might have been repaired by plugging, or if that were impossible, that some attempt might have been made to get at her bottom or to take her with the assistance of a tug to Simon's Bay to be repaired. The trial lasted eight days. The Lord Chief Justice left four main questions to the Jury, who found, 1. That the ship was unseaworthy by reason of the hole, and of damage to the plates and rivets, and that this unseaworthiness was partially due to "sea-damage," covered by the insurance; 2, that the hole might have been stopped in Algoa Bay, but that it was doubtful whether the rivets could have been refastened there, and that there was such a presumption of unseaworthiness in other respects that it was proper to heave her down; 3. that the captain rightly declined to make the experiment in Algoa Bay, and refused a tender, otherwise exorbitant, for the operation; but at the same time that diving apparatus might and should have been employed to examine the suspected parts of the bottom; 4. that the ship might have been conveyed safely to Simon's Bay, and might have been repaired there, but that the consent of the owners and underwriters ought to have been first obtained. The inference which they drew from these premisses was that the abandonment and sale were unjustifiable, and would not have been resorted to by a prudent uninsured owner. Still, the claim for a partial loss had been allowed, and the jury were sent back to assess the fair amount to be awarded, when the parties compounded between themselves for 4500*l.*, each party paying his own costs.

NORTHERN CIRCUIT: YORK. — The Leeds Murder. — Patrick Hirley was indicted for the murder of Anthony Golding, at Leeds, on the 23d of August. It appeared that there had been a midnight disturbance, ending in a street fight, in which a relative of the prisoner, of the same name as himself, was, with a man named Anthony Fee, engaged. After the fight was over, deceased, who was standing close by, seeing the prisoner much excited, observed to him, "Now, if I were you, Patsy, I would go home like a good man, and not fight." This seems to have irritated the prisoner, who thereupon struck and stabbed deceased with a knife he had in his hand. The blow caught, as it seemed, the femoral artery of the left thigh; and the blood gushing out, deceased, after moving a few feet from the place, fell exhausted, and, almost before assistance could be obtained, died from the effects of the stab and his loss of blood combined. When the deceased felt himself struck, he said to the prisoner, "If I had been you, Pat, I would not have done that," on which, and seeing the blood, the prisoner immediately ran off, flourishing his knife and saying, "I've already done for one man, and I'll do for Anthony Fee, too, before I sleep." It did not appear that deceased had, in any way, interfered before the fatal attack made upon him by the prisoner. The prisoner left Leeds that night, and was apprehended the next day at Ottley, some eight or 10 miles distant. The defence was that the case only amounted to manslaughter, and that death was the unfortunate result of a sudden and unpremeditated quarrel, and the excitement consequent upon such quarrel. The Judge carefully summed up the evidence, pointing out the legal distinction between the offence of murder and that of manslaughter; and the Jury, after leaving the box and being absent for half-an-hour, returned with a verdict of Guilty of murder; the foreman, however, appending to that verdict the observation that the jury would not have found the prisoner guilty of murder had it not been necessary to "save their oath" by so doing; but at the same time it had been agreed among them unanimously to join with their finding so strong a recommendation to mercy as to make it almost certain that the dreadful punishment applicable to such verdict would not, in this case, be carried out. Mr. Justice Mellor said that he regretted the jury had allowed such a consideration to weigh with them in such deliberation on the matter, but assured them that the expression of their wish should be forwarded to the proper quarter. He then proceeded to pass sentence of Death in the usual form. LIVERPOOL.—The Wife Murder at Pendleton.—Luke Charles, a policeman at Bury, was charged with the wilful murder of his wife by drowning. The case was of a very peculiar character. The prisoner had been in the Irish constabulary, but having obtained a situation in the Bury force, he came to England, leaving his wife behind. Before leaving Ireland he had been paying his addresses to a girl called Ellen Ford, as a single man, and after remaining some time at Bury he twice went over to Ireland to get married to her, but the priest would not perform the ceremony without a certificate from Bury that the prisoner was not already married. Meanwhile his wife unexpectedly arrived at Bury and seemed disposed to remain there, when the girl Ford also came over from Ireland, and was placed in lodgings by the prisoner. In the beginning of this year the prisoner proposed to his wife that they should pay a visit to her friends in Pendleton. She assented, and they left Bury for the purpose, but she was never seen again alive, and he invariably stated, on being asked where she was, that she was in Ireland. A woman's body was, however, found in the canal at Pendleton in February last, and after an inquest had been held, at which an open verdict was returned as the body was not identified, it was interred. The sister of the deceased being dissatisfied with the prisoner's statements, and finding no trace of deceased, then applied to the police, the result being that the body was exhumed in September last, when it was found to be the body of the prisoner's late wife. The clothes were also identified by the sister and other persons who had been intimate with deceased. A mass of circumstantial evidence was adduced, with the view of showing that the prisoner's desire to marry the girl Ford supplied a motive for his getting rid of his wife; and further that the deceased's clothes had been detached from her body before it was thrown into the canal, for the evident reason that the crinoline would have had a tendency to prevent its sinking. The defence was that the wife committed suicide, and that if she was murdered, there was no proof that the murder was committed by the prisoner. Mr. Justice Willes, in summing up, said the fact that the clothes were found detached from the body was most important, and it was for the jury to decide whether they were more likely to have been removed by a person contemplating suicide or a person contemplating murder. The jury having retired to consider their verdict, returned in about half an hour with a verdict of Guilty. The judge then assumed the black cap and passed sentence of Death on the prisoner.

NORFOLK CIRCUIT, CAMBRIDGE.—The Murder at Whittlesey.—John Green, a labourer, 25 years of age, was yesterday charged with the murder of Elizabeth Brown, at Whittlesey, on the 12th March; and William George Smedley, maltster, was charged with feloniously harbouring and maintaining him after the fact. The case excited great interest, and the court all day was very full. The trial should have taken place at the summer assizes, but at the last moment, the prisoner Smedley, who before the magistrates and coroner had been examined as a witness for the prosecution, was given into custody, and indicted jointly with the other prisoner Green. Counsel who had been instructed to defend both prisoners, feeling embarrassed by this sudden step on the part of the prosecution, applied to the late Mr. Justice Wightman for the postponement of the trial, and after some discussion and consultation with the Lord Chief Baron, the application was granted. Both prisoners were therefore arraigned on the charge, but as the case proceeded, Baron Martin observed that there was nothing in the evidence to implicate Smedley, and ordered him to be discharged. The trial of Green was then proceeded with, and it appeared that the deceased woman, who was a person of light character, was found in a malt house in a half burned state, but with marks of violence which did not arise from burning. The evidence against Green, who was a married man, and worked in the malt house, was mostly of a circumstantial character, but it was sufficient to prove that he had been seen talking with the woman outside a public house where he had been dancing; that he was afterwards seen to go towards the malt house with the woman after the place had been shut up, and that at an early hour the following morning a man was seen running from the malt house with his braces down, whom two or three men believed to be the prisoner. It was also proved that he did not sleep in his own house that night. The jury, after a quarter of an hour's deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty, and Baron Martin passed sentence of Death in the usual form, holding out no hope of mercy.

HOME CIRCUIT: MAIDSTONE.—The Gillingham Murder.—James Palmer, a labourer, 22 years of age, was indicted for the murder of Margaret Jones, at Gillingham, on the 8th November. The deceased woman, who was 23 years of age, was the wife of a corporal in the Royal Marines, who had since sailed for Japan. She had been living however with the prisoner, who was a dockyard labourer. They appear to have lived quietly together till Sunday, the 8th ult., when the deceased woman went to a funeral, and instead of returning home at the time expected, went about drinking at various public houses, and when the prisoner met her again she was the worse for liquor. She then refused to live with him any longer, upon which he struck her repeatedly, but she finally went home with him, and died the next day from the effects of the blows. He was found guilty of Manslaughter, but was recommended to mercy. Baron Pigott sentenced him to 3 months' imprisonment with hard labour. KINGSTON.—The Guildford Murder.—Joseph Mahaig, 28, a sergeant in the 3d Buffs, a smart, soldier-like looking young man, was charged upon an indictment, and also by the coroner's inquisition, with the wilful murder of Elizabeth Waterer. It will be remembered that the young woman was found dead in a public house, where she had been living with the prisoner, who had attempted to commit suicide. The most important evidence in the case were the letters written by the parties, from which little doubt was left that they had agreed to destroy themselves together. It appeared, however, that the prisoner remained in the room with the corpse of the girl for at least 24 hours after her death; he then cut his throat with a table knife, and was fast dying when the door was burst open and means were taken for his recovery. The jury returned a verdict of Guilty as accessory before the fact, but recommended him to mercy. Baron Pigott passed sentence of Death, holding out no hope of mercy.

THE LATE FIGHT.—Informations having been laid before the Sussex magistrates, against the principals, seconds, and others who took part in the recent prize fight at Wadhurst, Thomas King, John Carmel Heenan, Thomas Sayers, James Mace, John Calvin Noon, alias Jerry Noon, John Tyler, alias Bos Tyler, Robert Travers, John Macdonald, William Richardson, and William Preston appeared on Tuesday before the magistrates sitting in Petty Sessions at the Justice-room at Marks Cross, in obedience to the summonses which had been served upon them for a breach of the peace. The principal witnesses were Mr. G. C. Courthope, a county magistrate, who was also the owner of the land; Mr. Ellis, the local Excise officer; Mr. Thompson, the deputy chief constable, and two other officers of the county constabulary. Mr. Courthope stated that he made an attempt to stop the proceedings, but his interference, which was taken with the utmost good humour, was of course perfectly abortive. They proposed that he should act as referee, and actually kept him a prisoner in the ring, where he was obliged to witness the fight in spite of himself. The constables could not get nearer than the outer ring, and when they attempted to go near the inner ring they were politely handed back. King, Sayers, and Heenan, stated that they did not intend to fight again, and Mr. Beard, a solicitor, who appeared for them, urged that under these circumstances it was unnecessary to send them for trial. The magistrates after some consultation decided that the defendants must each enter into their own sureties of 50*l.*, and find bail to the extent of 50*l.*, to appear at the next Quarter Sessions to answer any indictment for misdemeanour that may be preferred against them. The required bail was then entered into, and the defendants were liberated. King and Heenan were objects of much interest in the Court, and there was little trace in the countenances of either to show the punishment they had received from each other.

Obituary.

THE EARL OF ELGIN, the late Viceroy of India, the report of whose death has been confirmed by the Bombay mail which has arrived this week, traced his descent to the Bruce whose name he bore, and was the son of the Earl who brought the Elgin marbles to England. He was born in London in 1811, and was educated at Eton and Christ Church, where he was the contemporary of Sir George Lewis, Lord Dalhousie, Lord Canning, and Mr. Gladstone. He was first-class in classics in 1832, and subsequently became a Fellow of Merton College, being then known in his father's lifetime as Lord Bruce. In 1841 he married, and entered Parliament as member for Southampton, and as a supporter of Sir Robert Peel. In the same year he succeeded to the Earldom, which being a Scotch peerage did not interfere with his seat in the Lower House. In 1842, the Earl of Derby, then Lord Stanley and Secretary for the Colonies, first introduced him to public life by appointing him Governor-General of Jamaica, where he acquitted himself so well that when in 1846 the Whigs had to seek out the ablest man they could find to be Governor-General of Canada, they selected Lord Elgin, notwithstanding his Tory connections. In this new office he carried out in Canada the conciliatory policy of his father-in-law, Lord Durham, and by preserving a neutrality between parties, by developing the resources of the country, agricultural and commercial, and by seeking in every possible way to study the wishes of the colonists, he did more in a viceroyalty of eight years than any man to quell discontent and to knit the Canadian provinces closely to the mother country. For this success he was honoured in 1849 with a British peerage. The next office which he was called upon to fill was that of Ambassador to China. It was on his way thither that he heard of the Indian mutinies; and he at once took upon himself to divert to Calcutta the troops which had been ordered to China in support of his mission. Though by this act his progress in China was delayed, he ultimately succeeded in his aims, saw Canton taken, and negotiated the important treaty of Tien-tsin, which forms the basis of our present relations with the Chinese. In 1859, on the formation of Lord Palmerston's Administration, Lord Elgin became a member of his Cabinet, with the duties of Postmaster-General. Meanwhile the brother of Lord Elgin, Mr. Bruce had been appointed Envoy in China, and in accordance with the treaty ought to have been received in Pekin. Access to the capital, however, was refused to him, save on conditions which were considered derogatory to the British representative, and when we insisted on the rights secured to us by treaty, there ensued the disaster of the Peiho. In the following year therefore Lord Elgin was again despatched to China to sustain the English authority, and he thoroughly fulfilled his mission by entering Pekin in state, and compelling the submission of the Celestial Government. He had scarcely gained this triumph when he was appointed to succeed Lord Canning as Governor-General of India, where like so many of his immediate predecessors, he has succumbed to the severity of his official labours in an oppressive climate. He married, first in 1841, the daughter of Charles Lennox Cumming Bruce, Esq., M.P., and secondly in 1846, the fourth daughter of the 1st Earl of Durham. He is succeeded by his son Victor Alexander, born at Montreal in Canada, in 1849.

MR. THACKERAY, the novelist, was found dead in his bed on Thursday morning from effusion on the brain. He had been suffering for two or three days previously from an internal ailment, to which he had been subject for many years, but no idea of danger was entertained. He was born in the year 1811 at Calcutta, where his father was in the civil service of the East India Company. He was educated at the Charterhouse, and at Cambridge, and afterwards travelled abroad to qualify himself for the profession of an artist. He subsequently abandoned this idea, and settled in London as a writer for the newspapers and magazines. It was not however till 1846, that he made himself famous by the publication of "Vanity Fair," the success of which established his reputation as one of the greatest writers of English fiction. He afterwards published "Pendennis," "Esmond," "The Newcomes," "Barry Lyndon," and other works, and was latterly the Editor of the Cornhill Magazine.

THE REV. JOSIAH FORSHALL, M.A., F.R.S., formerly fellow and tutor of Exeter College, Oxford, and subsequently keeper of MSS. and Secretary of the British Museum, died on Friday at his residence in Woburn Place. He graduated at Oxford in 1821, and three years afterwards was appointed by Archbishop Howley assistant keeper of the MSS. in the British Museum. He subsequently became Secretary to the Museum, and retained that office till 1851, when he was superannuated on account of illness. For 33 years he was also Reader at the Foundling Hospital. He had for many years devoted himself to Biblical Literature, and among other works was the author of the "Catalogue of MSS. in the British Museum," three parts, 1834-40, folio; "Catalogus Codicum MSS. Orientalium qui in Mus. Brit. Asservantur," Part. I.; "Codices Syriacos et Carshunicos Amplectens," folio, 1838; "Description of Greek Papyri in the British Museum," Part I., 1839, 4to.; "The Holy Bible in Earliest English Versions by John Wycliffe and his Followers, with Introduction and Glossary," by Rev. J. Forshall and Sir Frederick Madden, K.H., 1850, 4to; "Remonstrance of 1395 (18th Richard II.) against Romish Corruptions in the Church," 1853, 12mo, and a recently published English edition of the four Gospels, printed in a cheap form for the use of schools and young students. At the time of his death he was occupied in preparing for the press "The Holy Gospels in the Received Text of the Greek, with various readings, exposing the errors of modern editors, and maintaining the general integrity of Scripture, as read in the Church of England."

MR. JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, F.R.S., the eminent surgeon, died at the Mount, Hadley, near Barnet, on the 13th inst., in his 72d year. He acquired his professional knowledge at St. Thomas's Hospital, under his uncle, Mr. Cline, and was admitted a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in December, 1815, having for two years previously acted as demonstrator. In 1818 he joined Sir Astley Cooper, as joint lecturer on anatomy and physiology. In 1820 he succeeded the younger Cline as surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and with Sir Astley Cooper then delivered lectures on surgery and pathology. As an operative surgeon he was unequalled in the skill with which he performed that for lithotomy, having in 1827 operated in 40 cases, and lost only one patient; this success created a great sensation at the time, as being unequalled in any country, and in any other hands. In 1830 he was appointed professor of surgery in King's College, of which institution he was at the time of his death a member of council. In 1831 he wrote a pamphlet, called "Distinction without Separation," addressed to the President of the Royal College of Surgeons, to prove that the distinction between physician and surgeon did not really exist, and that such division was highly injurious where it did. In 1834 he wrote a letter to the Times, suggesting a plan of medical reform, giving the medical student a classical and mathematical education, and proposing a higher and lower grade or distinction: all which suggestions the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons has for some time past adopted. In 1835 he was unanimously elected a member of the Council of the College, and in 1840 he was selected to deliver the Hunterian oration, which he afterwards published under the title of "Vital Dynamics." In 1847 he again became Hunterian orator, and published the lectures under the name of "Mental Dynamics." Neither were considered popular discourses, being in advance of the times, and full of the metaphysical notions entertained by the poet Coleridge, who was his intimate friend. In 1846, on the resignation of Sir Benjamin Brodie, he was elected a member of the Court of Examiners, an appointment he held up to the time of his death. In 1849 he received at the hands of his colleagues the highest appointment they had to confer—viz., the President's gown—an honour again conferred on him in 1858. He also received from her Majesty's Government the appointment of President of the Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom.

Markets.

COVENT GARDEN, Dec. 26.

All kinds of produce in season continue to be abundant. Pine Apples are well supplied, and, considering the time of year, prices for them may be said to be moderate. Hot-house Grapes are now beginning to get scarce. Of foreign Melons there is a good stock. There is also a good supply of Ne Plus Meuris, Glou Morceau, Monsieur le Curé, and Beurré Rance Pears. Good English Apples are getting somewhat scarce. Some good examples of Ribston Pippin and American New Town Pippin may still be obtained. Kent Cobs are good, but in few hands. Oranges are plentiful; the best are realising from 5s. to 10s. per 100. For Potatos the market is still heavy. Christmas Evergreens are abundant. Cut flowers chiefly consist of Orchids, Pelargoniums, Primroses, Mignonette, and Roses.

HOPS.—Borough Market, Wednesday, Dec. 23.

Messrs. Pattenden & Smith report no alteration in the market since Monday last.

METROPOLITAN CATTLE MARKET.

Monday, Dec. 21.

We have a large supply of Beasts, considering the unusual number on sale last Monday. The butchers having for the most part laid in their Christmas stock, trade is very slow to-day, and a clearance cannot be effected, notwithstanding a disposition to take rather lower than our quotations. The number of Sheep is also large for the day, but there is a demand for them, and prices are about the same as of late. Good Calves are scarce, and maintain Thursday's quotations. From Germany and Holland there are 740 Beasts, 1920 Sheep, and 101 Calves; from Scotland, 100 Beasts; from Ireland, 350; from Norfolk and Suffolk, 200; and 840 from the Northern and Midland Counties.

Thursday, Dec. 24.

The supply of all kinds of stock is very small indeed, quite as large, however, as was expected. This may be termed a holiday market. The butchers being busily engaged at home, we have but few purchasers. Prices for all descriptions remain unaltered from Monday last. Our foreign supply consists of 8 Beasts, 300 Sheep, and 3 Calves.

MARK LANE.—Monday, Dec. 21.

The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent to this morning's market was moderate, and could only be cleared at a decline of 1s. per qr. on the prices of this day se'nnight. Foreign was neglected but not pressed, or lower prices must have been accepted. Barley sold very slow at a decline of 1s. per qr. upon malting, and 6d. per qr. on grinding qualities. Beans and white Peas brought last week's quotations, but Grey Peas were fully 2s. cheaper. The Oat trade was very dull, and to effect sales it was necessary to submit to a reduction of 6d. per qr. In Flour there was little business done.

Wednesday, Dec. 23

The arrivals of English Wheat fresh up to our market this morning were very limited, and the show of samples was chiefly composed of Monday's unsold supply, in but middling condition. Very few buyers were in attendance, and the demand for both red and white qualities was in a sluggish state, at about stationary prices. There was a fair average supply of foreign Wheat on offer. Good and fine qualities were in moderate request, at full currencies; otherwise the trade was in a depressed state, and last week's prices were with difficulty supported. The inquiry for floating cargoes of grain off coast was much restricted. In the quotations, however, very little change took place. There was a moderate inquiry for Malting Barley at late currencies. Grinding and distilling sorts were a dull sale, but not cheaper. Malt, the supply of which was good, moved off slowly, at about previous rates. Good sound Oats were scarce and in request, on former terms. Other kinds commanded very little attention. The supply was by no means extensive. In Beans very little was doing, at about stationary prices. The sale for Peas was heavy, at Monday's decline in value. We have to report a dull sale for English Flour on former terms. Sweet American was scarce, and quite as dear as last week.

Fluctuations in the Last Six Weeks' Averages.

Liverpool, December 22.—To-day's market was well attended by both town and distant buyers, and with a more cheerful feeling, and a better consumptive demand for Wheat, the general runs realised full previous prices. Choice winter from scarcity advanced 1d. per cental in the week. Flour unchanged and quiet. Oatmeal slow; Egyptian Beans dull; Indian Corn in better request at previous rates.

BRITISH WOOLS.—London, Dec. 23.

Our market still continues quiet, and is likely to remain so until the interest of money question is nearer settled, and the stocks of wool in the manufacturers' hands exhausted. At present prices are merely nominal, except of skin wool, which sells at the same rates, but is much superior in value each succeeding week, and consequently cheaper.
